BL
2700
T7
V.02.13

Christian tactics of to-day. Are they any better in spirit than the old Inquisition? Are they not as brute[illegible] cruel, and as cowardly? Has Chris[illegible] this, that its young disciples must[illegible]o the name of lady and gentleman[illegible]hts of their neighbors?

I p[illegible]e young people will regret their actio[illegible]roughly understand its nature and [illegible]beying the commands of their minis[illegible]ed themselvs in a very unfortunate[illegible]e world. They hav done that for w[illegible]pecting Christian will condemn them[illegible]redit upon his religion. In the light of publicity and universal comment these young people will be ashamed of their discourtesy and will hereafter be wiser and sadder also. They hav simply disgraced themselvs, disgraced their cause, and hav certainly shown the meanest and most contemptible spirit of persecution. However, Goshen has the salt of the earth—a few good Liberals whom this experience of "Christian charity" will only stimulate to greater activity. Dr. North, C. J. Soutant, and others, among the best citizens of the place, are a noble company of Liberals, and this land of Goshen will yet develop out of its strata of barbarism and, no doubt, become a bright and shining light from its lofty seat of new and better things. I expect to return to Torrington and Winsted, in the vicinity, and giv other lectures, for all about that region there is thought, culture, and progress, and though Connecticut has been the home of "the Blue Laws" it is not altogether stratified into orthodox bigotry; but the many streams are flowing, and the soil is becoming enriched, and the summer's glory will eventually burst forth. I hav lost no heart or hope with this unpleasant experience of Christian behavior, for whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad, and verily this petty persecution shows a great deal of idiotic madness, which portends destruction.

The following letter from Samos Parsons givs good encouragement to the work from the land of gold:

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I see you hav a great work laid out for the coming year. I hope our brother Freethinkers throughout the country will be liberal in their subscriptions in carrying on the work, especially since Colonel Ingersoll has made such a magnanimous offer. You can depend on me to do all that my means will warrant. I send you $20 now, and about next July will send you $20 more. I send you a list of names of such as should subscribe, and you can send them circulars. All honor to your leading men in New York who giv liberally. Sad to lose our good Elizur Wright. May success attend your efforts. I am with you.

Respectfully yours, SAMOS PARSONS.

Wm. Reynolds, of Utah, writes:

I hav been writing all over our territory for ideas as to how best to utilize your visit here. There is a splendid field for effort. I inclose to you a letter received from Idaho.

This is the letter:

DEAR MR. REYNOLDS: I see by the Investigator you hav put a man to work in Utah. I wish we had some one here, for we hav plenty of timber to work on. There are six subscribers to the Investigator, and some to THE TRUTH SEEKER, in this little burg, and all the churches hav failed as yet. I hav now almost completed building a hall which will be free for Liberals to speak in, and for a Liberal Sunday-school, when we get a leader to put it in order. The town has just built a school-house, and, as I gave the ground, I had it fixed so that no preacher could use it for the promulgation of his creed. We want a leader to make a grand success of our cause in this place. Yours truly, JAMES WARDWELL.

Dr. Edson Smith writes from Santa Ana League:

The Liberals of this place are by no means dead yet, though few in numbers, but strong in spirit, and rich in hope that truth will prevail. Please accept our hearty thanks for your efforts to advance the cause of Liberalism throughout our land. When you visit the coast do not fail to come and strengthen us, and set the people to thinking about the vital question of our prosperity. Inclosed please find $2.35 from the League, to be applied in aid of the lecturing fund. More to follow next month. D. EDSON SMITH,

Secretary of Santa Ana Liberal League.

From Texas we hav the following:

DEAR SIR: I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER that you desire to correspond with Liberal friends in regard to your proposed Western tour. I am glad to learn that you will visit our state, and take the liberty to send the names of Liberals in different places. Be sure not to leave us out at Norse, Texas, though we liv in the country. We will be able to "scare up" a few dollars for you. I shall consult friends at once.

Our state being generally a new field, missionary work for Liberalism is necessary in order to inspire people with sufficient moral courage to express their honest convictions, creating discussion, investigation, and public interest in our cause.

I am satisfied that you will find work enough here, and am confident that you will accomplish much for the permanent advancement of Liberalism in our state.

Fraternally yours, T. THEO. COLWICK.

I hope that all Liberal friends will follow the example of these good workers for our cause and do w[illegible] they can in their own neighborhood for the adva[illegible]ment of the movement. Please send to the secretary all the names and addresses of those who will be interested in the coming year's work. I cannot now decide just when I will begin my Western lecture tour, but I desire to be in correspondence with all friends, especially in Texas, Utah, and Californi[illegible]. I wish to make an extended tour and become personally acquainted with Liberals in all sections, for thus the ties of fellowship are strengthened. The more we know of each other the stronger we shall become, for instead of diversity there will be unity. There [illegible]o doubt that the coming year's work will d[illegible] to consolidate the working forces of Liberalism in America than that of any previous period. When this is accomplished the results will be a hundredfold increased in the political and social world.

I want to lecture at every possible place between New York and California, large or small, in a hall or in a private dwelling, and I hope that the Liberals everywhere will endeavor to hav this lecture tour of benefit to themselvs by making arrangements for some kind of a meeting.

On Sunday, December 27th, I had the pleasure of lecturing before the Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia. Good audiences were present, and the addresses on "The Demands of Humanity," and "The American Secular Union," were well received. The Liberals of the city of Brotherly Love hav passed through many changes and struggles. The "brotherly love" is not altogether so manifest as it might be in this orthodox community. In spite of all, however, the society flourishes, and will continue so to do. Its president, Mr. Riley; its secretary, George Longford; Prof. Wm. Seymour, Mr. W. Borrow, Mrs. Emily J. Harker, and others, are too devoted to the cause to allow any difficulties to deter. The League is cordially in sympathy with the state and national mo[illegible]nt Preparations are being made for a grand [illegible]ebration on Jan 31st, Sunday evening, at [illegible]ldress will be delivered by Professor S[illegible]s will no doubt be a very successful [illegible]sor Seymour was also chosen as delegat[illegible] Convention to be held at Pittsburgh [illegible] It is hoped that this state Convention [illegible]upulse to the Liberalism of Pennslyva[illegible]d build up Secular societies. Such Con[illegible] be held in every state, and the local [illegible]rward. It is by this means that the national wo[illegible]can be most successfully advanced, and public intere[illegible] excited. Professor Seymour, the presider[illegible]tate League, is a most indefatigable worker[illegible]ficiently supported, will do valuable work. It [illegible]e a good thing to get him and Harry Hoover, [illegible]tsburgh, into the field for constant effort. This [illegible] do much for the organization of the now too [illegible]ely scattered elements of Secularism. There is need of at least two such workers in every state in the Union, and if they could be maintained in such service, the cause would be advanced as never before. It is only by constant instead of occasional effort that the success of Secular principles can be achieved. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The progress of the Sunday opening movement in this city is seen by the following from the New York Times:

Beyond a formal acknowledgment of the receipt of his communication making known the wishes of fifteen thousand taxpayers who desire that the Park museums shall be open to the public on Sundays, S. P. Putnam has heard nothing from the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, or the American Museum of Natural History.

Referring to the matter yesterday, he said: "In view of the fact that the American Museum of Natural History has asked for an appropriation of $200,000 for the enlargement of its building, the labor organizations of the city are taking action, in the interest of the rights of labor, to protest against the appropriation of any more money for the support of these museums. The greater part of the burden of taxation falls upon the working people, and they should receive part of the benefits that are derived from the appropriations of public funds. As the case now exists they cannot receive any considerable benefit from the museums unless they are opened free of charge on Sundays. The workingmen desire the prosperity of the museums, and that they should be supported by the city, but only on the condition that they be open Sundays. Hundreds of signatures to the petition of the American Secular Union are received d[illegible] A petition has just been received from the pianomak[illegible]th nearly one thousand names. A petition has also been s[illegible]with the name of the Rev. R. Heber Newton, and many [illegible]bers of his congregation. The liberal clergymen, togethe[illegible]ch those of the Catholic and Episcopalian denominatio[illegible]generally, favor the Sunday opening movement, and hav[illegible]ed it from their pulpits. It is only a question of time as [illegible]eceiving hundreds of thousands of names to the petitio[illegible] It is hoped that the directors of the museums will take immediate action, and state whatever difficulties there may be to the opening on Sundays in order that these difficulties may be at once removed. It seems, however, to be the policy of the directors to delay action. There is no reason why the petition should not be immediately presented, and an answer given."

The Times editorially [illegible]ds:

It must be evident to the tr[illegible]ees of the public museums that public opinion will befo[illegible]long insist that those institutions shall be opened on Sundays. The only question remaining seems to be whether the trustees will yield gracefully to the wishes of a great majority of their fellow-citizens, or whether they will wait to be dragooned into consenting to the Sunday opening. The objection that some of the benefactors of the museums would object to the exhibition of their contributions on Sunday can be readily overcome at no great expense by furnishing a separate apartment for such contributions. The statue of the late William E. Dodge is one of the works that would appropriately decorate such a chamber. At present that statue stands out of doors where it can be seen all day, and no precautions hav been taken to shroud it from the public view on Sunday.

Lectures and Meetings.

LIBERALS in Kansas, Missouri, and Arkansas, desirous of lectures during the winter and spring, can get terms and dates of E. C. Walker, by addressing him at Valley Falls, Kansas. He[illegible]t and a great variety of subjects.

[illegible] re-engaged for the month of [illegible]church of Alliance, Ohio. Par[illegible]ctures will address her there.

A Suggestion of Religious Despotism.

On Thursday morning I received a letter from Mr. S. R. Witherill, the leading merchant and one of the most influential and respected citizens of Jobstown:

JOBSTOWN, N. J., Dec. 22, 1885.

C. B. REYNOLDS, ESQ., My Dear Sir: Your lectures hav caused quite an excitement here; certain parties, prompted by sectarian hate, bigotry, and prejudice, hav used their influence with William Griswold, the superintendent of the Rancocas Stock Farm, owned by Pierre Lorillard, and induced him to issue orders to his foreman to hav all the men discharged who took any activ part at the lectures or became members of the Jobstown Liberal League.

Is it not the duty of the officers of the American Secular Union to inform Mr. Lorillard of the facts? If he is in favor of muzzling his men we would like to know it, and hav the union publish him to the world, and the Liberal lecturers call attention to his despicable tyranny and injustice at every place they lecture.

What we wish is to bring this matter before Mr. Pierre Lorillard, as we think if he knew he would be held responsible, he would, if not in favor of it, revoke the order at once. Hoping this may be set right, I remain, yours fraternally,

S. R. WITHERILL,
Secretary of Jobstown Secular Union.

Immediately on receipt of this letter, as chairman of the executiv committee of the American Secular Union, I hastened to the house of Mr. Pierre Lorillard, 389 Fifth avenue, New York. He was not at home, and I learned it was very uncertain when he would be there, as his time was much occupied at Jersey City, Jobstown, and other places. I then at once mailed copies of the following letter, one addressed to his residence in this city, and another to his place of business in Jersey City:

NEW YORK, Dec. 24, 1885.

PIERRE LORILLARD, ESQ., Dear Sir: I respectfully call your attention to the following extract from a letter just received:

"JOBSTOWN, N. J., Dec. 22, 1885.

"C. B. REYNOLDS, ESQ., My Dear Sir: Your lectures hav caused quite an excitement here. Certain persons, prompted by sectarian hate, bigotry, and prejudice, hav used their influence with Wm. Griswold, the superintendent of the Rancocas stock farm, owned by Pierre Lorillard, and induced him to issue orders to his foreman to hav all the men discharged who took any activ part in the lectures, or became members of the Jobstown Liberal League.

"S. R. WITHERILL."

The objects of the Jobstown Liberal League are to afford better facilities for attaining scientific education and sociability, especially advocating and endeavoring to secure the "Nine Demands of Liberalism," thus insuring to all equal rights and privileges regardless of religious faith or the lack of it.

In behalf of liberty and justice the American Secular Union requests that you will immediately revoke the arbitrary and outrageous decree of your superintendent, Wm. Griswold.

Please notify me of your action in the matter. Relying on your prompt compliance, Very respectfully yours,

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS,
Chairman Ex. Com. Am. Secular Union.

December 29th Mr. Lorillard wrote me:

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Ch. Ex. Com. American Secular Union, Sir: I consider your letter impertinent. I hav never issued such an order, directly or indirectly, and Mr. Griswold denies the statement.

There seems to be a misunderstanding in this matter somewhere, and I recommend the secretary of the Jobstown Union to find out where it lies. I will then, when we know the truth, take such action as is necessary. C. B. REYNOLDS.

Ben Wade and Bob Toombs.

This is the story of the quarrel between Senators Wade and Toombs as I heard it from the lips of the former in 1864:

Senator Toombs was a legislativ bully. He assailed Stephen A. Douglas one day in such an abusiv manner that Mrs. Douglas left the Senate gallery in tears. By and by Mr. Wade began to giv the Georgian bully some hard hits, going so far as to shake his fist in the face of Mr. Toombs, whose desk was close by, and saying, "Cowards, are we? Cowards!" By this time some began to expect a duel, and James Watson Webb, who had fought one in New York, waited upon Mr. Wade for the purpose of offering his services as second in case of a challenge. But not knowing much about the senator's fighting qualifications he asked him what he intended to do if challenged? "Do?" said Wade, "why, I intend to kill him." "Ah, indeed," said Webb, "then I suppose you can shoot." "Shoot? Why, of course I can, and Toombs knows it. Let him put a piece of paper of the size of a dollar over his heart, and if I don't hit it with a rifle, then I'm a coward. But Toombs won't challenge me, he knows he'll get killed."

For two or three days after that Toombs was busy all the time writing and franking documents, without ever looking up. At the end of the third day he yawned and stretched himself, and then casting a glance at Wade, he said, "I don't see the use of a man's making a damned fool of himself." BURR.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 27.

HON. W. H. HERNDON, for nearly twenty years law partner of Abraham Lincoln, writes as follows concerning Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking:" "It seems to me that he has exhausted the subject of Sabbath-breaking. The language of the book is plain, the ideas clean-cut, and the argument unanswerable. He has left nothing untouched for others to use on future occasions. The historic fact that he brings forward that the Christian world has adopted the old pagan day of the sun for its holy day is well timed and proves that no one day is more sacred than another. All days are sacred. God, the infinit energy, makes no pets."

An Extraordinary Book—IV.

ARE MOST OF THE LATIN AND GREEK CLASSICS, TOGETHER WITH ALL THE WRITINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS, FORGERIES OF THE FOURTEENTH, FIFTEENTH, AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES?

The pretended heresies were developed after a designed order. The first heretics against the Trinity introduced either eight Æons, as Ptolemæus, or thirty, as Valentinus, or three hundred and sixty-five, as Basilides. Then Marcion and Manies were made to talk foolishly about God the Father; then Arius about the consubstantiality of the Word; Nestorius about the unity of Christ; Eutyches about the two natures of Christ; Sergius and Pyrrhus about a twofold will; the Iconoclasts about the worship of images; then whether an image of Christ could be called an image of God, and then began a disputation concerning the presence of Christ in the eucharist, a controversy about predestination, etc.

When I deny that the Arian, Pelagian, or any other heresy existed, I do not say that there were no heretics; but if there were those who held the sentiments ascribed to Pelagius and Arius, I say they were Atheists and simpletons. If anyone wants to propagate Atheism, he ought to do it ingeniously.

I venture to say that it is easier to prove the whole of the ancient writings supposititious (with the exceptions named) than any particular one; for their agreement among themselvs is far more apparent to the critical eye than the impiety of any one of them. The abolition of the writings falsely ascribed to the Fathers would be the extinction of all heresy.

Some may ask, How is it possible that the Atheism which you claim to hav discovered in these writings has escaped the notice of learned theologians in former times? I answer by a like inquiry: How happens it that in our own time, when there are so many no less clever scholars, and when much finer books are produced, and are more easily read and understood on account of the introduction of typography, yet the same forgery escapes the observation of these men? The fraud was not detected before our time because no one, without first reading those writings carefully and critically, could be made to believe that they were all suppositious and false. And until our time most of them were hidden away in libraries.

Enough has now been said, I trust, to enable the reader of this introduction (prolegomena) to see that the fabrications of so many works, dogmatical, historical (so-called), and ecclesiastical, intended, if possible to utterly destroy all religion. In my treatis on the ancient coins of the kingdoms of France I showed that this impious system was meditated and begun in the reign of Philip Augustus (1180–1223); that it was more fully developed under Philip the Fair (1285–1314), and Valesius (1328–1350), and that it then increased prodigiously and continued through a period of over 150 years.

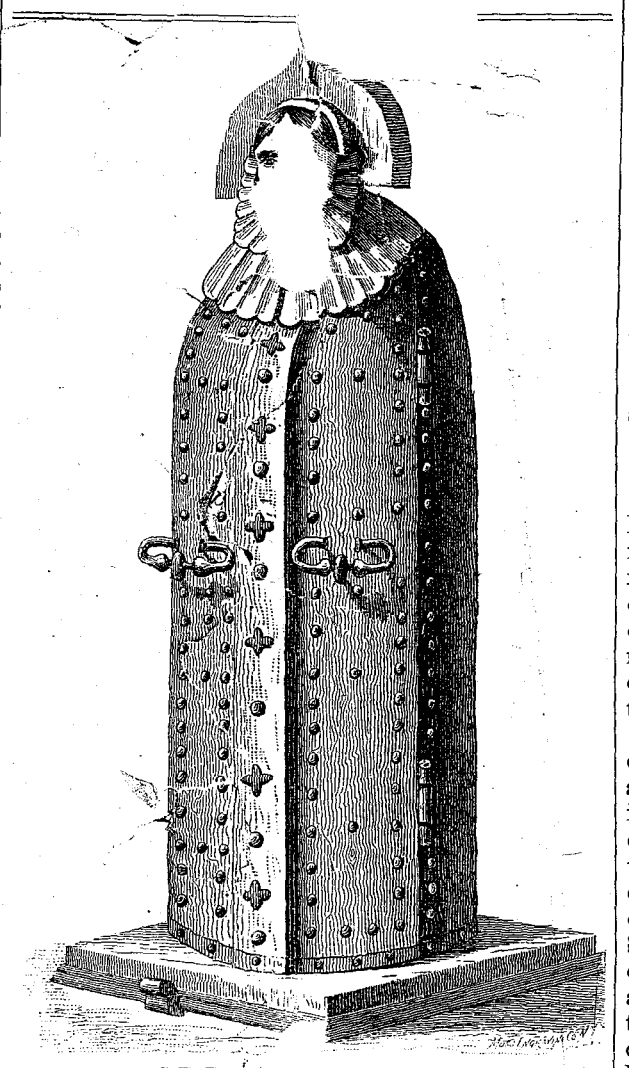
Here ends this remarkable book, published in 1766 and little noticed by scholars. Being written in Latin, it has been almost a sealed book, for the task of reading such a work is seldom undertaken even by college professors of dead languages. And yet the principal part of college education is the pretended acquisition of ability to read Latin and Greek. Oh, what a delusion, especially if Hardouin is only half right, as we suspect he is! The learned and sensible historian, Buckle, could find but little use for the Latin authors, and considered them unprofitable reading. Hardouin would hav agreed with Buckle on that point, and could hav given him the best of all reasons for despising classical literature. If Hardouin is right, the principal use of Latin and Greek is to make college pedants.

In the summer of 1883 we proved in THE TRUTH SEEKER that the letters of Pliny to Trajan were forgeries; but because Tertullian refers to two of those letters we were compelled to date the forgery about the year 200, unless the passage in Tertullian should happen to be an interpolation, in which case the forgery of the letters might be assigned to the third or fourth century, because Eusebius quotes Tertullian on Pliny. But if Hardouin is right, then it follows that the Letters to Pliny were forged after the thirteenth century, about the time that the works of Tertullian and Eusebius were written.

But again, if Hardouin is right, all the hitherto pretended early testimonies to the existence of Christ and Christianity must be assigned to the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. That is to say, the two passages in Josephus concerning Christ were not interpolated in the time of Eusebius, who first quotes them; nor was the passage in Josephus concerning John the Baptist interpolated in the time of Origen, who first refers to it; nor was anything concerning Christ or Christianity written by Pliny or Tacitus in the second century, but the Letters of Pliny, as well as the Annals of Tacitus, were forged by Benedictine monks or other Catholic savants after the thirteenth century. In short, if Hardouin is right, historical Christianity is unsupported by any early contemporary record whatever, unless it be such as the Jews hav in the Talmud and Toldoth Jeshu, which unmistakably describe a Jesus stoned and hanged for sorcery a hundred years before the time of Pontius Pilate.

ANTICHRIST.

Miss Gardener's Address to the Clergy and Others.



Up to the present time I hav tried to reply personally to each one who has favored me with a letter of thanks, criticism, or praise of the little book, "Men, Women, and Gods, and Other Lectures," just published, but I find that if I continue to do this I shall hav but little time for anything else.

The very unexpected welcome the little book has received prompts me to take this plan and means of replying to many who hav honored me by writing me personal letters. First, permit me to thank those who hav written letters of praise and gratitude, and to say that although I may be unable to reply in a private letter, I am not indifferent to these evidences of your interest, and am greatly helped in my work by such sympathy and encouragement. I hav also received most courteous letters from various clergymen who, disagreeing with me, desire to convert me either by mail or personal (private) interviews.

It is wholly impossible for me to grant these requests, since my time and strength are demanded in other work, but I will say here what I hav written to several of my clerical correspondents, and desire to say to them all:

Although I cannot enter into private correspondence with, nor grant personal interviews to, such a number of your body, I am ent[illegible]ng to respond in a public way to any strictu[illegible]y work which come under the following

1. On page 14 of t[illegible]he [illegible] to my book, Colonel Ingersoll says: "N[illegible]g can answer her arguments. T[illegible]re is [illegible]ll the priests in the world cannot [illegible]plain away her objections. There is no explanation. They should remain dumb unless they can show that the impossible is the p[illegible]able, that slavery is better than freedom, that po[illegible]amy is the friend of woman, that the innocent can justly suffer for the guilty, and that to persecute for opinion's sake is an act of love and worship."

THE IRON [illegible]GIN (CLOSED).
[From the TRUTH [illegible]KER ANNUAL for 1886.]

Now, whenever any one of these gentlemen who wish to convert me will [illegible]ow that the colonel is wrong in this brief paragraph; whenever they will in print or in public refute the arguments to which he refers, and to which they object, I shall not be slow to respond to the same.

2. It must be argument, not personal abuse, and it must be conducted in a courteous manner and to

3. It must proceed upon the basis that I am honest, as earnest, and as virtuous in my motivs and intentions as they are in theirs.

Now, surely these gentlemen cannot object to these simple requirements, and since some of them are men whose names are preceded by a title and followed by several capital letters (ranging from D.D. to O.S.F.—which I, in my ignorance, guess at as meaning Order of St. Francis, but shall like to be corrected if I am wrong) they must believe that to answer the arguments themselvs is both [illegible] easy.

If they do not so believ[illegible]ight to occupy the positions [illegible] they do so believe it wi[illegible] answer them publicly, since they hav been made publicly, and are already in the hands of several thousand people, who could not be reached by their eloquence if it were poured out on my devoted head in the privacy of my own parlor (or writing-desk).

Therefore, gentlemen, permit me to say to you all that which I hav already written to several of you personally—that I shall maintain that Colonel Ingersoll's paragraph, quoted above, expresses my own views and those of a great many other people, and will continue so to do so long as your efforts to refute it are only whispered to me behind a fan, or in the strict privacy of a letter marked "private and personal."

The arguments I hav given against the prevailing Christian dogmas and usages, which you uphold, are neither private nor personal, nor shall I allow them to take that phase. Life is too short for me to spend hours day after day in sustaining in private a publi argument which has never been (and, in my opinion never will be) refuted. And it would do no good to the thousands whom you are pleased to say will be led led astray by my position. You hav a magnificent opportunity to lead them back again by honest public letters, or lectures, or sermons, not by an afternoon's chat with me.

And, while I recognize the courtesy of your pressing requests (made, without exception, in the most gentlemanly terms) to permit you to meet me personally and refute my arguments, I feel compelled to say that, unless you are willing to show the courage of your convictions (and the quality of your defense) to the public, I fear they would hav no weight with me, and I should hav wasted your precious time as well as my own, which I should feel that I had no right to do, nor to allow you to do without this frank statement of the case.

Now, do not suppose that I hav the slightest objection to meeting the clergy personally and socially. Upon the contrary, many of my friends are clergymen—even bishops—but candor compels me to state that up to the present time not one of them has (either privately or otherwise) been able to answer either of the first two lectures in that little book, and as to the third one, no one of them, in my opinion, will ever try to answer it.

Time will show whether I am right in this.

In the meantime accept my thanks for your interest, and believe me, Sincerely, HELEN H. GARDENER.

The Gospels of Hate and of Love.

In his "Religion of Amity and the Religion of Enmity" Herbert Spencer says that primitiv humanity had but one religion, and the humanity of the remote future will hav but one. "The two," he declares, "are opposed; and we, who liv midway in the course of civilization, hav to believe in both—the religion of amity, and the religion of humanity." Of course, both are not called religions, but he speaks of things as he finds them rather than of names.

How true all this is! A code obtains which, six days in a week, sneers at honesty of expression as well as of execution, and on the other day moralizes upon the righteousness of candor and the need of truth in every-day life. To be in harmony with the world one must practice deceit and believe in its opposit; must preach sincerity and practice prevarication. Strife is right on Saturday and wrong on Sunday. Business duplicity and simulation, political cant and dissembling, circumvention, charlatanism, and empiricism blend harmoniously as the virtues of the sexanary existence, the other day being ostensibly devoted to the negation of the six-day polity. The latter condition is the outline of the religion of peace at a paradox, warring with strife. Thus one day in seven we try to make ourselvs believe that we believe in fidelity. It is a desperate struggle, in which conscience seeks existence as well as potency.

"This is the age of hypocrisy," declares a philosopher. So it seems. To be in harmony with environment one must be a numskull or a dissembler. To doubt is bad, but to giv expression to doubt is unpardonable.

Still worse is it to propagate, organize, and build. Iconoclasm is heresy; reconstruction is damnation. Not only is this true of the so-called Christian world, but of the Secular. Reformers, even, are lamentably lacking in liberality. So long has oppression swayed that liberty is still an almost unknown quality; it is not understood. It is interpreted to mean license for one and restriction for another. The Deist is shocked at the blasphemy of the Atheist. The Materialist [illegible]d Agnostic snub each other. Spiritualism and hypn[illegible]n draw their skirts close about them, and tread [illegible]ly by on the other side. Hylo-idealism sniffs impatiently at the priests and the mediums, and yet the novitiate sees them as a unit in essentials, and as vain fragments in non-essentials. The monogamist blanches with horror at polygamy and shuns the polygamist, and none of the three dare admit sympathy for or fellowship with the Freelover. The labor reformer fears politics, and the politician despises the reformer. The wage-worker hates the millionaire, and the latter sneers at the former and asks him what he is going to do about it; plans by the million are compromise, but not one for strict equation.

capitalist seeks to pauperize the laborer, and the laborer hopes to swap conditions. Neither seeks exact justice, and therefore they battle against the tempest. But to tell either side the truth is worse than heresy. Truth crushed to earth they fear not, but truth with radiant wing they evade.

Oh, what a world of misery there is in man's intolerance! "I am a social outcast, a Pariah," exclaimed Shelley. His family forbid the mention of his name, held no communication with him during the last five years of his life, his early friends had no sympathy with his writings, the press denounced him, and others remonstrated with him. And yet his crime appears to hav been his writings, which were, as Trelawny declares, "the pure outpourings of his inward mind." He was the victim of the religion of hate. It has cursed the world since the crucifixion on Calvary—aye, and long before. The rain falls on the just and the unjust; the glorious sun shines upon them all. Nature does not discriminate. Only in the exponents of the religion of enmity is found the concensus of the competent. We who liv in this age must either practice this religion or meet rebuffs and sneers at every corner, and eke out existence from hand to mouth. The gospel of peace and equity has but one chance in seven. And even then its inculcation is attempted only through precept.

They who can catch the glimmerings of the gospel of the future must either pose as martyrs, or accept as sacred and true the primitiv gospel of hate and strife. Conscience appeals for the religion of amity; policy dictates that of enmity. Here and there the warmth of love is faintly felt, and perhaps the glow of the seventh day will, in time, do for every-day affairs. But not yet. Patience, martyrdom, and work must long intervene. W. T. D.

Mr. Bradlaugh Says He Will Take His Seat.

From an Interview with a Sun Correspondent.

Having left the Atlas omnibus, which runs between Swiss Cottage and the city at Circus road, once a busy thoroughfare of St. John's Wood, I inquired at 20, a corner house, the ground floor of which is occupied by a music-seller, if Mr. Bradlaugh was at home. "Yes," replied a tidy maid.

I gave her my card, and was soon introduced into a large room with walls lined with books. Mr. Bradlaugh was sitting at a writing table with his back to an alarming fire. The lamp was lit and the curtains drawn, for the afternoon was dark and stormy. The fifth-time elected member of Northampton was hard at work, but on seeing me, and knowing I had come for the Sun, he got up and shook hands with a cheering welcome. Mr. Bradlaugh has been in America, and likes the Americans.

He was born in September, 1833. He is six feet high, with large shoulders. The hair is gray and brushed back. The eyes are small, but piercing, and the mouth large, with thin lips. The whole face and head make one think first of a bulldog, and next of a friar. He wears no beard or moustache, and looks blown, but not broken up. His voice is fine-toned, and his elocution incisiv. He impresses one as a man of unconquerable persistence, with his gameness sobered down by a great deal of Yankee shrewdness. He must hav been uncommonly strong. When a private in the Seventh Dragoon Guards he challenged one of the best boxers of the regiment, who was forever teasing him, and repeatedly knocked him down. Close to the desk where he was writing on my arrival the ex-trooper keeps as a relic of the past hard times an Arabic vocabulary, which, having been found among his scanty chattels by his fellow recruits when sailing to Dublin to join their corps, created such a fancy among them that they actually began to play at football with it.

Mr. Bradlaugh is a widower. He livs with his daughters, two tall, good-looking, and lettered persons, who share all the doctrins of the great Atheist agitator, and aid to blaze them forth in books and orations.

"Well, Mr. Bradlaugh," I began, "what do you think of the elections?"

"Well, sir," said he, "I don't think badly of them after all, and if they are not better Mr. Parnell is responsible for it. He is now Messrs. Parnell, Churchill & Co. This is not merely a most unholy alliance. It is a most foolish one, both for Ireland and England."

"Were you not surprised at seeing the long list of Conservativs elected by London and many of the big towns?"

"Not very. Mind, in most of the districts referred to the Tories had their strongholds. Yet we hav turned them out of not a few of them. Look at the desperate contests in the metropolis alone, at Finsbury, at South St. Pancras, Bermondsey, Southwark, all ending in our favor. Then consider this, that the Radicals had generally to fight it out single-handed. There is a break in the Liberal party. The Whigs are dead and gone, and Liberals do not all agree. Collect here in this room Mr. Gladstone, Lord Hartington, Mr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Goschen, and there is hardly any subject on which they would concord."

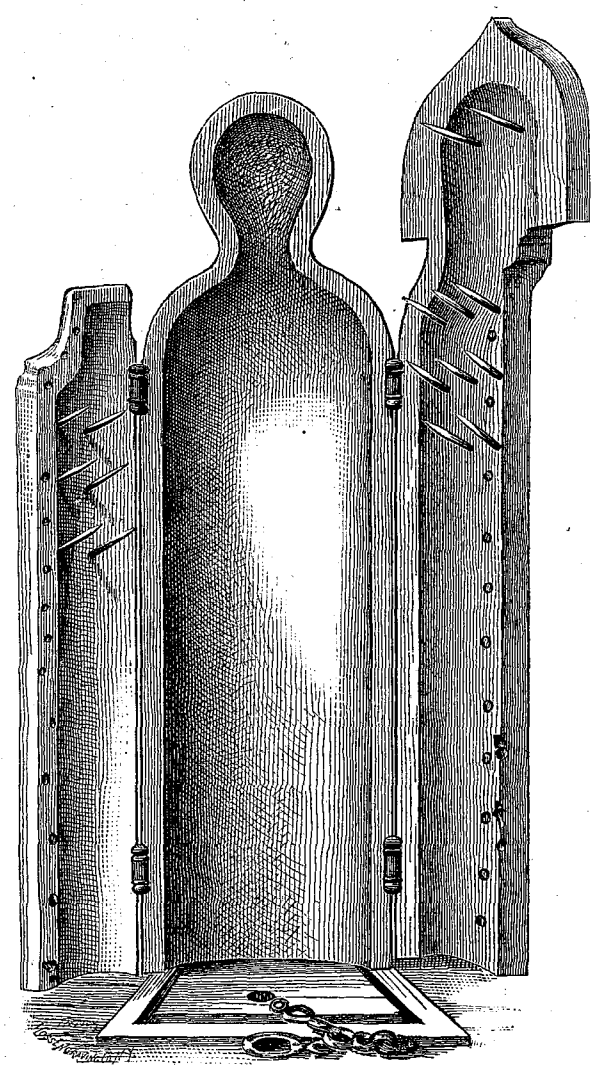
"But, then, don't you think this country is on the eve of a very serious crisis?"

"Yes, but not on the eve of an imminent one, as many believe. This, you likely know, is the land of compromise. There will still be many compromises before we reach the final goal."

"Then those are wrong who fear or desire a revolution?"

"To hav a revolution you must hav men to make it. Where are they?"

"To tell you the truth, I certainly had thought you would be one."



"I don't want to achieve a revolution only to be hanged. I would only start one that I would feel able to conduct to a successful issue and that would bring lasting good to the people."

"I hav often listened to you at the Hall of Science, at Trafalgar Square, at Hyde Park, and I had presumed that you and your auditors would carry everything before you."

"I believe if I had asked them to follow me anywhere, they would hav done so; but it would merely hav cost me my neck, which would hav helped nobody."

"But I thought you were a republican?"

"And so I am, but if in order to spring a republic in this country to-morrow I had only to place your visiting-card in the nearest letter-box, I would not do it, for I do not want to establish a republic in this country for one day, but forever."

THE IRON VIRGIN (OPEN).
[From the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.]

"You think that England will eventually become a republic?"

"Yes, undoubtedly; but when, I don't know—perhaps in ten years, perhaps in sixty."

"I do not quite see why the Radicals are so strong against the queen, considering that she does not seem to care much for the aristocracy, and mostly associates with her servants and such people."

"Did not your Southern planters think it useful to now and then go among their slaves?"

"What will be the effect of her majesty's death on the nation?"

"None; what does she do?"

"Will you follow Mr. Gladstone if he comes to office?"

"Of course. We differ, but I like him."

"Would you follow Mr. Chamberlain?"

After a little hesitation, "Yes," was the reply.

"Would you follow Lord Hartington?"

"Yes," was the immediate answer, and Mr. Bradlaugh added: "You must hav noticed that I answered your third query much quicker than your second. I must explain. Mr. Chamberlain would rush headlong against our opponents. Lord Hartington would cajole them. You are straightforward people on the other side of the Atlantic, and you will not, perhaps, under[illegible] this, but you get more here by cajole[illegible]ault."

[illegible] with the church?"

"Leave it alone for the present. Parsons hav been doing wonderful work for us lately. If I had laid out all the money needed to buy them off, I could not hav disestablished them at a faster rate. Besides, there are 21,000 of them, and it would be stiff labor to work them out at a stretch."

"Will you sit this time in the House?"

"I will."

"But then it might mean the use of strong measures, as you hav exhausted, I believe, all the legal means."

"Not at all. You are mistaken."

As I was taking leave of him, Mr. Bradlaugh, assuming a most solemn tone, quite in dissonance with the light one he had used, and raising himself to his full hight, said: "I am tired, fifty times more tired than I can say, sir, of the struggle, but I mean and tell you that somebody shall be made to pay for it before it is over. And mind, this is not confidential."

Notes From the Field.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: I hav at last got settled down to work in the self-appointed mission of canvassing Illinois in the interests of the Secular Union. And although I find it a difficult task, and one that poorly remunerates the laborer, yet I hav a large enough hope to believe that if we cast our bread upon the waters, we, or others who come after us, shall reap the harvest. Last week I visited several small towns not far from Chicago, and lectured to small audiences with good results. Our Liberal friend, C. E. Tetley, of Hegewich, invited us to visit that place and giv the nativs one or two Liberal lectures. We very cheerfully accepted the invitation, and on the 10th and 11th inst. explained some features of the Secular Union. It is a matter of regret that, among so many good Liberals as there are here, none of them take any of the Liberal papers. We hope that this may not be the case much longer.

We made the acquaintance of Peter Hill, Ernest Steller, H. Thedou, and J. Christ. The latter, I understand, makes no claims of relationship to the Nazarene. On the 13th and 14th I spoke at Carpentersville. We should doubtless hav had large crowds to hear us had it not been for the great snow storm that was on, blocking up the roads.

We were kindly entertained by Delos Dunton and family. Our next stopping-place was Algonquin, but as no hall could be had, we could not, of course, hold forth. Mr. Robert Phillips and family made us welcome for the day, and on parting assured us that the latch-string would always hang out for us.

At Dundee we were persuaded by William Smith, a kind gentleman and genuin Liberal, to stop over for a day or two and giv a talk in his parlor, which we very cheerfully did. We formed the acquaintance of several earnest Freethinkers, and as many more who made loud professions, but when the time came to act were not to be found.

Notwithstanding this, I predict that Dundee will hav a good Liberal society before many years. I am soon to start on a long trip over the state, stopping at the following places: Braidwood, Gardner, Dwight, Streator, Varna, Lacon, Minonk, Dana, Bloomington, Farmer City, Clinton, Decatur, Assumption, Pana, Shelbyville, Matoon, Kinmundy, Centralia, Tamaray, St. John's, Belleville, Carrolton, Whitehall, Franklin, Girard, Auburn, Petersburg. W. S. BELL.

Hard Upon Judge Benedict.

Those readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who hav been interested in the account of "Persecution in Australia," and who hav any sense of humor whatever, cannot fail to see something grimly ludicrous in the situation. Just think of it! After Judge Benedict had made all sorts of effort to hav it appear that D. M. Bennett was "obscene;" after he had lent himself to the most outrageous perversion of justice ever known since the days of Pontius Pilate, and sacrificed every principle of integrity, and decency, and honesty for the sake of getting an Infidel into prison, here comes a little whiffet of a collector, away down in Australia, and insists that the printed report of the trial of D. M. Bennett is "obscene." It would be funny to know what Benedict thinks of this state of affairs, just as a matter of curious interest. Is this the reward that Benedict has earned, after sacrificing so much, after all his labor and pains, after his success in managing the trial all his own way, so that his victim had nothing to say about it whatever, now to be informed by a contemptible customs collector in a remote corner of the world that his trial, the work of his own hands, which he was at so much pains to fix right, is obscene? Well, well! What turn will the obscenity craze take next? ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

The Promis of 1886.

Now the New Year is upon us with its promises sublime,
And we ask what it will bring us down the corridors of time.
Is there life within its waters; is there healing on its wings?
And will wisdom and contentment come with other useful things?
Shall we don anew our armor, wipe the rust from off our blade,
And go forth to fresh achievement in the line of progress made?
Yea, these shall come from effort, and our joys be multiplied,
They are casual little blessings in the coming days descried.
But the brightest, gladdest promis of the happiest New Year
Is—A new TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL is shortly to appear.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 2, 1886.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. We will renew one old subscription for a year, and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to one new subscriber for a year, for $5. Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get a new subscriber?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

The Truth Seeker.

A Happy New Year to our friends, and many of them! May peace and prosperity "be and abide with you all now and forevermore!" as the ministers say.

THE TRUTH SEEKER makes its New Year's calls this year in a new dress. The old one was so badly worn that it had to be cast aside, though we can ill spare the money the new one cost.

In this number also we begin the publication of pictures. That on the first page is from the artist who on previous occasions has done such good service with his pencil. The Iron Virgin cuts are from photographs brought from Nuremberg by Mr. Charles Eckhart, and engraved for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. The picture on the last page is from a French book, "Gros-Jean et Son Curé," published by the "Libraire Anticléricale," of Paris. These pictures, with perhaps the exception of the Iron Virgin, need no comment. This Virgin is a relic of the Inquisition—of those times when the Christian church had full control of the world. At present she stands beneath the town hall of Nuremberg, Bavaria, in a vaulted chamber entirely dug out of the living rock, except the roof, which is formed of hewn stone. On the opposit wall, suspended by an iron hook, is a lamp, which, when lighted, shows the goodly proportions of "Our Lady." On the instant of touching a spring the image flings open its arms, which resemble the doors of a cupboard, and which, as may be seen, are stuck full on the inside with poniards, each about a foot in length. Some of these knives, it will be noticed, are so placed as to enter the eyes of those whom the image enfolded in its embrace; others are set so as to penetrate the ears and brain, and others to pierce the breast. The person upon whom all other means except reason had been exhausted, and who still refused to be a Catholic, would be led along the tortuous passage and ushered into this vault, where the first object to greet his eye, the pale light of the lamp falling upon it, would be the Iron Virgin. He was bidden to stand in front of the image. The spring was touched by the executioner, the Virgin flung open her arms, and the wretched victim was forced between them. Another spring was then touched, the Virgin closed upon her victim; a strong wooden beam, fastened at one end of the wall by a movable joint, the other against the doors of the iron image, was worked by a screw; and as the beam was pushed out, the spiky arms of the Virgin slowly but irresistibly closed upon the man, goring him with their poniards. When the unbeliever was silenced, if not convinced, it was not necessary that the executioner should put himself to the trouble of making the Virgin unclasp the mangled carcass of her victim; provision had been made for its quick and secret disposal. At the touching of a third spring the floor of the image slid aside, and the body of the victim dropped down the mouth of a perpendicular shaft in the rock. Looking down this pit, one can see at a great depth the shimmer of the water. A canal had been made to flow underneath the vault where stood the Iron Virgin, and when she had done her work upon those who were delivered over to her tender mercies, she let them fall with quick descent and sudden plunge into the canal underneath, where they floated to the Pegnitz, and from the Pegnitz to the Rhine, and by the Rhine to the ocean. It is by "arguments" such as these that the church was built up and established. The Iron Virgin is no longer a factor in polemics, but her prototype, the Virgin Mary, still bears rule with an influence not less fatal to the mind than the embrace of the iron woman in the torture-chamber of Nuremberg was to the body. The myth and the monument should go together. They should take their places in the museums, there to stand as a warning and an admonition against a revival or survival of the superstition and brutality in which mankind has sunk under the control of religion and ignorance.

We like the picture department. Through it we believe we can do a great amount of good. We think pictures also add to the attractivness of the paper, and, in conjunction with the able writers who freely giv their services to the cause, make THE TRUTH SEEKER one of the best journals on the continent, and worthy the support of every Freethinker. Of course we hav not reached perfection in this, the first number, nor hav we attained our ideal. Like almost everything else, the artistic work for Freethought must grow. Never before in this country, until THE TRUTH SEEKER began, has the artist's pencil supplemented the Freethought writer's pen, and we find that artists capable of aiding in this work are very few. But they will grow to it, and if we are supported by our friends, the fruits of their growth will be gathered for these columns. And right here we acknowledge with thanks the promis of $15 from Mr. Charles Eckhart and the payment of $1 by Mrs. Slenker toward the illustrations. This is pleasant indeed, and we hope others may be induced by their example to aid a little—at least to the extent of getting a new subscriber.

The articles in this number of THE TRUTH SEEKER are exceptionally good. What a magnificent tribute is that of Colonel Ingersoll to Elizur Wright—of tender greatness to heroic worth! The other communications are also of sterling merit. Everyone tells something new, or teaches some useful lesson. The "Letters from Friends" are various as the experiences of the writers, and each is the honest thought of an honest man or woman. Woman, too, is strongly defended and represented in this issue of the paper, and we are vain enough to think that in THE TRUTH SEEKER, of all journals, she finds her best friend.

Considering everything, we are satisfied that we begin 1886 in good style. We shall continue to improve as the means present.

The Catholics and Public Schools.

The people of the Argentine Republic hav recently had an issue forced upon them very similar to the issue just met by the French government. The population of the Argentine Republic is mostly Roman Catholic. Nunneries are the principal product of this religion in the country. Popular education is very poor, and but a few years ago only twenty-eight thousand out of a population of about two millions could write. Lately, however, the government has established normal schools and imported teachers, mostly ladies, from this country. A majority of these teachers are Protestants. This process of education has been going on for some years, under the constitution adopted in 1862, which guarantees freedom of the press, of religion, of association, of education, and equality before the law.

Last year the serpent appeared, and the serpent's religion was Roman Catholicism. A series of dispatches hav been received by the secretary of state of this country, which describe the fight now being waged in the Argentine Republic between the government and the church. As long ago as April, 1884, Dr. Clara, a Catholic ecclesiastic and acting bishop at Cordova, issued a pastoral letter prohibiting, among other things, the sending of Catholic children to schools where Protestant teachers were employed. The national government, considering it an act of disrespect and insubordination, took the matter up, and after the exchange of several notes between the minister of education, the governor of the province of Cordova, and Dr. Clara, refer[illegible] attorney-general for his opinion. The [illegible] long report giving a full re[illegible] the state and the church, givs the opinion that the government which confirmed church nominations could disciplin and dismiss. President Rocca accepted this opinion as sound doctrin, and issued a decree dismissing Dr. Clara. This was followed by a sharp discussion in the press and also in Congress, where a resolution was introduced calling for all the correspondence. Notwithstanding the decree, Dr. Clara refused to accept his dismissal, and continued to exercise the functions of his priestly office. He even issued a second pastoral, in which he asserted that it was his duty to obey instructions from Rome rather than the laws of the national government.

People are now divided into two parties, clerical and anti-clerical. Congress passed a bill, which had been introduced at a previous session, providing that in the schools of the national capital there should be no sectarian test or teaching. In the discussion of the budget of the minister of education and worship a hot debate took place on a section relating to the suppression of the seminaries for the education of priests, and Minister De Wild made it known that the president, by withholding supplies, was determined to press the question to the point of separation of church and state.

Dr. Maltera, the apostolic delegate, anathematized the normal school at Cordova, of which Miss Clara Armstrong, an American lady and a Protestant, was directress; and having been requested by Miss Armstrong to remove the anathema, consented on condition that she secure certain pledges from the minister of worship. This she attempted to do, but was sharply reprimanded by the minister, who told her that the government employed her to teach sciences, and that Dr. Maltera had no authority to interfere.

The minister called upon Dr. Maltera for an explanation of his interference with the laws and authorities of the country, and as the explanations were not made, the minister sent the apostolic delegate his passports and required him to leave the country within twenty-four hours. The order was complied with.

"It is quite probable," writes Mr. Osborn, our minister at Buenos Ayres, in his last dispatch, "that the president sent in a message asking Congress to approve a call for a convention to amend the Constitution in order to relieve the state from the church."

One of the early incidents of the struggle was a procession of more than one thousand ladies of the first families of Buenos Ayres, which marched to the Senate and presented a petition, signed exclusivly by women, praying for the rejection of a pending bill, already passed by the lower house, which prohibited the teaching of religious dogmas in common schools. A vote was immediately taken by "smart judgment," and the bill was rejected by one vote.

This account, condensed from Mr. Osborn's reports by the Sun's Washington correspondent, needs but little comment. It is but cumulativ testimony that the Catholic church is inimical to every government that is not subservient to the pope. The statement of Clara that he considered it his duty to obey instructions from Rome rather than the laws of the country, is conclusiv upon this. And Clara is but one instrument out of millions the pope uses. We are having in this country the same interference with our public schools, and upon Americans is bound to come sooner or later the struggle now going on in this South American republic. The Catholic church is the stronghold of treason, and she is undermining our state through her priests. Parochial schools are going up all over the country, in which children of Roman Catholic parents are being instructed in their duties to Rome before their country. It is only a few weeks since, at the dedication of a parochial school in St. Louis, for the completion of which nine hundred scholars had been waiting unschooled, the Romish orator said:

"The Catholic people of America are not here on tolerance, as many seem to suppose; they are here heirs to that freedom purchased by our fathers, and they are entitled to equal rights with all men, and if one of these rights is taken from us, all are in danger. The Catholics are robbed of their rights in this matter of schools, and I demand for them the total abolition of the school system (as it exists), and in its stead that the state pay to the church out of the school fund an amount commensurate with the number of her children, and proportionate to the whole amount collected for school purposes."

Up in New Hampshire, a puritanical state where Roman Catholics are ineligible to state offices, the priest of a city endeavored to hav himself elected to [illegible] school board, that he might run the schools. He failed; and to be revenged he has built a parochial school almost in his own door-yard, and withdrawn all the Catholic scholars from the public schools. He proposes, through his power over the Irish and French voters, to force the city to giv him a per capita share of the school fund raised by taxation.

There are but few things in the world more certain than that Roman Catholicism will ruin this country if unopposed by true Secular methods.

Where Was God?

On Friday, Dec. 18th, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., twenty-three men and boys were imprisoned by a cave-in at the Nanticoke mine of the Susquehanna Coal Company. Within forty-eight hours the mine was filled with water and gas fumes.

These men and boys are all dead—either drowned or suffocated. There was no earthly help for them. All that man can do is to dig out the remains.

The little village of Nanticoke is made up of coal-miners and their families. It is impossible, say the dispatches to the daily press, to describe the consternation, the dismay, the agony, of the surviving friends of the dead miners. The whole population was out on the streets discussing in the wildest manner the situation, and exclamations of despair and cries of agony were heard on every street corner and in almost every household. Relativs of the unfortunate miners were in the wildest agony, and several were seized with convulsions.

Aloft, above the blue of the heavens, say the Christians, on a golden throne sits an omniscient and omnipotent God. Being omniscient, he knew of the cave-in. Being omnipotent, he had the power to save the men.

Why didn't he do it?

Agnosticism in a Chicago Court.

The oath question has come up in a practical shape in Illinois, and the Supreme Court of that state will be called upon to decide whether an Agnostic is a competent witness. On the 21st ult. Robert Hertel was being tried in Chicago. Mr. Eugene Prussing was an essential witness, and the prosecution would fail without his evidence. When he was called Hertel's counsel, Mr. Dikeman, interrogated him:

Mr. Dikeman: Do you believe in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures?

Mr. Prussing: No, sir.

Dikeman: Do you believe in the ever-living God?

Prussing: No, sir.

Mr. Dikeman then claimed that under the laws of Illinois Mr. Prussing was not a competent witness, and read the the statute, the constitution, and several rulings upon the question. The state's attorney and Judge Shepard were both taken by surprise, and the question was held under advisement.

The next morning Mr. Prussing, with an armful of law books, entered the court room. Judge Shepard said that he regretted that he had been unable to find authorities which fully satisfied his mind, and he would like to hear argument. Judge Shepard asked Mr. Prussing:

Do you believe in an overruling Providence, call it by whatever name you please, God or anything else, which makes a man accountable in a future existence for sins and crimes committed here?

Mr. Prussing: I hav no positiv belief in the existence of a God. My position is that I do not know whether God exists or not. I neither affirm nor deny that proposition.

Judge Shepard: Do you believe in a future state of existence?

Mr. Prussing: I neither affirm nor deny it. I simply do not know.

Judge Shepard: Do you believe in any future state of existence in which you may be punished for the sins or crimes committed in this world?

Prussing: I simply do not know anything about it.

Judge Longnecker, for the prosecution: Do you consider the oath required of you binding on your conscience?

Mr. Prussing: I do, most certainly.

Defendant's Counsel: What is the test by which you feel your conscience bound?

Mr. Prussing: Because the oath is prescribed by law and the statutes of the state. None other.

Counsel for the defendant argued against the competency of Mr. Prussing, reading copiously from the constitution of the state and decisions of various cases, and called particular attention to the fact that Mr. Prussing admitted that the only test of his responsibility was that he would not commit perjury, and thus lay himself liable or amenable to the state law.

Mr. Prussing made an argument on his own behalf. He asserted that the constitutions of Illinois of 1818 and 1848 guaranteed religious freedom. This was opposed by the common law. The Pilgrim fathers came to this country because they wished to be freed from the exaction of the common law. They wanted freedom to worship as they deemed best. The development of knowledge and science produced Atheists, and a form of affirmation was made to suit their cases. During the past fifty years there had arisen a large group who were called Agnostics. They did not know whether there was any God or not, but be there one or be there none, they would act in accordance with the dictates of their own consciences.

After showing that all the cases cited were decided under the constitution of 1848, which without doubt refused the testimony of those who did not believe in God, Mr. Prussing said:

"In 1868 Robert G. Ingersoll was the chief law officer of the state of Illinois—its attorney-general. He made the remark that if he was the sole witness of a most diabolical murder, the assassin would go unhung and unpunished, because under the laws of the state its attorney-general would not be competent as a witness because he did not believe in a God. The effect of this remark, and the wide discussion which followed, was seen in the constitution of 1870, and the blot was forever effaced from the statutes of the state. The Bill of Rights, in the constitution of 1870, says: 'And no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity on account of his religious opinions.' In his capacity as a witness he was protected by the constitution."

Judge Shepard said the question was one of great importance, and should receive longer study. If the position of the defense was correct, a large number of people would be incapacitated as witnesses. He was inclined to the belief that the constitution of 1870 stepped in to aid this class of persons. He would decide that Prussing was competent to testify. The defense noted an exception, and the question will go to the Supreme Court of Illinois.

Good-Night and All Hail.

DEC. 31, 1885.

As voyagers, standing on the after-deck
Of ocean-ship at evening, see their wake
Lit up by setting sun, while crystals fleck
The rolling waves that into brilliants break;
So do we, gazing o'er the year just past,
Discern its tide made radiant with that sun
Whose beams are on the troubled billows cast
In kind word spoken and in good deeds done;
And, missing shadows in its golden light,
We say: Ah, glad Old Year, good-night, good-night.

JAN. 1, 1886.

And now 'tis morning; there is light ahead;
The sun new-risen sheds its rays again.
The dead shall chant the requiem of the dead,
The living sing forever life's refrain.
The old is gone, and, weeping, all the earth
Hath said "Farewell!" The newer day is here.
Let Captain Time with joy record the birth,
While all the voyagers to its name giv ear.
That name is PROGRESS. Let no mortal fail
To say: Ah, glad New Year, all hail, all hail!

Editorial Notes.

THE disappointment complained of in the following letter from one of our correspondents can possibly be allayed by Mr. Jamieson:

"DELAVAN, MINN., Dec. 10, 1885.

"MR. EDITOR: Last winter Mr. W. F. Jamieson delivered two courses of lectures in Delavan. Again, in the month of June, he gave lectures at Mapleton, Sterling, and Good Thunder. His lectures were well attended and well supported throughout. The Liberals were extremely well pleased with Mr. Jamieson, and he in turn appeared to enjoy his visit to this vicinity very much, remarking to a number, before leaving, that he was never better used by any people than by the Liberals of this section. Before leaving, Mr. Jamieson arranged a discussion with Elder Hill, an Adventist preacher, who preaches at Good Thunder. Everybody looked forward to the discussion with more than ordinary interest, as Elder Hill is quite an able debater, and of course no one doubted that Mr. Jamieson would make it lively for him. At the last moment Elder Hill received a letter from Mr. Jamieson saying that unless he would agree to charge an entrance fee he would decline the discussion.

"Now, Mr. Jamieson cannot but know that this was equivalent to declining the debate, for the Adventists never ask outsiders to help defray their expenses. Had Mr. Jamieson informed his Liberal friends that it would be necessary for them to bear his expenses, the amount could easily hav been raised and the appointment kept. Some of the Liberals declare that they would sooner hav paid the whole bill themselvs than hav had a backdown before the church people. By this strange conduct of Mr. Jamieson, the Freethinkers hav been made the laughing-stock of the community. Whenever an Infidel opens his mouth now, he is met with the taunting query, 'How about the great Infidel debate?' If this is the way we are to be used by our lecturers, what can we expect in the way of advance?

"Inclosed you will find a copy of the answer to Mr. Jamieson's backdown by Elder Hill, and published by the Mankato Free Press, which I hope you will find space to print along with what I hav written. By so doing you will greatly oblige many subscribers to your valuable paper.

"JAMES GEDDES."

Mr. Geddes writes rather harshly, but is not so severe as the minister, whose letter we hav no room to print. As Mr. Jamieson is a poor man, it can hardly be expected he can bear his expenses in these debates, and, allowing it all to be as Mr. Geddes says, Mr. Jamieson can only be blamed for not notifying the Freethinkers that he would hav to be remunerated. But let us hear Mr. Jamieson's side of the story.

IN protesting against the confiscation of Mormon property by the United States, "Monsignor X" in Liberty once more shows his hatred toward the Freethinkers by saying:

"Where are the so-called Liberal papers while this infamy is going on? From the newspapers, those professional public harlots, I expect nothing. But where are Wakeman, Palmer, Ingersoll, Underwood, and the rest? One man, Horace Seaver of the Investigator, has indeed spoken, and says substantially, 'Go for them, Grover!' Shame on you, Seaver, and all your hypocritical tribe! Your 'Freethought' is a lie from top to bottom."

If Mr. Appleton will take up his TRUTH SEEKER of December 19th, he will find a very energetic editorial protest against the confiscation—about the first protest in the country, and two weeks ahead of our Anarchistic antagonist. We strongly suspect, however, that no number of Freethought protests would induce Mr. Appleton to forego his fortnightly growl at Freethinkers.

IN one way this half-holiday reform may hav an important bearing upon the question of opening museums, etc., on Sunday. It is now argued that working people hav no opportunity to visit such places, and that the æsthetic and educational advantages to be derived from pictures and statuary can only be secured to them on Sunday. But if people of the working classes generally cease work on Saturday at noon, this argument will lose its force.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Tribune is mistaken. As we hav before this pointed out, should all shops and stores close at 12 M. Saturdays, the time is not sufficient to enable the workmen to reach home, change their clothes, and visit the museums. The museums must be open on Sundays for the laborers to derive any benefit from them.

THE Boston correspondent of the Evangelist reports that a week or two since, Mayor Grace of this city wrote to Mayor O'Brien, of Boston, inquiring as to the advisability of opening the Metropolitan Museum of Arts and Natural History on the Sabbath; to which the Boston mayor, after proper inquiry, made answer that keeping open the Boston Museum of Fine Arts on Sunday had proved entirely satisfactory to the trustees, and explained that the Sunday attendance was chiefly from classes who could not leave their work on week days, parents and children attending together, and that the visitors were in general an orderly, quiet, and well behaved people.

"ONE of the nicest story-books for children that we hav seen," says the Fall River Times, "is entitled, 'The Story Hour,' by Miss Susan H. Wixon, of this city. We hav not had time to giv it careful examination, but a cursory glance satisfies us that it is one of the best books for the little folks that is in the market."

ACOORDING to the Liberal Club program, the Rev. Mr. Lloyd is to occupy the evening of Jan. 29th, and the birthday celebration of Thomas Paine will be deferred until the Sunday evening following. It would be more in consonance with eternal fitness if the dates of those two events were transposed.

THE Marquis of Lorne, Colonel Ingersoll, Millionaries Astor and Carnegie, an Irish member of Parliament elect, John Boyle O'Reilly, Cassius M. Clay, Sir John Macdonald, and Frank B. Sanborn hav articles in the January number of the North American Review.

W. H. BURR, of Washington, has in press a pamphlet with this title: "Bacon and Shakespere: Proof that William Shakspere could not write. The sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A. D. 1590. Bacon identified as the concealed Poet Ignoto, A.D. 1589-1600."

THE late king of Burmah, the wicked and wily Theebaw, was a Sunday-school scholar, educated by a missionary of the Church of England, Dr. Marks, of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and was at one time a promising pupil.

GEORGE PADDINGTON, of Fresno City, Cal., wants a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of date of October 3d. Not having one to spare at the office, we giv his desire this publicity that some charitably disposed person may relieve him.

THE Home Advocate, of Mapleton, Iowa, announces itself as the champion of Freethought. No doubt the Advocate can do a great deal of good in its state, and we congratulate the editor on his adherence to liberty.

An Answer at Last.

From Liberty.

The New York TRUTH SEEKER makes an effort to answer "X's" editorial, "Institution-Ridden." Doubtless "X" will giv this effort due and satisfactory attention hereafter. Meantime I may remark THE TRUTH SEEKER'S statement that when the Anarchist proposes to imprision a thief without his consent, he proposes to set up an institution as really a government as any we now hav. Now, it seems to me that just the opposit is the truth, and that the Anarchist, in proposing to imprison the thief without his consent, is fighting precisely on the line of no-government. Why? Because in the case supposed the thief is the government.

Mr. Tucker is developing remarkable powers as a humorist. He cannot mean this as a serious argument. It must be a joke.

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is sent free to any address upon application.

Letters from Friends.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find the name and address of a new subscriber to your valuable paper.

I am writing these lines on Thanksgiving day, and, taking a retrospectiv view of the past year, I fail to see that I hav anything to be particularly thankful for, unless it be the physical benefit I hav derived from following the advice laid down in that valuable little book, "Directions for Cleansing the Blood," by Prof. Nathaniel N. Pierce, a notice of which I first saw in THE TRUTH SEEKER. At that time I was suffering from a severely acute attack of sciatica, and was under the care of three well-known physicians, whose nostrums I swallowed and whose advice I was guided by in every way without obtaining any relief. I dispensed with their services, and after trying Professor Pierce's "Hot-water Cure" for about four weeks, I experienced decided relief, and at the expiration of about four months was entirely convalescent.

I am not writing with any idea of puffing Professor Pierce, but in the hope that it may chance to meet the eye of some other sufferer who, following my example, may experience the same relief that I hav. Wishing your paper every success, I remain, W. C. LYON.

BELLEVILLE, KAN., Nov. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We hav just had the pleasure of listening to a few lectures by that able and logical reasoner, Mr. J. L. Andrew. His subjects were, "Modern Infidelity," "Christianity and Modern Civilization," and "Liberty and Law." To say they were ably handled would scarcely do justice to the speaker. His logic is clear, forcible, unanswerable. No cant, ridicule, or bitter sarcasm escaped his lips, but a calm, convincing flood of arguments flowed so easily forth that the mind of the listener became fairly bewildered. He is surely doing much good, and is eminently capable of confounding the defenders of orthodoxy, and should, if possible, be kept constantly at work in the Liberal field.

His audiences, when here, were quite small, owing principally to shortness of time and imperfect circulation of notices of the meetings. We hope at no very distant day to again listen to Mr. Andrew while he is inspired by the presence of crowded houses. Yours, DR. H. PATRICK.

ALEXANDRIA, ONT., Dec. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for my TRUTH SEEKER. If, in consequence of its being illustrated, it costs more, I will remit the balance. I hope it will be illustrated, and the more of the right kind of pictures the better. I don't care how much more it may cost, but am sorry to say I am not in a position to canvass. The locality is not favorable and my occupations are too great. Work, work, and work, in a busy office every moment of six days in the week, and I most always hav to put in a good day's work on the seventh to catch up, as my occupations are too much for one, and not quite enough to demand an assistant, and I am one of the kind of men that cannot bear neglect of duties.

The best I can do for your paper is to giv it away as soon as I hav read it. I hav a pretty good opportunity to do so, being in a railroad depot; besides, I often mail it to parties I imagin may thereby be induced to subscribe, but what the result is of my distributing my paper in these ways I never know. However, it is the best I can do. I do it with a good intention and some hopes it may do good to your paper in particular and to the cause of universal mental liberty in general. If the paper is illustrated I will hav still more confidence in its mission work, and will realize more pleasure in dispersing the papers. I attended part of the Albany Convention; sickness prevented me from attending all the meetings. You will probably remember me asking you if you were Mr. Macdonald, at the entrance of the hall, in the afternoon of the first day. I heard Mr. Palmer deliver his lecture, "The Aristocrat." It is certainly a very good lecture, but it would take a good many such lectures to wake up the people to the fact that the morals of the people are being led in the wrong direction, and that the treasures of the world are being amassed into the wrong chest. Consequently, though I considered the lecture very entertaining, I was hardly satisfied with its occupance of that valuable time. I do not grumble, but I think and hav feelings like all men, and I am disposed, if you will allow, to giv my fellow-readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER an idea of the impression I got at the Convention. I saw Mr. Mitchell, and bought his papers and read them. In my estimation the man or woman that finds any objectionable reading in Mr. Mitchell's paper is nothing short of a bigot. If such pretended Freethinkers as those who bitterly denounced Mitchell's paper are, as they claim, emancipated from slavish prejudice, I don't want to know or see anything like what they must hav been in the first place. But while I see no objectionable reading in Mr. Mitchell's Reformer, I consider it a dead failure, as it advocates some principles that cannot and will not be listened to for probably fifty or a hundred years to come. I believe Mr. Mitchell a very good man; in fact, I believe his only fault is being too good for this Christian community of strife, ambition, and selfishness, but under existing circumstances I don't like him as an editor, and furthermore I did not like to see him sell his paper there. It gave him a degraded appearance that brought discredit on him. While I see nothing bad in Mr. Mitchell's paper, I cannot help approving of Mr. Palmer's note in the press stating that it was not the organ of the association. I think such a notice was needed. Mr. Palmer, I consider a very able man, but I would as soon read his lecture as hear him deliver it. I was well pleased with Mrs. Krekel's speech. She is an able speaker, and I always like to hear an intelligent woman speak in public anyway. Dr. Brown entertained me very much. I don't call him an orator, but he is a genial, pleasant gentleman. I also took a great fancy to Mr. Wakeman. I did not hear him say much, but he looks to me to be the embodiment of goodness, honesty, and charity. I did not hear Colonel Ingersoll, but I heard Mr. Watts, and as I had heard Mr. Ingersoll many times before, I preferred to hear Mr. Watts, as I could not hear both. Mr. Watts is a great man, of great capacity and grand appearance. He lacks nothing of an accomplished lecturer—knowledge, spirit, voice, and manly stature. Like Colonel Ingersoll, he has it all. While I call the colonel the best orator I ever heard, I cannot say that Mr. Watts is inferior to him. The two are not alike, do not speak or look alike, but each in his way is equally a great man.

Those are all the speakers I heard. I was not in good health, and consequently not in very good spirits. It was probably owing to that that I was not very successful in introducing myself to friends with whom I had imagined myself very intimate, though I had never seen them in person. I recognized every one whose picture I had seen in the ANNUAL. I made myself known to three or four, among them Mr. Remsburg. They did not kick me, but, probably owing to the low state of my spirit at the time and my natural shyness, the accolade I received as far as I went, very soon suggested me to retire without further intrusion. My best success was with a gentleman whom I did not know by name, by sight, or by "picture."

On leaving the hall after the morning meeting, I wandered aimlessly about the city, until I got pretty tired of waiting for the afternoon meeting, and there was about two hours more to wait when I met this gentleman at the door of the hall where the afternoon meeting was to be, and somehow I engaged in conversation with him, and the remainder of the time passed very pleasantly. Whoever he was—I do not know his name—I found him very precise and moderate in conversation, but level-headed and very interesting, and an advocate of universal mental liberty.

Respectfully, CHAS. LAPERCHE.

MINNEAPOLIS, KAN., Dec. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We hav just had a course of lectures delivered by the successful lecturer John E. Remsburg. The scholarly arguments and pleasing style of this gentleman won him many admirers here. His arguments are logical, convincing, unanswerable; his style plain, pathetic, eloquent, and full of happy surprises. He is just the man for the work in which he is engaged. The Liberal world can justly feel proud of such an advocate of freedom. His lectures here were preeminently gratifying to Liberals, and we hav consummated arrangements to hav him here again at an early date.

Mr. Remsburg was to giv us lectures on the following dates, Dec. 14th, 16th, and 17th, but, owing to influences from which we could not emerge, we were cheated out of his lecture "Bible Morals," which was to hav been given on the 16th. The Opera House had been engaged by the county for a term of district court, but, upon the assurance of the judge that there would be no night session, we engaged the house for the respectiv dates above mentioned. On the 15th Mr. Remsburg delivered his lecture, "Sabbath-Breaking," to a large and appreciativ audience. Next morning the judge seemed to hav been informed the nature of the lectures he had given way too, and he at once expressed his disapproval of such arguments, saying "that they were intended to break down institutions under which we had lived peaceably for hundreds of years." This man, like many other dwarf-minded judges, delights to assume a haughty air of importance and "bull-headedness." He concluded to hold court on the night of the 16th, and all the angels of hell could not persuade him to keep his word of assurance to the contrary. We tried him, but all our appeals were in vain. He held his court, and our lecture for that night had to be omitted. Happily for us, the court docket was exhausted early next morning, and we became in full possession of the house, and had the lecture, "False Claims," on the 17th. The so-called judge was actuated in his course through malice aforethought, premeditated and pre-existing prejudices, which are the highest qualities of an orthodox judge. Such a prejudiced mind is placed into power in this district to mete out justice. A pretty spectacle, indeed, but such may be expected from those who are reared by orthodox creed. We hav a board of school directors here, also, of the same faith. We first thought to hav our lecture in a school-room of capacious size, which had for some weeks been used for Methodist revival powwows, but, upon inquiry, were informed that the school-room could not be had for such purposes—Infidel lectures. Our schools are orthodox, too. The Bible is a text-book in them, and the Lord's Prayer is required to be repeated every morning by the juvenil classes. This prayer is not only repeated by them, but they are required to place their hands together, poise them a-front, cast their eyes aloft, and assume a ghastly aspect, then in concert repeat the words, imitating as near as possible the facial expressions of a teacher standing before them in this awful attitude. And notwithstanding all these disgusting scenes in our public schools some Liberals think we are advancing.

Liberals should awaken from their conservativness, and take a bold and fearless stand for the right. Get up a club in every town, village, and hamlet. Employ lecturers, make the lectures free to the public, and thereby make the community better to liv in. For every lecturer we hav to-day there should be a hundred more. Giv steady work to a thousand lecturers, men and women, for ten years, and we will hav a happier and better people everywhere.

WARREN REED.

BURR OAK, MICH., Dec. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Last week one of our local papers contained the following: "At a revival meeting of the Nashville (Barry county) Methodist Episcopal church, the other night, Leviticus McKinnis went violently insane, and, imagining that Rev. Mr. Grinnell was the devil, made a savage assault upon him, but was captured and confined before doing any serious damage."

It is safe to say that the reverend pulpit-pounder had been grossly slandering the devil up there at Nashville. Probably he had been giving the people large chunks of Genesis, and poor Leviticus went wild at the thought of Deuteronomy, and when he got his blood up, there was a hasty Exodus of large Numbers of that congregation. This crazy man deserves much sympathy. A heavy load of guilt rests on his parents. People who can in cold blood condemn one of their own progeny to wear the name of Leviticus in broad daylight, can never expect to hav anything better than a second-hand jewsharp to play on when they get up there near the great white throne.

But seriously, this Grinnell ought to be "captured and confined before doing any [more] serious damage."

If Leviticus ever recovers his wits, he ought to apologize to his Satanic majesty for declaring in public that he (old Nick) looks like a Methodist preacher.

About how many years is it likely that the queer old gentleman from "way down in Maine" will keep on whining about the Albany Convention affair that invested him with a little notoriety? In THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 19th, the queer old gentleman said he was "proud to say that he "sold a very grand poem, entitled, 'The Reign of Love and Freedom,'" etc. I imagin that a majority of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers are willing to take his word for what grandeur there may be in that poem, without hankering excessivly for the sight of a copy. But in the postscript to the queer old gentleman's letter, we get a little of his superlativly pure and only genuin Liberalism, the Liberalism of a "World's Reformer."

He says: "Why were the inspired pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER soiled with the account of that trickster and fraud, Truesdell?"

I am glad to know that the pages of your paper are not inspired, and I hav utterly failed to see where and when it has been proved that Truesdell is a trickster and fraud.

Begin with the New Year and giv us something new, Seward, and leave out the inspiration. We can get enough of that in the Bible. N. G. W.

ROCHESTER, N. H., Dec. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As yet I hav not read Remsburg's "Bible Morals" or "Sabbath-Breaking," therefore inclosed you will find amount for the same, as I would very much like to peruse them. Remsburg is a noble, brave warrior. How I should like to hav him go through New England on a lecturing tour; it would do an immense good. The large and better class are ready to listen to such a lecturer. Church going is an old, worn-out entertainment. We hav lots of churches, but as a rule very thinly attended; we hav four Protestant and two Catholic churches in Rochester, but when Colonel Ingersoll lectured to us last month we had more to hear him than all the Protestant churches combined can get out on Sunday. His subject was, "Myth and Miracle," and he handled it most grandly; the impression he left was so good that people even now are not done commenting upon it. One of the clergymen undertook to reply to it, and in regard to "Myth" agreed with the colonel; then he tackled "Miracle," but made a poor job of it. Well! what about illustrating our Bible? I am a little afraid that some of your readers do not realize what it will cost to do it; neither do I, but I do know that it will cost a goodly sum; but, however, if it can be done, I should be as glad as any one of your readers, and will hold myself in readiness to do my share as far as my circumstances will admit. Yours for truth and progress. E. J. Foss.

NORTHFIELD, MINN., Dec. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The closing of the old year and the dawning of the new reminds me of my duties, and one of my duties is to help your paper spread the light, that others may see the road that leads to a better and happier life to-day, "and to-day when to-morrow comes still."

The grand old TRUTH SEEKER has stood like the giant oak, immovable, unyielding to the storms and threatened destruction by its opponents, the enemy of truth, when it was yet but a mere twig in the battle of existence; when it was left as it were like a ship in mid-ocean without a rudder, the captain hurled behind the prison bars to swamp him and the paper, if it were possible; but stalwart men with earnest hearts stood at the helm until all was safe. And to-day THE TRUTH SEEKER stands a living monument with no fear or danger of being crushed for its bold defiance to assert its right to liv and proclaim its messages to the world. I feel like exclaiming, as did a reverend the other night at the dedication of the Young Men's Christian Association building, "I feel like congratulating myself that I am here." I feel like congratulating myself that I am on board THE TRUTH SEEKER on a life voyage.

The closing of this year reminds me, too, of the events that hav occured, the great changes that hav taken place in the death of so many of the great men. And our heroes, one by one they fall, like autumn leaves, to be numbered among the past. And how sudden was the exit of some, almost "in the twinkle of an eye!" Wonder if these are the "judgment day?" And yet the world moves on as though nothing had happened. But to our world much has happened, and more is missed, and 1885 will be long remembered by many as not a very "Happy New Year." But such is life; we know not what the morrow may bring forth.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 28th I read: "Shall we hav pictures? First page to be wholy devoted, with several others about half the size on different pages."

Why, Mr. Editor, what are you going to do with all the intellectual material that stamps upon the brain the pictures of knowledge of how to form character, of how to develop men and women into the religion of humanity, the production of our thinkers, the solid material from the brains and minds of our modern heroes? Will THE TRUTH SEEKER exchange these for pictures? Surely if there is not room enough now to publish the transactions, lectures, etc., at conventions and congresses, how and where of pictures? I hav no war with illustrated papers, but can we afford the change in as valuable a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER?

These few remarks are no commands, nor even suggestions, only a few thoughts from one who hopes for the most good to your many readers. I am with you in all that is progressiv and elevating. S. J. LENONT.

TEXAS, MICH., Dec. 11, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to congratulate you on your success in maintaining free speech in the reliable old TRUTH SEEKER. Long may it liv to demonstrate to the world that a paper can be kept to the line of equal rights.

I take it for granted by all that whenever a person comes before the public orally, or by writing, they become public property, liable to be questioned or criticised as anyone may be moved to do.

Your issue of December 5, 1885, contains an article by Ella E. Gibson, headed, "Remarkable Seances in Barre, Mass." I agree with Sister Ella that if Mr. Truesdell did not perform the manifestations attributed to the spirits of the dead, as he said he did, he is a base liar and fraud, and a man that should and will be despised by all thinking people.

Now the question arises, Is the charge against Mr. Truesdell, of fraud, trickery, and slanderous insinuation, true or false? Let his own experience as a medium tell; let thousands of men and women, scattered over this country from Maine to California, who hav witnessed independent slate-writing, tell; yes, let Ella E. Gibson tell, if she will credit her own senses instead of Mr. Truesdell's assertions.

Mr. Truesdell may be as mean as he claims to be, and in fact I do not doubt it, but when he undertakes to create a sale for his book by throwing mud at Mrs. Simpson, of Chicago, and other reliable mediums whose character is above reproach, he shows a depth of depravity seldom witnessed in modern times.

I know that independent slate-writing is a fact, that the communications, showing intelligence, are written without the aid of any visible human hand; so does Mr. Truesdell know it; so does Ella E. Gibson know it. Now, what is the object of the article referred to? Simply this, to create a sale for Truesdell's book.

Sorry to accuse a woman of prostituting her pen to such low mud-slinging, but if she does she must suffer the just retribution of her own act.

I will add in conclusion that I am convinced by my own observation that mediumship does not depend on a truthful character. I hav no doubt that Mr. Truesdell is a medium, and so much the worse. L. S. BURDICK.

BLACKBORN MINING DISTRICT, IDAHO T., NOV. 21, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: If possible, allow me a little space in the grand TRUTH SEEKER. I am not very mad, but want to fight anyway. However, I do my fighting with the pen instead of the sword; nobody will be killed in this battle. In your issue of November 7th, I notice a very bigoted and fanatical—not to say "malicious"—article, replete with misrepresentations, written by E. T. Slight, of Watsonville, Cal. Said E. T. Slight attacks Mr. T. Winter, of Cincinnati. He (or she, as I know not the sex) asserts that Mr. Winter is "superstitious, dogmatic, and egotistic," and abuses him generally, simply because he is an outspoken, genuin Materialist. Now, in the light of the evidence, Mr. Winter is perfectly right in teaching Materialism, because there is no mind without matter, and every atom of matter is just that much evidence in favor of Materialism. Matter is certainly capable of correct and perfect reasoning, as is demonstrated by the human brain. The argument of Slight is slight indeed to any person that has read Mr. Winter's articles on Materialism. In fact, it is no argument whatever, but simply a repetition of misrepresentations and slander. Because said Slight cannot disprove the teachings of Materialism (and no one can as long as matter exists), he puts forward a list of abusiv epithets, and attacks the character of Mr. Winter by conparing him as similar to Guiteau, the Christian murderer. Among other things said by said Slight, is that "T. Winter is doing more to create bad feeling between Liberal Spiritualists [How Liberal?] and Materialists than an army of Jesuits." Now, E. T. Slight, you being a Spiritualist, you are most respectfully asked to speak for "Spiritualists" only, and not for the Materialists of whom you know nothing! You say that "you despise bogus scientists as much as you do bogus mediums," etc. Then by your own logic you either don't know what science means, or else you are obliged to despise yourself, for all science is based upon Materialism.

Spiritualism is the very hight of deception, and is no more in harmony with science than theology is in harmony with science. The fact is, science, or the teachings of nature, show that both Spiritualism and theology are as false as false can be. Both are lies, and won't stand the light of science. Neither can show any facts, but are upheld by the mere assertions of impostors. Why do you turn down the lights at your so-called seances? Is light fatal to spirits?

Are you afraid of the truth? You bewail, it seems, that T. Winter has no friends, save yourself. Are you right sure you are his friend? Your letter don't show it. Let me tell you to not let that trouble you, because, as you say, "he has no friends." He may hav more than you think, and far better ones, too, than the so-called Spiritualist who claims to be a friend. Anyway, a man who holds to nothing but demonstrated truth can very likely get along quite well without all the people in the world being his friends. He has nothing to fear, unless he is to believe some of the lies that Spiritualists practice in that circle where the lights are turned down. Mr. Winter, I think, values truth far more than friends; so don't be alarmed. The truth, and not "promoted falsehoods," is what the world needs now. The churches hav for three many centuries been dispensing the latter to its credulous dupes, and the effects we all see—a world of ignorance, fanaticism, superstition, deception, tyranny, and oppression, so much that I say, if there be a God, damn him for this injustice. I worship no such monster, nor hav I any love for such a fiend of unrighteousness. The devil cannot be worse, and my vote is for the latter if either. I wish to say to E. T. Slight that "slander and misrepresentation" like he givs to Mr. Winter will convert no Materialist to Spiritualism. It takes facts, and not slander nor abuse. You might as well try to make a Christian out of Colonel Ingersoll or put the world into a half-bushel. I shall make no attempt to defend Mr. Winter, for I think he has the truth on his side and can ably defend himself. E. T. Slight can no more prove that Materialism is false than he can destroy the universe or destroy even one single atom of matter in the universe. You may try, but so far as success is concerned, you might as well spend your time praying to God. Beware how you treat the matter of Materialism. There may be, and I think there is, far more and greater power in this so-called (by Spiritualists) "vile" matter than they ever dreamed of. You may claim that you hate and detest it, but I find that you Spiritualists, like the Christians, who say they too hav an immortal soul, find that none of you seem very willing to die. You send for the doctor when sick, and if you were to be put to death I am quite sure that you would do just as much kicking as any Materialist. Why is this thus? I ask of you brave (?) Spiritualists. It seems to me that you are all a fine sample of genuin hypocrits, no more, no less. You Spiritualists hold that mind is independent of matter, yet you are afraid of death. You remind me of the polygamous Mormons in Utah; they say that they hav perfect faith in the Lord; that he will protect them, has done so and will do so, yet when the United States marshal puts in his appearance hunting polygamists they show more faith in Uncle Sam than they do in the Lord, by getting away on the jump! Just so with another class that we will call a mongrel set of "fools, hypocrits, and impostors;" they claim different, of course, but their actions giv the lie to their profession. Yours for truth and true men and women, CHAS. F. BLACKBURN.

MERRILL, MICH., Dec. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I would like the privilege of replying to J. D. Mallonee's letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 28th. He says, "I accord to woman all the rights I claim for myself, and one more, the right to be protected—protected from the necessity of participating in the public affairs of the nation." Very well; let us see what rights he, as well as other men, claim for themselvs. They claim the right of ballot, whereby they can make all laws to govern woman as well as man; to levy all taxes upon the property of our country, whether owned by man or woman, and, just or unjust, they must be paid, or the property sold. They claim the exclusiv right to manage the family finances. If a woman wants a little money, she must go to her husband and ask him for it, and, in nine cases out of ten, gets a reply similar to this: "What do you want to do with money now? It was only a few days ago that I gave you fifty cents. Women are so extravagant!" I will illustrate by giving a little incident that occurred in my store a short time ago. A gentleman came in to do a little trading, buying several things, and then called for ten cents' worth of bird-seed, saying, "My wife must hav seed for her bird, if we go without everything else," while among his purchases was fifty cents' worth of tobacco. What a time there would be heard if the married women were spending as much each day for something as useless and degrading as our would-be lords and masters spend for tobacco and liquor! How would they like to ask their wives for each penny they had to spend? It matters not how hard a wife may work, how economical she may be, striving to make one dollar take the place of two; at work all the hours of evening while her husband, with his slippers on, is seated in a big chair, reading the news, smoking his pipe, and endeavoring to make himself comfortable. It all amounts to nothing. If the husband dies, the wife has the use of a third of the property accumulated. If the wife dies, the husband takes the whole of it. These are some of the rights that J. D. Mallonee accords to woman. He also says, "My wife has sufficient confidence in my ability not to demand the right to buy her individual coal or to ask to do her individual voting." This may be true. She possibly cares to do neither. But because Mrs. Mallonee does not care for the ballot is not just cause why other women who do care should be denied. If there is but one woman in this broad land of ours who wishes to vote, she should hav that right, and be protected in it the same as a man. You hav no right to deny her this privilege. The only excuse you hav for doing so is, "She is a woman." Then again, he says, "Why do you never talk of carrying a musket, serving in the militia, police force, etc.?" Now, I would like to ask Mr. Mallonee why he is not a policeman. There is no man who is compelled to join the police force; it is from choice. Could our sex abuse the ballot any more than two-thirds of the men do theirs? How many men are there who will sell their ballot for a glass of whisky or a few shillings in money? Could women do worse? It is plain to be seen from his letter that he is afraid of the intellect of woman, if she is allowed the ballot. Again, he says, "Strong-minded girls usually die old maids." There may be something in this, but how many women are there, scattered over this beautiful land, who would hav been far better off and much happier if they had never married, but had been strong-minded enough to hav been old maids, instead of having a husband to say to them, "I will tell you all it is best for you to know, and when I say go, you can go, but if I say stay, you must stay." J. D. Mallonee calls himself a Liberal, but how he can consistently do so and hang to the teachings of Paul, is hard to tell. Paul says: "Wives, submit yourselvs unto your husbands as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is the head of the church. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything" (Eph. v, 22, 23, 24). If a young girl is thrown out in the world with no source of maintenance, what hav the men in their kindly protection left for her to do to enable her to get the necessities of life with? Oh, she can work by the week; just see the wages she can get, from one to two dollars per week, and she only has to work from five o'clock in the morning till nine at night, or if she hav education enough she can teach school, but no matter how good a school she keeps, she must not expect to get as much pay as a man who does the same work. I made teaching my business when I was young, and it was admitted that I taught a better school than they had ever had taught by a man, but they said, "We can not pay you as much, for you are a woman," thus making it an offense to be a woman. In how many instances hav I known it to be the case, where a man had both boys and girls, for him to keep them in school until about sixteen years of age and then say, "This is learning enough for my girls, but the boys must go to college;" or they must learn a trade, or hav a profession, or go into business of some sort, but the girls are left with nothing to do but look out and marry well. If the father dies the bulk of his property is left to the boys. The girls do not need any; they must marry for theirs.

This is one great reason why there are so many unhappy marriages, and so many girls who take upon themselvs the duties of a wife when they are scarcely more than children. This is the reason why only "strong-minded girls are old maids." In my girlhood I belonged to the church and was a firm believer in the Bible (and of course did not believe in woman suffrage), but, thanks be to Spiritualism, I threw off the yoke of the church and Bible, and I think if J. D. Mallonee would throw Paul's teachings overboard it would make him a true Liberal. I am now a hardware merchant, doing all the business pertaining thereto, also looking after the welfare of my home and children, and I do not think it makes me any less a woman for so doing. I calculate I hav the same right to do this another woman has to sell millinery goods. I say let each and all, old and young, men and women, do as they wish, so long as they do not trample on the rights or liberties of another. MRS. F. B. HUNT.

CANTON, ILL., Dec. 8, 285.

MR. EDITOR: It was my intention in this article to answer Mr. Mallonee, whose article appeared in your paper of Nov. 14th; but my husband makes a practice of giving away his papers, and unfortunately disposed of the one I intended to keep. I can remember only two of his points: First, the contentment of his wife in being sole controler of home and domestic affairs. Now, I will concede that Mr. Mallonee is one who considers his wife an equal partner, and treats her in the best husbandly manner that she may still be content to giv him the sole control of governmental affairs. In other words, she becomes, through his kindness, a willing slave. Many of Africa's sons and daughters were just such slaves, and some of them, when their liberty papers were read to them, shed tears of deepest sorrow at leaving their old nasters. Kind masters were scarce in slavery times, but no more so than to-day. Mr. Mallonee is only an exceptiona case. All over this country vile haunts are kept, mostly by men—saloons, gambling dens, dens of harlotry, and dram shops—where the intemperate husband spends the hard earnings of his wife, which he takes from her by brute force, together with his own. Under these difficulties she must support her family, large or small, by bending over the wash-tub by day and the needle by night, while he may go to the ballot box and deposit a vote to continue this vile outrage. Then, the widow who owns a small house and lot—in town, perhaps, for there she can more readily find work—is taxed fifty per cent higher, according to the value of her property, than the lawyer and robber of the poor who livs in a brown-stone front.

But this is only the sympathetic side of the question. Men argue the incapacity of women to hold office because of their domestic alliances. Now, when women are teaching from district to state normal schools, and are not infrequently superintendents and principals of seminaries, teaching the opposit as well as their own sex, and yet the land is filled with good wives and mothers, while many women follow the various professions, is it not reasonable to suppose that only those with sufficient experience and proper freedom would accept the nomination for an office?

I believe Mr. Mallonee states that all strong-minded women are old maids; that is, they prefer celibacy and freedom to conjugal ties to become the slave of man, physically and sexually, for, once entering that state, they are debarred from every right that goes to make up human happiness, so that they may add as much more to that of their masters. His arguments go far to prove that woman should become the political equal of man, for if equality had been dealt out to them, they would undoubtedly hav been mothers to-day, and it is such mothers we want to raise the next generations. Strong-minded women are more essential than strong-minded men in raising future statesmen. Here Mr. Mallonee loses all sight of the science of physiological laws. It is plain that should man render to woman all her rights, he would still be in advance, having had so much experience, of which she has been deprived. And this change, through the laws which govern reproduction, would evolute much better young men, who would come into being without the instinct that some other person was superior to them, but would be ruled by conscience—that self-reliant monitor withiu of justice, reason, and common sense—equal with all others, and superior to none so far as rights are concerned. And husbands would take more interest in their wives than having a good meal ready on a cold day. He would not excuse himself by going to the club-room to talk politics, but would delight to share his leisure with his wife in discussing topics of vital importance to them and their posterity. MRS. JOHN W. ABBOTT, or, MRS. FLORA A. ABBOTT.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Vision of the Future.

Once I dreamed that I flew out afar through the skies,
To the planet-fringed border of space,
Where the ages I saw with my far-seeing eyes
Roll over our own planet's face.

There was no sudden crash in the doings of men,
For they to the changes were blind;
But the nations went down and came upward again
Transforming the work of mankind.

As the cycles of time to eternity fled,
The laws and the codes of the world
Were flung to the past to remain with the dead,
Who were into oblivion hurled.

No longer the thief or the murderer played
On mortal's historical stage;
Religion and churches were silently laid
In the dust of a barbarous age.

Benevolence swaying the nations of earth,
War's billows no longer I saw.
The era of glory had taken its birth;
Golden Rule was religion and law.

Osceola Mills, Pa. WM. SCOTT.

Baby Lillian.

In the garden 'mid glory and bloom
Was the patter of Lillian's feet,
And a blossom or fruit was the same,
A something "Dest pity to eat."

Two years was her measure on earth,
But we listen with joy and surprise,
As she gathers the fruit to her hand,
"O-o—isn't it lovely?" she cries.

She saw the green globes as they hung,
And slowly, with patience, she learned
To wait for the ripening fruit,
'Till the colors in brilliancy burned.

'Mid the cherries or strawberries lost,
We search for her hither and yon,
When, with fingers and lips all aglow,
She cries, "All the ripe ones is gone."

And the rosy-cheeked apples were picked
By her fingers, so tiny and small
That both of her hands were employed
To encompass a single red ball.

She fancies the blaze of the stars,
For the shine was maturity's type,
And she startled us all by the quest,
"Can we eat up the stars when they's ripe?"

Ah, darling, we hope you may feast
Upon dainties celestial and rare,
And the glories of worlds beyond reach
Be as free to your touch as the air.

Who knows but in ages to come,
When no longer the mortal debars,
As an essence eternal, at last
You may gather the fruit of the stars?

ISAAC A. POOL.

The Hindoo New Year's Day.

I believe that all people who count their days and months celebrate the first day of the year as a holiday in some form or other. Some fill it with religious rites, as the Chinese; others with social observances, as the Americans, and others again do not forget to sanctify their business interests in the name of the gods, while social hospitalities are made to contribute to the same end by filling customers with good cheer. With the Hindoos the celebration of New Year's Day includes all these three forms, and a fourth, for that is the great day for offering prayers and gifts on behalf of the spirits of departed ancestors, at the same time that the future is looked after by keeping on good terms with the present. It is, in fact, observed as a connecting link between the past and the future. Everybody is expected to be at once devout, joyous, and hopeful on that day. The departed ghosts hav their offerings of rice and banana, the children rejoice in sweets, young folks go about making calls, and the business men open their books for the ensuing year. Another name for New Year's Day in the language of the Hindoos is the "Day of New Books."

This day comes off about the 15th of April of the Christian year. It is also the first day of the summer months of India. A set of ceremonies is performed and continued by the well-to-do throughout the first month, whose meaning is to show the ways and means of making charity to the neighbors and to the poor most useful and acceptable during the ensuing hot days. Water-pitchers made of earth or metal are consecrated with their covers filled with fruits, peas, and molasses, and are then distributed among the family grocer, barber, washwoman, and other dependants and poor neighbors. Those who can afford continue these gifts from time to time during the first month, with the addition of fans, umbrellas, and summer clothing. Benevolent people lay the foundation stones of charitable institutions, such as asylums and dispensaries, on the first day of the year with religious observances. Tanks for public use are also begun to be dug on the same day, and rich and poor plant trees by the highways to giv shade to the sun-burnt traveler. There is a summer practice in country districts of India, where shops and inns are rare, of supplying tired wayfarers with cold water and peas and molasses, free of charge. It is begun on New Year's Day. Small houses can be seen at intervals on the highways of travel, kept up at the cost of rich men, or by some old couple who wish to secure happiness in the life hereafter by spending their last days and small savings in relieving the sufferings of summer travelers. The host in one of these houses invites the wearied passer-by and offers him the cooling refreshment and rest for his tired limbs. Large tubs full of water are kept outside near the door for the use of cattle and passing animals.

Young married ladies without children, and not burdened with the cares of the household, hav a peculiar summer hospitality of their own, confined to their own class. Each lady invites another of about her own age to be her visiting guest every afternoon of the month, beginning from New Year's Day. When the guest arrives, the hostess performs the toilet for her, perfumes her dress and hair with scents, and finally treats her to sweetmeats and fruits. At the end of the month she presents her guest with a new dress and a small sum of money. As the Hindoo female dress is made of only one piece of cloth, it does not cost more than a small fraction of the price of an ordinary American lady's dress, and thus all young Hindoo women in moderate circumstances can enjoy this luxurious method of cultivating friendship. The hostess, in the supposed instance, is herself the guest of another young friend, whom she visits either before or after she attends to her own, while her guest of the present year may be her hostess of the next. So it is all made up even.

Little unmarried girls also learn in the first day and month of the year to keep themselvs busy with thoughts upon a very important affair. Marriage is the great idea about girls that troubles the heads of their parents, as it fills their own minds so soon as they begin to think. Every Hindoo girl must be married, though widows are not alowed to marry again—thus every woman being given one chance. There are lots of widows in India who may never remarry, but no old maids; and a Hindoo girl is as much afraid of being left a widow as an American girl of growing up to be a spinster. Little girls, therefore, try to appease the cruel god of death, Pluto, so that he may not carry off their would-be husbands, by the ceremony of the Jama-pooker, or death's tank (Jama meaning the god of death, Pluto). It is performed in this way: A little tank, about six inches or one foot square, is dug in the courtyard of the house. It is filled with fresh, cold water every morning. Fish and crocodiles made of clay are sunk in it, while the newest flowers cover its body and sides. In the center is placed a clay image of Pluto. The worshiper gets up in the morning before sunrise, washes herself clean, and puts on a newly-washed cloth. She then sits by the side of the tank, with her face toward the rising sun, and begins pouring cold water on the clay god, thus to cool his ever-angry head. After the bath the god receives an offering of eatables and flowers, while the devotee says the following prayer:

"I pray thee, O Pluto,
Don't make me a widow.
I'll marry but once,
But will not hav a dunce.
May I dine on cake and cream,
And ever liv in a golden dream."

But the most important ceremony of the Hindoo New Year's Day comes off in the evening in the shops of the tradespeople, the ceremony from which, as I hav mentioned before, the day has received the second name of the "Day of New Books." There is no business during the day, but in the evening all the shops, newly repaired and cleaned whenever means permit, are illuminated and made to wear a festiv show. A rich feast of sweets and fruits is spread in the inside, while music tempts the guests—the customers of the shop—to come in and partake of the good cheer. But things in this world are seldom so pleasant as they at first seem. At the entrance to the shop, behind the counter, sits the book-keeper, or the master himself, with his new ledger opened, a new pen in his hand, and a new ink-bottle filled with the newest ink. There he is, ready to make entries of all receipts from his guests in payment of debts of the past year. It is considered both mean and inauspicious for a guest not to deposit at least one silver piece. Those who are not indebted put in something as an advance for their future custom, but usually everywhere there are more debtors than creditors. Practically, this custom is a means of collecting debts by bribing one's customers with social hospitality, and, as a rule, most people do not grudge paying off a portion of their accounts in a way that makes it least felt. Once, however, the entry-money, so to call it, has been paid, the guest may make himself completely easy with his surroundings and enjoy to his fill. Those who cannot make up the deposit-money hav to send in excuses of "hot weather," or "exhaustion from making calls," etc., for it would seem so mean to stay away from a trader's hospitality for fear of being obliged to pay a just debt, often in not more than only a fraction. Indeed, very few are found delinquent, and the plan on the whole works very well. The practical Yankee might on this point take a lesson from the Hindoo, who is generally thought to be given up altogether to mere meditation.

Such is New Year's Day in India, beginning with the worship of dead forefathers and ending with making ready for the next day's business. The first thing a devout shopkeeper does every morning after the opening of his new books is to credit a small sum to the name of his patron deity. The total amount is collected at the end of the year, and scrupulously spent in charitable offerings in the deity's name. AMRITA LAL ROY.

Don't Meddle with Firearms.

We often read of accidents happening to children who play with guns and pistols, and sometimes those who do are maimed for life or killed outright. The best plan for children is to avoid touching a gun or pistol, for they are liable to be discharged in handling, and the mischief they do can never be undone. We are led to these remarks by a recent letter from one who has occasionally furnished interesting matter for the Children's Corner.

He writes: "About a month ago, little Howard [his grandson] importuned his papa to let him go with two of their neighbors gunning. When about to return home, and ten miles away, Mr. P——'s gun exploded, and the contents entered the dear little boy's knee, destroying the joint, breaking the kneepan, splitting the lower bones, and tearing off the flesh in strips. When they reached home the surgeons were summoned, and a telegram sent to Howard's uncle, who is also a physician and surgeon. When he arrived, he, as well as the others, saw at once what was to be done, and the limb was amputated above the knee. The dear little man stood it bravely, but the long ride, the terrible nature of the accident, and long delay, left him very weak and exhausted. Little Howard's chances for living or dying were then about equal. When the operation was over, and the little sufferer placed safely in bed, then his friends broke down, and wept as if their hearts would break. When his auntie saw him the first time after the amputation, he held out his little hand and said, 'Well, Aunt M——, this is pretty bad for a fellow to go through life with one leg.' He said it would make no difference so long as he was in bed covered up, but when he got well he was afraid the boys might laugh at him." But we are sure no sensible, true-hearted boy would laugh at such a misfortune. The boys will be sorry, and try to be gentle, and careful not to injure dear little Howard in playing their boyish games. We are all so sorry for this trouble that has come upon him so early in life, but we are glad his life is spared, and we trust he will yet be a great blessing to his friends and the world. We assure Howard he has all our sympathy, and we hope he will hav good courage, and bear his trials bravely, like a dear good boy that he is.

Of course Howard was not to blame for the accident, for it might hav injured one of the men had either been in the way when the gun exploded. But some boys get injured by the careless use of guns and pistols, and we never like to see one in the hands of an inexperienced person. They are dangerous, and the best way is to let them severely alone.

S. H. W.

Our Puzzle-Box.

1.—MATHEMATICS.

A cask has two spigots, one exhausting at the rate of one gallon per hour, the other one quart per hour. When one-fifth of the water is exhausted, the small spigot has been turned on three times as long as the large one, but in ten minutes more the large one has been turned on half as long as the small one. How long would it take to empty the cask, both being turned on at once? WM. SCOTT.

2.—MATHEMATICS.

Write in figures thirteen thousand twelve hundred and eleven. WM. SCOTT.

3.—SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

All matter, when in motion, stays so until it comes in contact with other matter. Now, if an iron ball were suspended in a vacuum by means of a magnet, i. e., if it were so arranged that the power of the magnet would counteract the power of gravitation, and if the ball were put in motion on its axis, would it ever stop? If so, what would stop it? WM. SCOTT.

4.—RIDDLE.

Please solve my riddle, puzzlers smart,
And giv Miss Wixon strange delight;
Something she loves with all her heart,
And hates the same with all her might.

ISAAC A. POOL.

5.—PI.

Ader ot eb uert ginthon nac eden a eil
A fluat chiwh sened ti smot worgs owt bertyhe.

G. W. WILLIAMS.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, DEC. 19, 1885.

1. A. $35; B. $25.

2. Behead, headdress, Dresden, deny, icy, season, sunset, settee, teaspoon, spoonbill, bilbo, boasting, stinking.

3. Fire-arms.

Solvers of puzzles two weeks ago whose names came too late for insertion last week: I. A. Pool, G. H. Scheel. Solvers last week: G. W. Williams, Kate Brandon.

The "Jasper Nodule" prize puzzle offered by I. A. Pool has been correctly solved by Etta Phillips.

SOLUTION: A Toll-gate. Atoll. Poll. Gate (obs.) for goat. Agate, the gem, and a kind of type. A, the negativ or Greek privativ, as well as indefinit article.

Correspondence.

FIDELITY, MO., Dec. 12, 1885.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: I seat myself this morning to write you a few lines to rectify my mistake in my other letter I wrote. Ma says that all little folks make mistakes more or less, and sometimes more than less, and I am no exception to the rule. My birthday has passed since I wrote to you; I was eleven years old. I go to school. I study reading, arithmetic, geography, grammar, and spelling, and I am as far advanced as any of my age and size. We hav a literary here every Friday night. I received my calendar in good time and order, and was well pleased with it, but I could not understand it, and I got my teacher to look over it, and he can understand it and he said he would explain it to me. Nothing more at present, only I remain your friend, as ever, VICTORIA GRUBB.

[All are liable to mistakes, and Victoria's are not serious ones. We are pleased to reckon her with our good girls.—ED. C. C.]

NEW BRAUNFELS, TEX., Dec., 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Be not angry with J. Jones or with me. Love is for all living the highest happiness and also the cheapest delight.

The poor and rich, the sick and sound,
Can hav a feeling heart,
For young and old there is no bound
To love the good on earth.

I hope you may find this, if not in a dictionary, nevertheless right and able to be answered in your honorable "Corner."

Forever yours truly,
EPISCOPUS INFIDELIS.

[Now, J. Jones, we hope you are satisfied. The above is a very wise, good, and true answer to your question; "If love is not a puzzle, what is it?"—ED. C. C.]

MARY B.-F.—Your poem was received too late for Christmas week.—ED. C. C.

MONTGOMERY, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1885.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: We take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and find much pleasure and profit in reading its many pages, especially in the Children's Corner, which affords us much amusement on Sunday evenings.

Although we are not exactly children, we are all (four males) Freethinkers, and the only outspoken ones in this vicinity. There are others, but silent ones. Still, our cause is advancing.

Yours, respectfully, WM. S. GALLOWAY.

[It is brave to be steadfast to principle in the midst of opposing influences, but it pays in the end to be true.—ED. C. C.]

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy
A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.
Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethough would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of month for all time past and present and some, and other useful information. Price, cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Passers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents

PRICE, $1.25.

THE STORY HOUR.

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

BY SUSAN H. WIXON.
Author of APPLES OF GOLD, ALL IN A LIFETIME, Etc.

WITH NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Between the dark and the daylight, when the night begins to lower, Comes a pause in the day's occupations that is known as the children's hour."
LONGFELLOW.

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED BY THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
22 CLINTON PLACE.

RELIGION OF HUMANITY.

FOUNDED BY AUGUSTE COMTE.

The Society of Humanity, in the name of M. Pierre Laffitte, the venerable successor of Auguste Comte, and the Positivists and workingmen of Paris, to the working people of New York city and vicinity,

Greeting:

All who are desirous of acquiring a knowledge of the philosophic and religious teachings of Auguste Comte are hereby invited without distinction of creed, nationality, color, or social condition to assist at a systematic reading of the

"GENERAL VIEW OF POSITIVISM."

The reading will commence next Sunday morning, 10 o'clock, at 97 Market st., and will be continued every Sunday until completed. No collection.

1t1 RICHARD K. FOSTER, Librarian.

THE SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

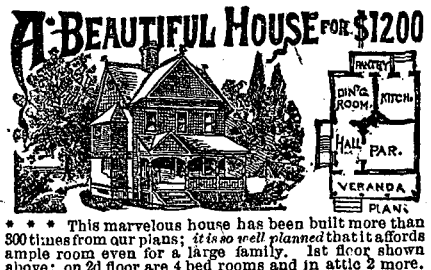
Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by



THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE FOR $1200

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney. Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—
J. E. REMSBURG.
Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY
CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SEND TO ELMINA FOR THEM.

DIANA.—A startling book! Original in theory, scientific in treatment, and unobjectionable in language. None should marry without reading "Diana." Sexual satisfaction through magnetic influence. Love rendered permanent and lasting. Third edition, enlarged, revised, and improved. Price, 25 cents.

SOCIOLOGY.—Consisting of essays, poems, short lives of Land Reformers and other reforma ory topics; worth $2; bound in cloth and sold for 50 cents. Written by Masquerier, a good old man who has spent a lifetime in trying to help humanity.

THE DARWINS.—By Elmina. Price, 50 cents. "I have read 'The Darwins,' and am pleased with it; and so are all to whom I have lent it. Were such works more plenty, Christians would be less numerous."—D. Nielson. Three books for $1 00, and Green's Freethought Directory, price, $2 00, sent also for $1.10 $2.10 for all four.

Address MRS. E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

A Dilemma.

Why cannot I know my ending,
Or is there an end at all?
I'm puzzled to know the wherefore,
The span of life's so small.

When I trace my first beginning
I'm puzzled the worst of all,
For I seem to hav lived forever,
A beginning I cannot recall.

I go back to my first recollections
To discover a fragment of truth,
But that period of life is silent;
Life's riddle begins in youth.

Were it wise, then, to seek the unknowable,
Or grapple with the winds that blow,
Or examin the world in detail,
To learn something I ne'er can know?

Could I grasp the whole of creation,
Or toy with the stars above,
I should only hav this revelation:
That the essence of life is love.

Mr. Watts and the Nine Demands.

I hav several times of late been called upon to explain to a hostil audience the meaning, purpose, and bearings of the Nine Demands. I hav never felt that I did it well, nor that I met clearly many of the mental objections raised by my hearers. I confess that I hav never heard them explained to my own satisfaction. I do not wish to be understood, when I say this, as meaning that I do not see their justice and understand their necessity; but this is as a person who is on that side. Now, I always try to see every subject from the other side, and to present it in such a way as to carry conviction to myself if I were on the orthodox side.

Now, from this outlook I say I confess that I hav never yet heard or read what wholly satisfied me as a fair, full, and happy presentation of the claims of these Demands to general recognition and acceptance. In other words, I hav not yet seen them in what I believe to be their best clothes and their fairest face. This being the case, I hav read quite closely all that I hav seen upon this subject in the hope that each time I would find just what I wanted and so be able myself to deal more successfully with the subjects hereafter. Therefore was I much pleased yesterday when, with the compliments of Mr. Charles Watts, I received in my mail two little pamphlets, one of which was on this subject.

I hav this moment read it, and while it comes nearer than anything else I hav yet read upon the subject to meeting my necessities, I am only fair to my own mental obtuseness when I say that I still feel that their very best clothes hav not yet been put upon all of those nine infants.

Several of them look better to me than they ever did before, for which I most heartily thank Mr. Watts, but I am still laboring under the belief that if I were a "Christian legislator" I would not be hit very hard by the charms of the others.

In other words, I hav not seen these Demands clothed and illustrated in what I should call a "taking" way, if one chanced to be by education or prejudice on the side opposed to them.

I do not say that this may not hav been done, I only say that I hav not had the pleasure of seeing or hearing it, and my own ingenuity in this direction impresses me as particularly lame.

The eighth Demand impresses me as one susceptible of many and apt illustrations, and yet it comes out, even in Mr. Watts's paper (as it seems to me), always a little wanting in forcefulness, and aptness, and amplitude of illustration from a Christian's outlook.

I trust that Mr. Watts, and other able writers upon this subject, will not infer that I intend any adverse criticism upon their work. Upon the contrary, I am peculiarly pleased with Mr. Watts's success in this particular work, but I am simply stating my own difficulty, and my own desire to see something yet a little fuller, plainer, more striking, if you please, upon one or two points.

I was a trifle amused by one point in Mr. Watts's work. After a very beautiful, forceful, and direct exposition and explanation of the position accorded to women by all real Liberals; after showing that no one who understands the first principles of justice could ask for himself rights and privileges which he is unwilling to allow to women, he unwittingly shows that the old "Adam" is still contending for lodgment in his soul, or rather that he has lodgment there all unknown to his antagonistic host.

I am sure that Mr. Watts does not even know this himself, and it is for that very reason that I take the liberty to mention it right here to show him (and others) how deeply rooted is masculin egotism, and how all unconsciously do the freest of men forget that woman is an object of serious and equal consideration at all.

It is just this little paragraph to which I refer. "In this country caste is abolished and political emancipation achieved. In the eyes of the law every man is equal to his fellow-man; every honest person [the italics are mine] has a voice in the government and a share in making the laws by which he is governed."

Now, I don't believe that Mr. Watts can intend us to believe that there are no "honest" women in America, so I judge that it is his opinion (in common with the church dictum and legal records) that she is not a person at all; or else it is simply the force of masculin egotism which has to be waked up every morning afresh to the startling fact that man is not all of humanity, and that, after all, most likely women are folks; that "political emancipation has been achieved" by only one-half of the citizens of America, and caste does still cut a rather lively figure in a society where one-half forgets that the other half are persons at all, fully twenty-three hours out of every twenty-four.

The other hour is occupied in telling woman that she is an angel. HELEN H. GARDENER.

Book Notices.

SABBATH-BREAKING. By John E. Remsburg. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price 25 cents.

When anything written by John E. Remsburg comes before my vision I always anticipate a treat, and am never disappointed when I lay his work down.

"Sabbath-Breaking" is like everything that I hav seen from its author's pen, clear cut, incisiv, full of sound logic, and comprehensiv to the very core of the subject treated. It is the best thing I hav ever read on the Sunday or Sabbath question. And as we all wish to be posted on this matter, the way to do that is to read the evidence as prepared by competent authors, and this work of Mr. Remsburg's contains the gist of the whole Sabbath affair from the beginning to the present time.

Every man, woman, and child should read this little volume, and gain new inspiration from its eighty-three pages to work for the emancipation of Sunday from all superstitions and frauds, until it becomes, in the grandest sense, the people's day, "the golden clasp that binds together the volume of the week."

SUSAN H. WIXON.

Upon my return here some days ago from a little lecture trip (which has been duly reported to you, I see, in your letter department) I found in my mail a copy of "Sabbath-Breaking," with the compliments of Mr. Remsburg.

I had not read it before, although I had seen so many notices of it, and although I always knew that whatever Mr. Remsburg writes well repays the reader for the time and money expended upon it.

His writings impress me as peculiarly fitted for use in pioneer work.

They are simple, direct, clear, forcible, and dignified, without being "heavy."

They bring much needed information within the range of the many on a plane easily understood and remembered. Mr. Remsburg makes no effort to display his own learning at the expense of simplicity and clearness.

Profound works are all very well for the profound, but upon these subjects that class of readers are few, and they already know the facts in the case, while "the million" neither know nor will they ever learn from "solid" or philosophical writings.

I believe that I do not say too much when I say that most of the people whom I meet socially are, at least, of average intelligence and mental power, yet not one in fifty of them could be induced to read Darwin, Haeckel, or Frederic Harrison, and that one already knows the false claims and impositions of the church.

Therefore it is most important to make use of the more easily assimilated mental food offered by such writers as Mr. Remsburg.

A mistake is very often made in thinking that dull or heavy works show a greater degree of scholarship, just as stupidity frequently passes for dignity, or silence for wisdom.

There are Liberals who, proceeding upon this basis, say "Ingersoll is superficial," because he is humorous, and because he does not lie awake nights trying to drag in an "authority" from ancient literature.

They do not appear to discover that while they are laboring to impress the world by their scholarship and profundity he has laughed the whole matter out of court and left them neither client, council, nor case.

They do not appear to realize that while they dig and build and plan and construct essays of the hypercritical type to prove to an already convinced audience (or else to no audience at all) the philosophical inconsistencies of transubstantiation, he has lightly shot the prop out from under it with a little arrow of wit or ridicule in the presence of an audience so large and so busy that it has never even heard of his learned critic. It is all very well (and no one recognizes it more than I) for those who can do only the heavy work to keep at it. Let them boom away with their great hundred-pound balls once an hour if it is their pleasure and inclination so to do. If they hit a man fairly there is no doubt that he will be pulverized, but in the mean time the Gatling gun and the flying artillery hav brought down several thousand who, if not mashed quite so flat, are sufficiently disabled for all practical purposes, after all. I heard a young man say, only the other day, that he "simply could not wade through Spencer." "Hav you read Ingersoll?" I asked. "Well, I should think so, and I don't see any use in fooling with those dry, old fellows a year or two to get what he givs in one lecture," said he.

So with Mr. Remsburg's works. He has brought what it would take a vast deal of "digging" to obtain into the small compass of his little pamphlets and dressed it up in simple language and in a style easily grasped by his readers or his audience.

In my opinion no better missionary tracts can be sent out by the benevolently inclined than Mr. Remsburg's pamphlets. H. H. G.

I hav received from the Truth Seeker Company a pamphlet of something over eighty pages, bearing the title, "Sabbath-Breaking." I would like to say to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that the whole subject is so thoroughly disposed of by the author that nothing remains to be said. The Jewish Sabbath, with its exactions; the Christian Sabbath, its origin; the character of Constantine, its founder, and the Puritan Sabbath, with all the enormities and cruelties practiced upon such persons who hav failed to keep the day as the bigots who hav been in power hav required—all this and much more is in this little book. If I were young enough for the task, I would like to go before the New York legislature armed with this little book of indisputable facts and unanswerable arguments, and if there were not a majority of Christian ministers members of that body, I should hope to so act upon it that it would set about abrogating the Sunday laws, so that all citizens could use the time of Sunday as best suited his or her inclination. The price of the pamphlet is 25 cents. Its worth as a campaign document is not to be measured in money.

LUCY N. COLMAN.

Syracuse, Dec. 13, 1885.

ST. MATTHEW BEFORE THE COURT.

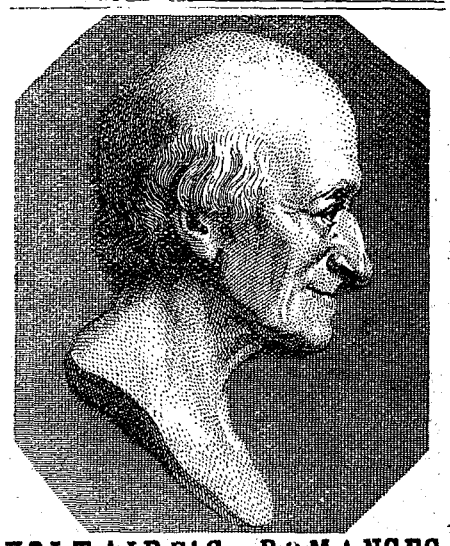
By some circumstance the report of the trial of this famous saint got mislaid since last summer, when it was received by me, and has only just come to light.

I took it up to glance over its pages, and instead, read it thoroughly, to the end, interested with the method of treating an old story, admiring the ability and ingenuity of the prosecuting attorney, Secularist, and laughing till I shook myself at his grim satire and complete winding up of the poor prisoner, St. Matthew, who is certainly found guilty of forgery, but as he turned state's evidence and told all about the wicked transaction, he is allowed to go free.

Matthew is "hauled over the coals" in the court, in a very clever manner, and the whole trial is well worth reading.

"St. Matthew Before the Court" is for sale by the Truth Seeker Co., and nobody will regret the slight outlay for its perusal.

S. H. W.



"The Next World Interviewed," so far as mechanical appearance goes, is a handsome book, and contains 252 pages. It is by Mrs. S. G. Horn, being alleged communications from people long since passed to dust. The general method of the work is after that invented by the Star Publishing Company, of Springfield, Mass., i.e., persons who were Materialists in life are Spiritualists in death and, through a medium, confess their error in believing that having died a person is necessarily dead. If the book is true, this absurd belief is fully exploded. Among the persons "interviewed" are Harriet Martineau, who contributes an article on the entertaining subject of "Life in the Spirit World;" Titian givs some "Art Notes;" Fenimore Cooper tells an Indian story; Herodotus talks on "Prehistoric Man;" Dean Stanley discusses "Spiritualism: the True and the False;" the pope sends out an encyclical on "Bless, and Curse not," and various other more or less intelligent though dead persons add their mite to make up the fat volume. Thomas R. Knox, 813 Broadway, should be addressed for information as to the price of this remarkable book.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM: The Present and Future Republic of North America. By A Capitalist. A handsomely printed cloth-bound book of 448 pages. Price, $1.50.

One of the leading signs of the times is the great attention which is given to social problems, and the number of persons seeking for a remedy for the evils with which society is now afflicted. The author of this work thinks he has found it in Rational Communism.

As a picture of the evils of the competitiv system it is certainly a success. It takes, one after the other, the leading causes of trouble and shows their unsatisfactory results. As to the efficiency of the proposed remedy, we do not feel competent to judge. Before Rational Communism could be established, men would hav to change their character, and they would no longer be the men we are acquainted with. For our part, while we believe that co-operation and Communism are improvements on the actual competitiv system, yet we also believe that before they can be made successful on a large scale, a regular training will hav to be gone through, which can best be had in small associations. The book is both interesting and useful, and we hope will meet with a large sale among persons interested in social studies.—The Sociologist.

Referring to the last-mentioned work, the author, though he makes no claim to great learning and scholarship, is evidently a man of superior intellectual strength—one who has had an activ experience in the "struggle for existence" and found his "fitness" to survive by surviving. He is gifted with a good heart, we think, a lively imagination, and power to transfer his fancies into living, stirring words. He presents the reader with a matter-of-fact and truthful description of the present republic under our every-fellow-for-himself system, which he denominates one of "spoilation," and then givs a fancy picture of what he imagins the future republic will be under a co-operativ community system which he thinks will follow. We hav grave doubts as to the possibility of his "vision" ever coming to pass, and we hav still graver doubts as to whether, were it to ever come to pass, it would bring about that moral and social improvement which he predicts. Having thus expressed our doubts on these points, we take pleasure in assuring our readers that the moral tone of the work is unobjectionable, and the most partisan opponent of the theories advanced therein can not fail to find it a very entertaining and instructiv work.—Independent Pulpit.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Pros · Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

TESTIMONIALS:

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nut-shell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT
AND
THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.
BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

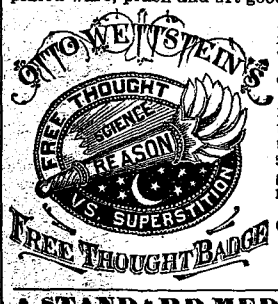
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.



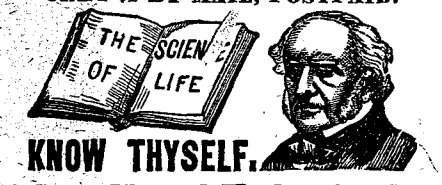
BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusively all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

News of the Week.

THE pope is seriously ill of kidney disease.

THE population of Chicago is now placed at 750,000.

THERE is to be a crematory built in the Père la Chaise Cemetery at Paris.

THE number of deaths from small-pox in Montreal during the late epidemic was over three thousand.

THE Newark, N. J. children sent to Paris to be treated by M. Pasteur for hydrophobia are progressing favorably.

ABOUT $112,000 is now the grand total of the Grant monument fund. The sum of $500 has lately been received from China.

THE architect of Mrs. A. T. Stewart's cathedral at Garden City, L. I., has been obliged to bring suit to recover pay for his services.

A BIG amount of money is being subscribed in this country for the benefit of Parnell, the Irish politician, lately returned to the English Parliament.

THERE were but twenty arrests in this city on the 27th for violation of the Sunday excise law. The facilities for getting a drink, however, were never better.

THIS is the London Times' recipe for solving the Irish problem: "Expel the Parnellites from the House of Commons, and establish martial law in Ireland."

AUGUST SPIES, the prominent Chicago Freethinker and Socialist, last Monday addressed an audience of Congregational ministers of that city on the aims of Socialism.

PASTOR DOWNS, of Boston, has begun legal proceedings to regain possession of the Bowdoin Baptist church, from whese pulpit he has been expelled for immorality.

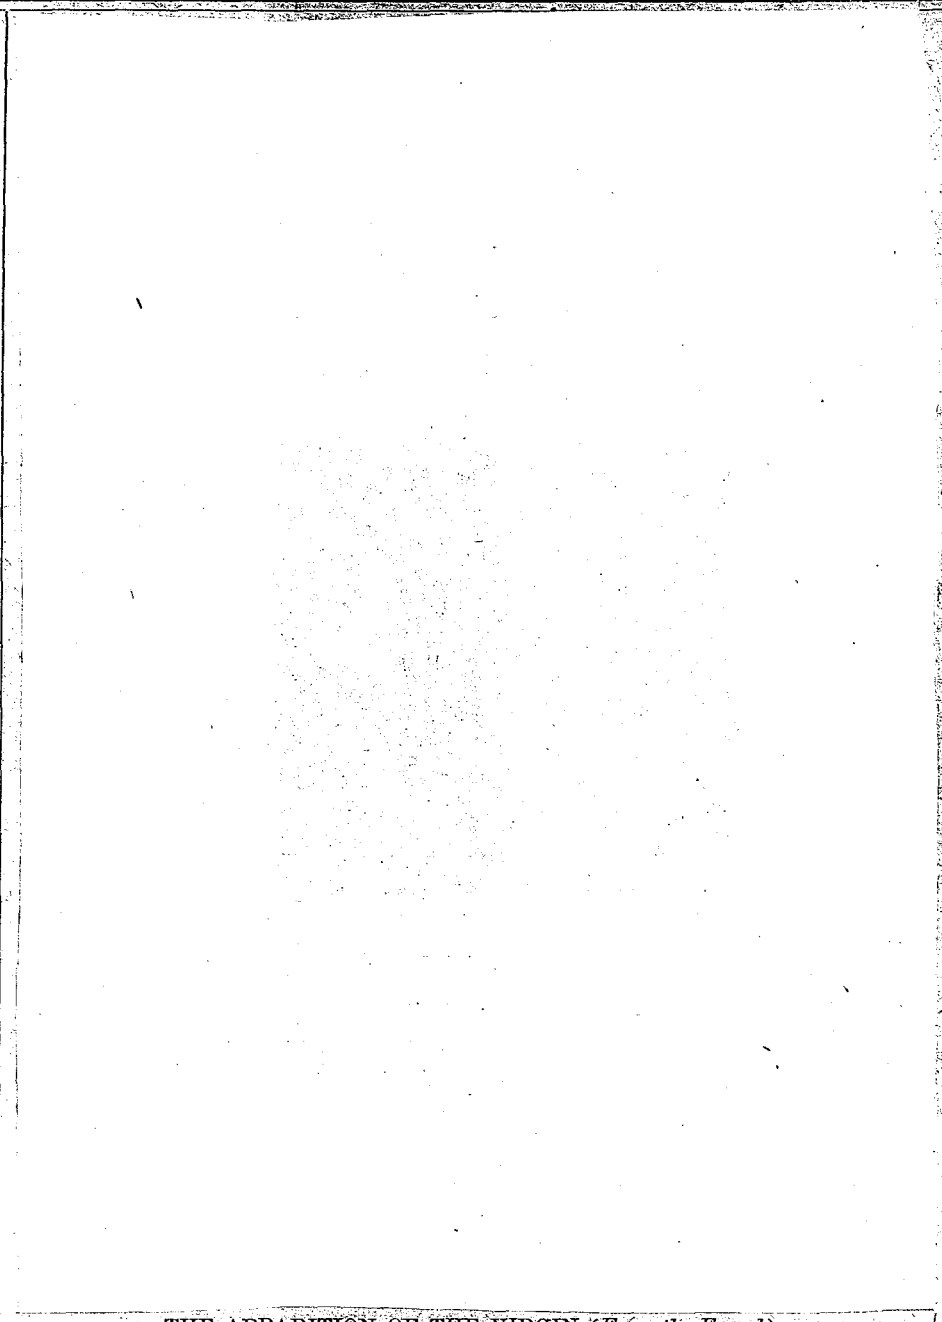
POPE LEO is said to hav an income of $1,500,000 annually, and it is stated on the authority of Monsignor Capel that the pope's personal expenses are limited to $2.50 a day.

SILAS E. CHEEK, a prominent real estate agent at Clinton, Mo., has fled to Canada, being a defaulter for over $10,000. He left this note: "I am a thief, scoundrel, knave, and liar."

THE Rev. Howard Crosby has written a letter to John Swinton's Paper recommending legal limitations of individual wealth. He should write another recommending equal taxation of all wealth.

A RATHER repulsiv novelty is shown in a London theater, and is called "A Dance in Sheol." Those who hav seen it say it ought not to be performed anywhere outside the place from which it derives its name.

CHRISTMAS falling on Friday, Catholics were allowed to eat meat on that day without imperiling the salvation of their souls. This comes about through a special dispensation of the pope, which does not apply to New Year's day.



AN unruly lot of Christians caused a riot in Detroit, Mich., last Saturday. They were the congregation of a Catholic church. The police had difficulty in suppressing the disturbance, and the militia were held in readiness to assist.

NEW ENGLAND societies in various places hav recently met to celebrate the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, now happily deceased. The societies hold their celebrations on diverse dates, as they cannot agree exactly as to when the Pilgrims landed.

IT was a sad case, that of the Rev. John R. Elmore, a Baptist minister residing near Clayton, Ia. Two months ago he was expelled from his pulpit for bigamy, and the night before Christmas he went to his neighbor's fishpond, cut a hole in the ice, and drowned himself.

THE Western Union Telegraph Company sent out its linemen on Christmas morning, and they cut six miles of the wires of the United Lines Telegraph Company. Arrests will be made when the offenders are discovered. The trouble is over the question who owns the poles.

THE Dutch Reformed ministers who listened to John Swinton last week on the labor problem held another meeting on the 28th to discuss what he had told them. The most of them agreed that Mr. Swinton did not represent the "best class" of Socialists, to which the religious Mr. Henry George belongs. It was the duty of ministers, they thought, to take advantage of the present agitation and pour into the bleeding wounds the healing truths of the gospel.

THE APPARITION OF THE VIRGIN (From the French).
A supernatural appearance which takes place whenever the priests are short of cash.

Odds and Ends

"I WOULDN'T worry about the cholera, dear," said a lady to her husband; it isn't at all likely it will reach this country." "I don't know about that," he replied, nervously; "it might reach us any moment, and we might hav a frightful time. I—I think I had better pay the back pew rent anyway."

THE Rev. Dr. Duryea is in favor of Sunday newspapers. He says: "If people won't go to church, they must do something, and a good newspaper is better than a bad book." Still, if the fishing is good, a man can worry through the day very nicely without a book or newspaper. We don't suppose the reverend gentleman ever thought of that.

MRS. COLONEL YERGER recently called on Rev. Surplus Eel. "Parson, I want you to come right off to my sick husband. He has got the smallpox." "Why don't you go to your family pastor? You don't belong to my congregation," replied Parson Eel. "You see, Parson Eel, my own pastor is a very good man, and it would be a pity for him to die, so I thought I'd come for you. You never would be missed; you never would be missed, Parson Surplus Eel.

WE are gratified to learn that Mr. Hormusjee Edulgee Kotwai, of Bombay, has been presented with a silver medal by Mr. Shapurgee Sorabjee Bengalee, and a revolver by Mr. Khan Bhahrdur Dadhabboy Pudumjee, in honor of having killed his one hundredth tiger. It seems rather odd, though, that his daring achievement was not also recognized by some trifle from our old friend Bohdugger Munkyrench Jujupahste Bhoy Sorghumgee Humdrum Bojum. He must hav been out of town.

IN a certain small town the members of the various religious sects were very tolerant toward each other. The clergymen, in particular, were very friendly. On the occasion of the Jewish rabbi's silver wedding, he invited the Protestant clergyman and also the Roman Catholic priest. When the reverend clergymen were enjoying the good cheer set before them, the priest said to the rabbi: "I know that you are a very liberal-minded gentleman, but could you bring yourself to eat pork?" "Certainly I could relish some ham, at least on one occasion." "And that would be?" "At the marriage dinner of your reverence."

DERE'S a mighty lot o' people w'ats got heaps o' common sense,
Dat ain't alluz perticular about dere mood and tense;
You passes lots of pretty girls dat's hid behind a veil,
And dere's piles of 'sponsibility rests on an iron rail.
'Taint the bigges' slickes' hoss dat makes the quickes' time;
'Taint alluz from de riches' man the poor one gits de dime.
It's a mighty slender policy to go far out to sea
In a boat w'at's rotten to de core, to show how brave you be.
Too big a crop ob apples is a-gwine to bust de limb;
An' de gal's lips allus tast' best w'en de light is kinder dim.

SCIPTURE DANGEROUS TO FOLLOW.

"And what did the preacher say to-day, Hiram?" said Mrs Sparks to her husband, as he came home from the Christmas service.

"He said that every man should love his neighbor——"

"Love his neighbor!" shrieked the wife.

"That's what I said, Emily, and it's what he said."

"You can't get me to believe a word of that, Hiram Sparks. The preacher never said any such thing, for he knows as well as I do that our neighbor is a grass widow, and he knows me well enough to know that you wouldn't be able to get to church for a month after trying on that little game while I'm around. A nice man he is, I must confess, to be giving such advice as that to an old codger like you."

THE DEACON OF THE FOLD.

A bashful man was Benny Jones,
Who had such winning ways
That folks were never weary while
Their words were in his praise.

He was never known to chuckle; no,
Not even when a child;
And was known to all his neighbors as
The man who never smiled.

He had no naughty longings for
The wicked ways of youth,
And his candor was a lesson
To the enemies of truth.

He was so very zealous in
His piety, we're told,
That the vestrymen appointed him
The deacon of the fold.

The ladies fairly petted him,
He led in all the psalms,
And the parson looked upon him
As a shepherd 'mong his lambs.

But ah, the wily serpent came,
With sweet, deceptiv tongue,
And left two Bibles lonely in
The class where Benny sung.

For one Sunday morning early
'Twas reported by a few
That the parson's wife was missing
And the parson's money, too.

And as Ben was minus also,
'Twas conjectured at the time
Both had sailed in search of converts
To some less enlightened clime.

That deaconship is vacant now—
It has been so of late—
And this is what old Parson Brown
Has written on his gate:

"My brethren, shun the Evil One,
Keep clear of all his wiles,
And on an equal footing hold
The man who never smiles."

Gems of Thought.

HAD John Knox's religion been of a milder and more genial character than that taught by John Calvin, or had he no religion at all, he would doubtless hav had more humanity and hav been a better man.—D. M. Bennett.

IT is not too much to say that, at this day, any philosophy which sets out with the premis that any one of the historical religions is absolute truth fails to meet the demand of the times. To ignore those results of modern historical research which show that all religions are of one family and origin, and hav been subject alike to natural conditions of development, and that each and all of them are limited and provincial in character, is to manifest not only an incapacity to solve the religious problem of our age, but even a failure to see what the real religious problem of the age is. When Mr. Alcott said, in his closing address at the Concord School of Philosophy, that "it is safe for young people to go to the Concord School without imbibing any 'heresies,'" he unconsciously declared the fatal limitations of the school on the side of religious philosophy. The robust minds among the young men and young women of our age are not afraid of "heresies;" they hav already largely imbibed them and they will justly be suspicious of the thoroughness of any school which promises to fence them in a "safe" place where heresies cannot come.—W. J. Potter.

THE ancient Platonists, you know, were the most religious and devout of all the pagan philosophers; yet many of them, particularly Plotinus (205-270 A.D.), expressly declare that intellect or understanding is not to be ascribed to the deity, and that our most perfect worship of him consists, not in acts of veneration, reverence, gratitude, or love, but in a certain mysterious self-annihilation or total extinction of all our faculties. These ideas are perhaps too far stretched; but still it must be acknowledged that, by representing the deity as so intelligible and comprehensible, and so similar to a human mind, we are guilty of the grossest and most narrow partiality and make ourselvs the model of the whole universe.—Hume's Dialogs on Natural Religion.

THERE never was, I fancy, an organization less susceptible to fears or superstitions than Scott's own. When a friend jokingly urged him, within a few months of his death, not to leave Rome on a Friday, as it was a day of bad omen for beginning a journey, he replied, laughing, "Superstition is very picturesque, and I make it at times stand me in good stead, but I never allow it to interfere with interest or convenience." Basil Hall reports Scott's having told him, on the last evening of 1824, when they were talking over this subject, that, having once arrived at a country inn, he was told there was no bed for him. "No place to lie down at all?" said he. "No," said the people of the house, "none except a room in which there is a corpse lying." "Well," said he, "did the person die of any contagious disorder?" "Oh, no, not at all," said they. "Well, then," continued he, "let me hav the other bed." "So," said Sir Walter, "I laid me down and never had a better night's sleep in my life."—Hutton's Scott.

A SILLY mouse, thinking each thing a cat,
Fell into a helpless worriment thereat;

But, noticed by a wizard living near,
Was turned into a cat to end its fear.

No sooner was the transformation done,
Than dreadful terror of a dog begun.

Now, when the wizard saw this latest throe,
"Here, be a dog," said he, "and end your woe."

But though a dog its soul had no release,
For fear some tiger might disturb its peace.

Into a tiger next the beast was made;
And still 'twas pitiful and sore afraid,

Because the huntsman might, some ill-starred day,
Happen along and take its life away.

"Then," said the wizard, turning to his house,
"You hav a mouse's heart—now be a mouse."

'Tis so with men; no earthly help or dower
Can add one atom to their earthly power:

Them from their smallness nothing can arouse—
No art can make a lion from a mouse.

—Joel Benton.

"IF heaven is our home," asked Calvin, "what is the earth but a place of exile? Only because God has placed us in this world and appointed us our functions therein, must it also be our endeavor to fulfil the same; it is solely the divine command which imparts a true value to our earthly vocations, which are of themselvs devoid of value." This is clearly a miserable compromise; if our earthly occupations are valueless in themselvs, this value cannot be imparted to them from without; but if they do possess such value, it can consist in nothing but the moral relations which are implied by them. Man's earthly existence bears its own law, its rule of guidance, its aims and ends included in itself.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

SUPERSTITION, without a veil, is a deformed thing; for as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed; and as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, where men think to do best if they go farthest from the superstition formerly received; therefore care would be had (as it fareth in all things) the good be not taken away with the bad, which commonly is done where the people hear the reformer.—Bacon's Essays.

A REVELATION is only a revelation to the individual to whom (if such a thing be possible) it is made. His account of it to another is not revelation; and whoever puts faith in that account puts it in the man from whom the account comes; and that man may be deceived or he may hav dreamed it; or he may be an impostor and may lie. There is no possible criterion whereby to judge of the truth of what he tells; for even the morality of it would be no proof of revelation.—Paine's Age of Reason.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 2. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, January 9, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

UNCLE SAM IN DISTRESS.

CHORUS OF TRUMPETERS FOR REVENUE ONLY: "God, our country, and an appropriation."

Notes and Clippings.

IN Hartford, Conn., Sunday newspapers cannot be sold on the streets after 10 A.M.

THIS week is appointed by the Evangelical Alliance as a week of prayer. We shall wait patiently for the results.

THE trustees of Parson Newman's old church on Madison avenue are anxious to sell the edifice, being deeply in debt. They say the building would make a good theater.

JESUS CHRIST was born nearly nineteen hundred years ago in a world full of violence, hypocrisy, wrong, and suffering Alas! it is very much the same world now.—John Swinton.

THE grinding of the crown glass disk of the immense lens of Lick Observatory at San José, California, is well under way at Cambridge, Mass. Yet a whole year's work remains to be done before it can be finished.

JUDGE CULLEN of the Supreme Court has just decided, in the suit of Holland against Smyth, that money left to be spent for prayers after a person's death is a valid bequest. As long as we hav laws by which the dead can control the living, Judge Cullen's decision is sound.

THE Rev. W. H. H. Snyder, a Presbyterian preacher of Harrisburg, Pa., has been asked to resign. He is accused of plagiarism, having preached one of Talmage's sermons instead of his own. They must hav customs in Harrisburg different from those of Brooklyn, where Talmage preached the sermon originally and was not molested.

THE faith-cure humbug is rampant in Sweden. A fellow-named Boltzin is its prophet. The Stockholm police were compelled recently to interfere to prevent the overcrowding of his "Hotel Zion." In Narkoeping a hotel-keeper advertised rooms where one might "be alone with God" at a low price, including service and cure with board.

THE pope has just given $100,000 to the College of the Propaganda, which is equivalent to his taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. This $100,000 is the proceeds of the pope's personal presents. As Brother Joachim has been pope but a few years, this shows that presents flow to the Vatican with considerable celerity.

MR. LABOUCHERE, editor of London Truth, seems not to appreciate as some people do the English ecclesiastic Canon Farrar, who has lately visited America and carried away a pocketful of dollars. He says of the canon that he "often talks and writes nonsense and twaddle, and during his tour in the United States he seems to hav surpassed himself."

A BAPTIST paper recommends to sleepless preachers the delivery of two sermons on each Sunday as a soporific. One afflicted subscriber replies that his pastor has tried this, but that the soporific influence was shed rather on the hearers than on the sermonizer. He adds that if the preacher knew how mad the people were at him for preaching such sermons he would stay awake all night.

THIS is the latest report of progress of Christian missionary work among the heathens: "LONDON, JAN. 1st.—The king of Mombasa, in Central Africa, has seized Bishop Huntington, who has been engaged in missionary service, and will probably put him to death. No reason is given for the act." Mombasa is not in Central Africa; it is on the cast coast, but this should not detract from the accuracy of the report, or deter us from sending more missionaries to Africa to preach to the monkeys.

OCCASIONAL churchgoer (to minister): "That was good advice you gave this morning, Mr. Goodman, about laying up treasures where neither moth nor rust can corrupt, and where thieves cannot break through nor steal." Minister (earnestly): "It was, indeed, sir, and I trust you will profit by it." Occasional churchgoer: "I intend to. Every cent I can raise goes into land. Moth and rust can't hurt land, and no thief can steal it."

CHARLES RANSOM, a notorious New York gambler, died recently. In the World's obituary notice the following surprising statement is found: "It is said that the Rev. John P. Newman, known principally as General Grant's pastor, was an intimate friend of the gentle-mannered gambler." It would be interesting to the student of morals to know if either of these two men was influenced for evil by contact with the other, and if so, which.

THE certificate of incorporation of the Institute of Social Science has been filed in the county clerk's office. Its object is to promote the investigation, elucidation, propagation, and practice of social science in all its branches by lectures, discussions, essays, books, and institutions, and such other methods as the institute may determin. The corporators are Parke Godwin, Alexander S. Webb, Joseph H. Rylance, John C. Zachos, Graham McAdam, Thaddeus B. Wakeman, and Justus O. Woods.

THE bill making it legal to marry a deceased wife's sister will be again presented to the coming British Parliament. This bill has been urged for a long time by widowers having eligible sisters-in-law, whom they made the mistake of not marrying in the first place.

THE latest grievance in Boston is the disposition of the grocery-keepers to keep their places open on Sundays. This is corrupting the average head of the average Boston family, who now neglects to lay in his provender on Saturday, and goes about buying the necessaries of life on Sunday.

AT a late meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of New York, a resolution was introduced to be acted upon next year, which urges: "The imperativ duty of opposing the attitude of indifference to religion which appears in our public school manuals and in the educational work of our reformatories, and at the same time of using all proper means to secure the incorporation with the course of state and national instruction of the following religious truths as a basis of national morality, viz: (1) The existence of a personal God. (2) The responsibility of every one to God. (3) The deathlessness of the human soul as made in the image of God, after the power of an endless life. (4) The reality of a future spiritual state in which every soul shall giv account for itself before God, and shall reap that which it has sown." It has since been proposed to add a fifth subject for teaching, viz: (5) The Decalog, interpreted both by the Sermon on the Mount, and by the life and example of Christ, as the standard of morality." The Presbyterians will find it much easier to put these teachings in the schoolbooks than to make the scholars believe them.

Communications.

The Two Isms.

Apart from the numerous minor isms now existing throughout the Christian world, the two principal ones are Catholicism and Protestantism. These constitute the religious faith of Western Christendom, and are regarded by their respectiv adherents as being unequaled in grandeur and unsurpassed in potency for good. In many respects the two isms differ from each other, but in their opposition to Secular philosophy there is really very little difference between them. The antagonistic lines that separate the consistent Catholic from the sincere Protestant present a strong refutation of the alleged harmony of the Christian faith, while the history of each of their systems is pregnant with facts showing how adverse both are to the development of personal independence and mental freedom. It would be sad, indeed, to think it even possible for the dark nightmare of Rome to again overshadow the nation. Its record has been one of relentless fanaticism, leaving behind it marks of woe, misery, and intellectual prostration wherever it has had full opportunity to exert its power. It would also be despairing to many of us to believe that Protestant inconsistency and assumption would remain permanently in our midst. Contemplating the present condition of Christendom, how largely it is permeated with skepticism, the power of science, and the influence of secular literature, it requires but little prophetic insight to see that the time is not far distant when reason and justice will triumph over traditional belief and theological domination.

There is a striking difference between the two isms in the relativ devotion of the adherents to their respectiv faiths. The devotion of the Catholic is far more intense than that of the Protestant. Entering a Catholic church at the celebration of high mass, the visitor is forcibly struck with the reality of the belief of the superstitious worshiper. This unaffected devotion goes on accumulating from the moment of the entrance of the celebrant priest, sprinkling the devotees with "holy water," until the solemn moment when the casket in the altar is opened and the supposed body and blood of the son of the Virgin are elevated. True the devotion does not long continue, neither is the influence, as a rule, very lasting, for frequently an hour after the congregation is dispersed the devotee who had so recently taken the sacrament at the mass, and confessed his sins, will at once open a new account by entering into a fight with the first person who shall dare to offend him. In southern climes it is quite usual for dark-eyed Spanish and Roman ladies to confess and attend mass in the morning, and in the afternoon to engage in very questionable flirtations in the Prado at Madrid or the Corso at Rome. Still, the ceremony is real so long as it lasts, and the same fervor and devotion will be again exhibited at night, when the votary kneels before the shrine or picture of his or her particular saint.

In Protestant worship there is nothing to equal this consistent and heartfelt reverence. The nearest approach to it in our midst to-day is the fanatical evolutions of the members of the Salvation Army, who are always taxing their lungs at the expense of their reason. For a true sample of Protestant worship we must attend the various churches and chapels, where the proceedings would lead us to suppose that we were either in a theater, a mechanics' institute, or at the meeting of the shareholders of a railway company, who were filled with gloom at the prospect of little or no dividends. Their religion is like their Sunday clothes; it is put on on Sabbath morning only to be taken off in the evening. It is a thing of fashion and convenience, consulted on one day and ignored on six. With the Catholic it is different. When he is religious he is all religious. His whole being is wrapt up in his faith and all else is forgotten.

A most objectionable feature common to both isms is that of persecution. But even here there is a difference favorable to Catholic consistency. By its own principles the Catholic church is intolerant of independent opinion, and, therefore, a persecuting church. Protestant and Catholic accept the Bible as an inspired and authoritativ rule of faith and life. They differ, however, in this: The Catholic alleges that it is not the only rule, and the Protestant asserts that it is. The former avows that the church is inspired and authoritativ, while the latter positivly denies this. The Catholic church claims infallibility, and acts logically and consistently from this unfortunate premis. It holds the right to close the mouths of all heretics who deny its authority or dispute its cardinal tenets. It has no faith in liberty of speech and individual judgment. Of course, there are some semi-Catholics living in partially free countries, such as America and England, who are slightly contaminated with "heresy," and who cannot accept their faith in this undiluted form. But take real Catholics in Rome and Spain, and there the orthodox principle is carried out in its most consistent form. Protestants, while deploring this Catholic persecution, boast of their "right of private judgment," and yet they are continually violating its very principle. With them private judgment means orthodox Protestant judgment. Their conduct in this particular has been thus aptly described in a poem, entitled "The Dogmatist's Creed:"

Believe as I believe—no more, no less;
That I am right, and no one else, confess;
Feel as I feel; think only as I think;
Eat what I eat, and drink but what I drink;
Look as I look; do always as I do.
And then, and only then,
Will I fellowship with you.

That I am right, and always right, I know,
Because my own convictions tell me so;
And to be right is simply this: To be Entirely, in all respects, like me.
To deviate a hair's breadth, or begin
To question and to doubt,
Or hesitate, is sin.

I reverence the Bible, if it be
Translated first, and then explained—by me.
By churchly laws and customs I abide,
If they with my opinions coincide.
All creeds and doctrins I concede divine,
Excepting those, of course,
Which disagree with mine.

Let sink the drowning, if he will not swim
Upon the plank that I throw out to him;
Let starve the hungry, if he will not eat
My kind and quantity of bread and meat;
Let freeze the naked, if he will not be Clothed in such garments
As are cut for me.

'Twere better that the sick should die than liv,
Unless they take the medicin I giv;
'Twere better sinners perish than refuse
To be conformed to my peculiar views;
'Twere better that the world stand still than move
In any other way
Than that which I approve.

Another objectionable feature of the two isms is that of priestcraft. This is an evil which is supposed by Protestants to belong almost exclusivly to Catholicism. But unfortunately it is also a Protestant institution. Glancing at the various congregations of the lesser towns or cities, how many of the members thereof are there who think for themselvs or who are free from the influence of their ministers? They believe what they hear, not because they hav reasoned thereon to test its truth, but because the local clergy uttered it. A skeptical clergyman will, as a rule, make a skeptical congregation, and a bigoted minister will beget bigoted followers. Protestants are, in fact, as much abject slaves to the Bible as Catholics are to the priests. With most of them, if they are consistent, the "inspired book" is a master whose truth they dare not question. If it can be proved that the Bible teaches a particular doctrin or principle, no matter how absurd the one and how illogical the other, the orthodox believers dare not reject it.

Protestantism, it is true, has one advantage—its followers are more easily converted from their faith than are those who believe in Catholicism. The religion of the "Reformed Church" sits but lightly upon its professors. The more a man's belief is combined with sincerity, the more difficult it is to convince him of his error. Hence Secularism gets fewer converts from the Catholic than it does from the Protestant church. The faith of most of the Protestant sects is so inconsistent that to some it is too contracted and to others it is too plastic. About two hundred years ago John Dryden, the poet, wrote the following lines in reference to the Protestant clergymen:

Your church's substance thus you change at will,
And yet retain your former figure still.

And again he says:

The church her old foundations has removed,
And built new doctrins on unstable sands.

These lines describe admirably the respectiv parties of the High Church and the Low Church, which exist far more extensivly in the old country than they do in America. They hav indeed "changed the substance" of belief while they seek to retain their "former figure." What a curious and "happy family" the Protestant church presents, with its many sects differing from each other as to what should be included or excluded in the term Christianity! There is no such diversity to be found in the Catholic church. She is united although her members are far more numerous than those of her offshoot.

At the present time the conflict between Protestantism and Catholicism is raging as furiously inside as it is outside of the church. Between Freethought and Roman Catholicism there is no logical position; it must be either science or faith. The Ritualistic movement in England is a fruitless attempt to blend a little of each. An anonymous poet has thus stated the Ritualist's case:

What is a Ritualist? Ah! there we find
A question, but no answer to our mind.
He is no Papist; to the creed and name
Of Anglican divine he puts his claim.
And yet no Protestant; his acts deny
The faith to which such name we should apply.
"To be or not to be?" he seems to ask
(And finds the problem no easy task)
Whether 'tis better to espouse the cause
Of Rome, or bow to orthodoxy's laws.
Perplexed, he gazes where a gulf divides
Two different and antagonistic sides.
Firm to the one his principles prevail,
His wishes follow the opposing scale;
He'd be a Papist, but the mighty force
Of duty stern forbids so bold a course;
In short, between the two he makes his way
Like the proverbial ass amid the hay.

Knowing the nature of the two isms, we, as Secularists, should strive to avoid the influence of both. Standing upon an impartial pedestal, we can discover some rays of hope from the fierce war going on between these two theological gladiators. Protestantism, as a state-protected religion, is doomed in England, and as a specially favored religion its death knell will shortly be tolled on American soil. It may struggle for its life, and possibly for a time it may survive, but its state-favored injustice will be of short duration. The day is close at hand when the church will hav to exist, if at all, upon its own resources, without being exempted from its just and fair share of the taxation of the country.

Although, perhaps, the day is far distant when the power of Rome will entirely cease, indications are not wanting of her falling off. Thousands of Catholics are every year emigrating to this Western Continent, where, under the influence of freedom, the chains of the church are being loosened. As the present generation dies out, it will, in all probability, be replaced by a population born on American soil, where the old Catholic ideas will be unable to thrive. Protestantism is dying of its internal inconsistency, while Catholicism is losing ground through its external consistency. Thus the power of theology is declining; those who rely upon reason find refuge in Freethought, and those who rest upon faith shelter themselvs in the shade of Catholicism.

Amid these changes and this decay the principles of the American Secular Union maintain a dignified and progressiv course. In France, Germany, England, India, and the United States, Liberal principles are gaining noble triumphs on every hand. In France the priests hav lost much of their power and influence over the intelligent portion of the masses. The literature of Germany indicates the growth of skepticism in that country of mental freedom, while from India we hear of the rapid growth of Freethought views. The colleges of Calcutta and Bombay are, by a course of Secular training, educating the Parsees and Bengalees out of their old notions of supernatural dependence. In England the school board has taken the place of the church, and theology has had to yield to the claims of science. Thus while the Freethought ship sails majestically into the haven of safety, the Christian bark is at sea, being tossed to and fro with the waves of discord and doubt. The craft is composed of too flimsy material to enable it to withstand the shocks of nineteenth-century civilization. Already the orthodox vessel is divided; ere long it will float down the stream of time into the harbor of worn-out dogmas; and there, in its inactivity, surrounded by folly and superstition, it will remain as a monument of intellectual weakness and misguided devotion, while throughout the land will be heard the voice of truth proclaiming the victory of a progressiv philosophy over theological restriction and priestly usurpation. CHARLES WATTS.

Father Hardouin

The statement that Father Hardouin's book, "Ad Censuram Scriptorum Veterum Prolegomena," has been little noticed by scholars may seem to some incorrect, but it is nevertheless true. The Parlement de Paris, in 1708, suppressed his book, entitled "Chronologiæ ex Nummis Antiquis," etc. This work was duly assailed by contemporary critics. The author of "Tacitus and Bracciolini," 1878, says:

"But wedded to his opinions, and stubborn in the maintenance of them, Hardouin reproduced the least reprehensible (?) in his 'Ad Censuram Scriptorum Veterum Prolegomena.' From the manner in which he has been replied to by scholars all over Europe, especially in Holland, France, and Germany, conspicuous among whom for pith of argument stand Basnage, Leclerc, Lacroze, Ittig, and Bierling, nobody at the present day considers that what he said about the monuments of antiquity is worthy of the slightest attention, though everybody acknowledges his wonderful memory, sagacity, ingenuity, and mastery of all kinds of literature, especially history and chronology, and above all theology, of which he was a professor."

Now, let the reader mark the fact that the five scholars above named all died between 1710 and 1739, and therefore knew nothing of Hardouin's posthumous work, "Ad Censuram," which was not published until 1766. And if in this last work he reproduced his "least reprehensible opinions" what must hav been the character of those expressed in his earlier work? The fact is, every article that we hav seen about Hardouin is full of error, showing how little the writers knew of his real opinions. They all say that Cicero was one of the four Latin authors admitted by Hardouin to be genuin. He did name Cicero at the outset, but in his last work he substitutes Plautus for Cicero. They all say that the wholesale fabrication of ancient writings was all assigned by Hardouin to the thirteenth century. In his posthumous work he repeatedly says that the fabrication was begun after the thirteenth century and continued on into the sixteenth.

It is never safe to judge an author by what the reviewers say. Hardouin was undoubtedly right in part; the only question is how extensiv was the literary forgery? Similar frauds are continually being perpetrated in our time, and many of them are successful. In ancient times and before the revival of learning the chance of detection and exposure was far less.

ANTICHRIST.

The Devil.

In a local paper I read a poem evidently the result of an irresistibly poetic mind. The poem, which is entitled, "The Devil," challenges any one to account for the evils in the world, if there is no devil.

That such thoughts should receive poetic form is a disgrace to any age, and a "scandalous outrage" to the nineteenth century.

Should it be impossible to account for the evil without the supposition of a devil? Let us see:

In the first place, look at the origin of the Biblical devil. He came directly from heaven, the eternal abode of purity and virtue—a bright, beautiful heaven, inhabited by beings entirely pure and holy—a place in which God is the center and "all in all;" where all were made by one perfect, omniscient, omnipotent God, who could not misconceive or make mistakes. Those beings he had placed about him in his glorions, incorruptible abode were likewise perfect—not a shadow of difference in their composition—all created to glorify and make "comfortable" the palace of their matchless maker.

In such a place, and without predisposition to sin, how could those angels fall? That they should fall must either be admitted as an impossibility, or that "heaven of purity" could not hav been so free from sin or temptation as one might suppose.

If neither sin nor the elements of sin existed before the fall of the angels, it must hav been their chief that created it. Yet the Bible states that "all things were made by God, and without God nothing was made that was made."

Therefore, if sin did not exist before the fall of the angels, God is not the only creator of all things "that were made."

But perhaps sin was not made—only a conception of the intellect. How astonished God must hav been upon discovering that one of his creatures had conceived a new idea!—one of which he himself previously had been ignorant! For, if the fall of the angels was the origin of sin, as orthodoxy claims, and if nothing existed that could become sin, it must hav been an entirely new idea to God. If it were not, God, who first had the idea, must "accidentally" hav transplanted it into the prince of devils, showing an imperfection in his character. Never could he hav intended that sin should come into the world. And if sin was primarily in God's thoughts, we hav it directly from him.

The above scriptural quotation seems to make two grand classes of all things—that of things "made," and that of things "not made." If sin, which is an abstract quality as much as virtue, belongs to the class "not made," then virtue also evidently belongs to that class. It makes no difference, therefore, how sin came into existence; if the devil originated it, he stands beside God as an originator of something of that which exists—hence, rightfully shares with God the honor which the majority of men seem to confer upon him.

God is eternal; God is virtue—virtue, accordingly, is eternal. No one denies that. God is omniscient; from all eternity, therefore, he must hav had the idea of sin, or he were not omniscient. Sin could not hav come to the world without a precursory idea of it. It must consequently hav been a sin in Alpha to hav had such an idea; and, if omniscient, God must be charged with the sin of transplanting the idea of sin.

From these arguments it appears, first, that it would be impossible for the angels, under the described circumstances, to fall, and that the supposition of a devil is simply preposterous; secondly, that if the angels really fell, the kingdom of heaven must hav been less pure than supposed; thirdly, that if we should concede the possibility of such a fall without preëxisting causes we must attribute to the devil a power of origination which God alone is said to possess; fourthly, that God was either not omniscient or he was the first one having the idea of sin; and, if to the devil is not to be attributed such creativ power, sin came, through the thought, from Good—a horrible supposition!

These incongruities are evidence of how unreliable is the Biblical account of the origin and cause of the evils in the world. Now it remains to giv a more rational explanation.

We know that almost everything in existence has an opposit. So of animals, plants, electricity, etc. Cold is a negativ opposit of heat. Where there is no heat, cold predominates. If there were no cold, there were no need of sun or fire, except to giv light. Death is the opposit of life. In the beginning everything upon earth was lifeless. Then life with its power came and made earth beautiful. Darkness is the opposit of light. Without darkness and cold the sun and other luminaries would be without a mission. Thus evil is the negativ opposit of good. Where the beneficent sun of goodness does not shine, the horrible darkness of evil predominates. But where Goodness, with her precious, smiling countenance, makes her appearance there evil must shrink away. Probably I shall scare people out of their wits by stating that there are things which God neither has made nor can make or annihilate. One of these is space. God could fill it up, mayhap, but space would after all be there. God is eternal; he must hav had somewhere to stay; space is therefore eternal. Another thing which God neither has made nor can annihilate, I suppose, is himself.

Darkness, I venture to believe, is eternal and has no originator. It is passiv; at the approach of light, darkness must retreat. God existed in space. It was cold and dark. He possessed light and heat. Space was cold, dark, and comfortless (evil). God possessed light, heat, and goodness. He said, "Let it be light, warm, and good;" and so it was—not everywhere, to be sure, but in parts of the universe. Darkness, cold, and evil are relativs. A man habitually in the cold and dark becomes cold, dark, evil. Light, heat, and goodness are relativs; light and heat are the parents; goodness, the son or daughter. A faithful associate of the parents gets the son or daughter—becomes good, if all other things are favorable.

But sun-heat and sun-light alone are insufficient. Our nature is such that we need spiritual heat and spiritual light, in order to be of any account. Falsehood and ignorance are spiritual darkness. If there is darkness anywhere, there will soon be cold and evil. Truth and intelligence are spiritual light, spiritual sunshine. Where there is sunshine, it will soon be warm and—good.

It is certainly not to be wondered at that there is so much evil in the world, considering that, for centuries, each successiv generation, if instructed at all, has been instructed in doctrins which, though cleverly adjusted and put together, rest upon a false basis; and it is not necessary, but unreasonable, to suppose that a devil must exist on account of the evil. The human race is advancing. The spiritual forces, intelligence and truth, hav long since begun their invasion of the territory formerly and yet in great part occupied by their negativ opposits. But falsehood and ignorance, darkness and cold, are as yet in the majority; therefore it often looks so hellishly dark. However, it is breaking of day. Darkness is compelled to retreat farther and farther, and when it grows warmer, evil must take its departure. When we shall hav arrived at a point of intellectual and moral development where people will attend schools, not merely to get fat offices and days of ease, but to find out their own personal worth, and be able, in new settlements or neighborhoods, to establish societies that will keep pace with the advancement of older places, and not complain because fortune did not lift them to the hights of glory; when people learn to see the question of Christianity squarely in the face; when they shall be able to discriminate between the true and the false in the book claiming inspiration for its origin; when their eyes shall be opened and they be permitted to see how shamefully they hav been deceived by their own credulity; when a thorough knowledge of the laws of nature shall be their inheritance, and they become as wise as intelligent—then darkness will disappear and evil will shrivel and wither away, and it will become warm, and the beneficent and genial smile of goodness will beam forth from every nook and corner, and trees and flowers, and waters and meadows, and the rugged mountains and deep valleys, will smile and sing ringing songs of honor to the all-wise and perfect god of goodness.

SAMUEL GARBORG.

Comte's Positiv Philosophy.

The third stage, the positiv or real, in which the mind confines its search to the marks of relations; traces facts to more general facts, whereof they are but particular cases; these to others more general still, so that its perfection, toward which it tends incessantly (although quite probably it will never reach it), would consist in the power to represent the different observable phenomena as particular cases under a single general fact, like that of gravitation, for example.

The positiv or real explanation of facts has substituted itself step by step for the theological and metaphysical as the progress of inquiry brought to light an increasing number of the invariable laws of phenomena.

Comte was the first who ever attempted the complete systematization of the positiv or real mode of thought, and the scientific extension of it to all objects of human knowledge, and in doing this he has displayed a quantity and quality of mental power, and achieved an amount of success, which is simply marvelous.

The generalization which belongs to Comte, and in which he has not been at all anticipated, is that every distinct class of human conceptions passes necessarily through all these stages, beginning with the theological and proceeding through the metaphysical to the positiv or real, the metaphysical being a mere state of transition, but an indispensable one, from the theological mode of thought to the positiv or real, which is destined finally to prevail, by the universal recognition that all phenomena without exception are governed by invariable laws, with which no volitions, either natural or supernatural, interfere.

When men believe that if you wish for something on seeing a piebald horse, the wish will be realized; when they believe that if thirteen people sit down together at dinner, one will die before the year is out; when they believe that if anyone be bitten by a dog, he will suffer hydrophobia should the dog be afterward attacked by that disease; when they believe that a peculiar conjunction of the stars will rule their destinies—in all these and similar instances people's minds are in the theological stage; they conceive nature as indefinitly variable. History is crowded with examples of this conception. In poetry, in literature, in daily life, we constantly find traces of this primitiv spontaneous mode of conceiving of things.

To take an illustration, in the camp of Agamemnon an epidemic breaks out, the men die by scores; but as the dreadful arrows of death are invisible, a terrified army attributes the pestilence to the anger of offended Apollo, who avenges an insult to his priest by the "clanging of the silver bow." This explanation, so absurd in our age, was acceptable to the facil acquiescence of that epoch, and expiatory peace offerings were made to the offended deity in a case where modern science with its sanitary commission would hav seen bad drainage or imperfect ventilation.

But to prove that the theological stage is not thoroughly and universally passed, we need only refer to the monstrous illustrations of our own days, when learned men, the teachers of our own people, gravely attributed the cholera to God's anger at England's endowment of the Maynooth Roman Catholic College.

There was a church in Sienna which had often been injured by lightning. A conductor was set up in defiance of the "religious world," wherein it was regarded as the "heretical stake." A storm arose, the lightning struck the tower, crowds flocked to see if the church was spared, and lo! the very spiderwebs upon it were unbroken. Here we see science correcting the mischievous prejudices of theology.

The same tendency to look beyond the fact for an explanation of the fact, to imagin an agency superadded to the phenomena, is visible in the metaphysical period.

The notion of invariableness is admitted, and to explain it some "entity" or "principle" is imagined. Thus Kepler imagined the regularity of planetary movements was owing to the planets being endowed with minds capable of making observations on the sun's apparent diameter, in order to regulate their motions so as to describe areas proportioned to their times

When men put up prayers for rain in fine weather they are acting upon the theological conception that these phenomena are not the resultant of invariable laws, but of some variable will.

The clergyman refusing to pray for rain "while the wind is in this quarter" naïvely rebukes the impropriety of the request.

In the final and positiv stage men accept nature as she presents herself, without seeking beyond the facts for fantastical entities. It was formerly believed that basilisks existed in cellars which had been long closed; they were invisible, but their look killed whoever it fell upon. Since it has become more generally known that fermentation is produced by noxious air, whose weight causes it to accumulate in low places, we recognize the destructiv agent, and drive it away by means of fresh air. There you hav an example of the two conceptions, metaphysical and positiv; the one seeking its explanations in an unknown entity, basilisk; the other, in known laws of nature's processes.

History shows us the gradual dispersion of superstitions and fantastic creeds before the light of certainty which science carries everywhere. In the positiv stage the invariableness of phenomena under similar conditions is recognized as the sum total of human investigations. Beyond the laws which regulate phenomena it is idle to endeavor to penetrate. So completely are men in the theological and metaphysical stages with respect to the science of society that, ignoring all laws and conditions of growth and development, they almost universally believe in the absurd notion of a political change being wrought by an alteration in the government, or by the adoption of some scheme or constitution.

For example, they believe that all that is necessary to make society republican is to adopt republican forms, not seeing that when these forms of government are given to a nation, instead of growing out of the national tendencies and ideas, they are merely new names given to old realities.

The belief is a remant of the old theological mechanical conception, which supposes man to be external to the social organism instead of being an integral portion of it. We must replace this mechanical by a dynamical conception, and understand that the social organism has its laws of growth and development like the human organism.

Toronto, Dec. 26, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

Victor Hugo and the Bishop.

An article in the London Freethinker says that in 1878 the centenary of Voltaire's death was celebrated in Paris, and Victor Hugo delivered the splendid oration* which we hav published. The bishop of Orleans addressed a remonstrance to Victor Hugo on the occasion. The following letter of Victor Hugo's to the bishop will show the kind of sympathy this great republican had for leading churchmen:

MONSIEUR: You are guilty of imprudence. You remind those who might hav forgotten it, that I was brought up by a churchman, and that if my life began in prejudice and terror, it was the priest's fault, not mine. That sort of education is so fatal that at nearly forty years of age, as you point out, I was still under its influence. All that has been said before. I don't dwell on it. I hav a certain contempt for mere futilities. You insult Voltaire, and you do me the honor to revile me. That is your affair. You and I are two men, better or worse; the future will decide between us. The moral sense is so imperfectly developed in you that you reproach me with the very act which does me honor. You undertake to read me a lesson. By what right? Who are you? Let us come to the point. Let us see what a thing your conscience is, and what mine is. A single comparison will suffice. France has lately passed through an ordeal. France was free. One night a man treacherously seized her, overthrew her, and gagged her. He began his reign—since reign it was—by perjury, ambush, and massacre. He prolonged it by oppression, by tyranny, by despotism, by an indescribable parody on religion and justice. He was at once a monster and a pigmy. For him were sung the "Te Deum," the "Magnificat," the "Salvum Fac," the "Gloria Tibi," and the rest. Who sang them? Ask yourself. The law abandoned the people to him, the church surrendered to him the almighty justice; honor, country gave way before that man. He trampled under foot his oath, equity, good faith, the glory of the flag, the dignity of man, the liberty of the citizen; that man's prosperity perplexed the conscience of mankind. This lasted nineteen years. During that time you were in a palace; I was in exile. Sir, I pity you.

VICTOR HUGO.

*This oration is for sale at the TRUTH SEEKER office, with the original French and the English (translated by James Parton) on opposit pages. The price of the pamphlet is 10 cents.

Sweeping Reform Demanded.

Of God above or man below
What can we reason but from what we know?

We know that all the corporations and all the employers of labor wish to get, and screw hard to get, it as cheap as they can. To what a figure would they crush it down no man can tell, if the labor unions, under all their various forms and in all their various localities, didn't unite to stand in their way. Their theory is this: "We screw down ten cents a day on, say, five thousand coal-miners, or other workers. It will not be much to each man, and it will be $500 a day to the company. That will count up to $150,000 a year, and will be a great help to the dividends." They tried it on the railroad hands some years ago, resulting in the heroic revolt which, through blood and flame, took possession of the Pittsburgh fortifications. The corporation counted up a loss of four millions, and modestly called upon the city and county to pay their loss. Those resisted, and a trial in the courts ensued, which disclosed an amount of rottenness in the legislature of Pennsylvania and in the press of Pennsylvania, never before dragged out to public view. Ten cents a line for harmless little paragraphs, $100 to $200 for leading articles—measured by circulation and "influence"—such was the sweeping sale of the press—all the press, or was there some of it not worth buying? The tariff for "honorable" legislators did not vary much—$100 for a silent vote, for a speech and a vote $200, were the ruling figures. The theory of the railroad rogues was, "We run no risk in screwing down wages. If our men should rise and wreck things, the state will hav to make our loss good." Such was and such is the orthodox creed of indeed all the corporations of whatever kind.

Before the great famin swept out of Ireland three millions of the population, a sober, steady day laborer would be very glad indeed if he could get eight pence a day, one dollar for a whole week's wages, year in and year out. He never got more than tenpence a day, which would bring the week up to a dollar and a quarter. But that was rare and uncertain, and there were frequent days in which he could get no work and no wages at all. It grew a little better when the landlord famin killed off the laborers in 1848. I say "the landlord famin," because the grain crops and the beef, the butter, bacon, fowls, eggs, everything but potatoes, was a good crop as usual. But all those things had to be sold—were seized at the point of the bayonet—to feed the debauch of the scoundrels who called themselvs "lords of the soil." The same scoundrels that are now sticking themselvs into the soil of America.

A double hunger afflicts the corporations. One to devour all the natural wealth of the country, the other to digest it by cheap labor. A few falsehoods and a "divide" in Washington has given them the natural wealth. And their hunger for cheap labor had been partially allayed before now only for the front presented by the labor organizations. I say "partially allayed," for it can only be satiated by the millions ready to pour in as soon as sent for from the celestial millions of ten cent laborers on the other side of the Pacific.

If the lands and the mines are legally plundered from us, what is to prevent this consummation? Nothing, for certain. The money—the educated force—whether in pulpit, press, or platform, will be on one side, a disjointed and dynamitical discontent on the other. A scene not only may, but logically must, ensue before which our civil war will pale into an unseen silence. Nothing to prevent it only a resumption of our lands, our waters, and our minerals.

THOS. AINGE DEVYR.

Converting the Hebrews.

The Hebrew Christian Mission of this city filed articles of incorporation week before last. The trustees are well-known Christian ministers, one of whom says that the mission is only a sort of trusteeship for the church of the Rev. Jacob Freshman, the converted Jew.

This Mr. Freshman is the gentleman challenged in these columns some few weeks since by Mr. Benjamin, another Hebrew gentleman, to prove his new faith. Mr. Benjamin is still of the Jewish faith, though liberal and broad in his thought. He is intensely disgusted with Mr. Freshman for his apostasy, and has sent us the following letter to supplement his challenge:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: That Rev. Freshman should fail to take up the gauntlet and come up to the scratch of my religious challenge is natural enough, for the very name of your paper is enough to nauseate him, as "truth" to him is repulsiv. Besides, since the challenge would add nothing to benefit himself, it lost all the charms for him. As for the glory of the thing, his only glorification is in Christ for so many dollars and cents.

In order not to be looked upon by your many readers as the ancient St. Paul before his conversion, I will state that I look upon Christ as a great reformer and benefactor of humanity, when not allied to bigotry. My sole antagonism to ignorance and want of principle, actuated by the love and respect I bear toward true and pure Christianity, prompts me to guard it against the wolves in sheep's clothes like Freshman & Co., who stick like leeches to the purses of their dupes. This convert fraternity history points out to us as leeches sucking the life-blood of thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands, of innocent Jews during the Middle Ages.

The disgraceful and falsifying blood accusation could be also traced and placed at the feet of the converts who, because of their external Jewish appearance, mingled unsuspiciously in the synagogs, where they slipped in a bottle of blood in the ark, then swore before the authorities, and aroused the fury of the mob, that the bottle with its contents in the ark belonged to Christian children. As to the result in consequence, one only need look at the European cemeteries, including my nativ country, dark Russia, where rows of graves are assigned to those martyrs.

Again, in this glorious country of the brave, whose soil is too sacred to serve as a receptacle for the perjured blood-accusation statements, the Freshman clique is hired by Christianity as walking advertisments to proclaim the following good tidings: A man commiting a cold-blooded murder, and after administering the sacrament to him on the scaffold, his blood-stained soul is eagerly sought after by winged angels, who tenderly carry it to the celestial abode, there to join its spiritual fellow-murderers, already regaled with their wings and harps. If the murderer happens to hail from the sunny land of the Alps he joins the Italian Colony, who, through the free use of the stilletto while on earth, are swarming over the heavenly avenues as over the streets of Mulberry and Crosby. All these, with the mark of the noose yet on their necks, are playing and dancing to the tunes of their agonized victims, who, previous to being murdered, might hav participated in the reading of Secular literature like THE TRUTH SEEKER and Sunday papers, but now are weeping and gnashing their teeth while being roasted, broiled, or fried in sheol!

Like specialties prevailing with the secular merchant, so does the religious soul-trader Freshman boast of his specialty, encouraging his dupes that the Jew—even of the Montefiore type, whose prolonged life of charity, endeavoring to alleviate suffering humanity, irrespectiv of race or color, even remembering those outside of his pale in his will—the hireling, ignorant Freshman seals the doom of the Jew by assigning him to the darkest and hottest cell in sheol, for no other crime than that the Jew, as a rule, is a loving husband and father, maintaining stately buildings of love and humanity for the sick, orphan, aged, and infirm, incurable, etc., yet never signs pledges nor enlists in Salvation Armies. Above all, since the Jew never died on the scaffold, he naturally failed to receive the sacrament. This is beyond the endurance of the ignorant Saint Freshman, who slams the gates of heaven in the face of the unchristianized Jew, thus excluding him from the sacred concert performed by a powerful orchestra of harps and hand-organs in the the heavenly Murderers' Row.

The most unpardonable crime the counterfeit Christian Freshman attributes to the Jew is that his clear head makes him close-fisted toward the conversionists. Thus, according to the gospel of Saint Freshman, he administers the rebuke uttered by St. Matthew, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink."

If such a clique as Freshman & Co. are made to represent Christianity, is it to be wondered at, the timidity it displays? Why, the greatest acrobatic Brooklyn divine religiously advocates the arrest of a great thinker for permitting his mind to dictate to his mouth. But the Brooklynite spiritual clown forgets that the body, but not the mind, could be arrested.

As the present subject with me is almost inexhaustible, I will not further obtrude myself on your numerous intelligent readers.

A. BENJAMIN.

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is sent free to any address upon application.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, WILLIAM ALGIE,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

News and Notes.

The question, Shall the Central Park Museums be open on Sunday? now engages the public mind. Morris K. Jesup, president of the Museum of Natural History, has written a pamphlet to show why they should not be opened, and I hav written the following, which, I think, shows wherein Mr. Jesup's argument is weak. It was printed in the New York Times last Sunday:

The recent agitation among all classes of taxpayers, and especially the laboring elements, advocating the opening of the Park museums on Sundays, caused Mr. Morris K. Jesup, president of the American Museum of Natural History, and Mr. Daniel Huntington, vice-president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, to combine their views on the subject in the shape of a printed pamphlet, written by Mr. Jesup, the substance of which was contained in his statement made before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment at Mayor Grace's office. Their views are not acceptable to those who advocate the opening of the museums on Sundays, and when in February next the museum trustees meet, a lively time will occur. Mr. S. P. Putnam, who is the conspicuous champion of the trade assemblies and the American Labor [Secular] Union in this cause, said yesterday:

"Morris K. Jesup, in his pamphlet just published, makes the following objections:

"First—Sunday opening would be a violation of contract, to which I say: The contract reads as follows: 'That the exhibition halls of said building shall on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of each week and all legal and public holidays, except Sunday, be kept open and accessible to the public free of charge from 9 o'clock A.M. until half an hour before sunset, etc.' The contract does not call for the opening of the museums on Sundays, neither does it forbid the opening. It simply leaves the matter with the directors. There is no legal obstacle whatsoever to Sunday opening. There is no contract to the contrary. According to the contract the directors are not obliged to open the museums on Sundays; neither are they obliged to keep them shut. Evidently the difficulty is not in the law, but in the will of the directors.

"Second—Mr. Jesup affirms that the working people do not desire a Sunday opening. To sustain this position he quotes largely from English politicians and newspapers. He has not quoted the views of an American newspaper or representativ workingman. It is not to be supposed that this question, which concerns New York city, is to be settled by what certain politicians and newspapers and some working people on the other side of the water say. The American people can decide the matter for themselvs. As a matter of fact, the working people of New York city, by resolution and petition, hav expressed a very strong desire for Sunday opening. Mr. Jesup shows the weakness of his case by quoting only from what some English workingmen hav declared. In England there is a union of church and state. In America there is not. The circumstances are different. Some English working people, no doubt, favor a union of church and state, but does it follow that American workingmen are of the same mind? Let the workingmen of America speak for themselvs, and they will do so if Mr. Jesup will giv an opportunity for the presentation of petitions and resolutions.

"Third—Mr. Jesup says that Sunday opening will make Sunday a working day. It will do nothing of the kind. It will make it a better holiday. Mr. Jesup wants a 'rest day,' whatever that may be. The choice, however, is not between a 'rest day'—that is, a religious holy day—and a working day; but between a 'rest day' with the 'rest' enforced by law and a holiday with the privilege of spending it as the people please. Sunday should be a holiday, a day of recreation, not a day when all paths but that to the church-door and saloon are shut, but a day when all paths but that to unnecessary labor are open. So far as possible, it should be a universal holiday for the good of humanity. In no way will the Sunday opening make of Sunday a day of labor. The more instrumentalities there are for Sunday amusement and recreation of an innocent character the much less likely is it ever to become a working day.

"Fourth—Mr. Jesup says that Sunday opening will weaken the motiv for the Saturday half-holiday. By no means. The motiv for both is the same. The true humanitarian believes in shortening as far as possible the hours of labor. There is no conflict between the Saturday half-holiday and the Sunday holiday. What makes for the one makes for the other. The reason for both is identical. Perhaps some clergymen are in favor of the Saturday half-holiday in order to keep intact the ecclesiastical Sabbath. They use the Saturday half-holiday as a sort of bribe to the working people to let the gloomy orthodox Sunday remain. If this strategy fails, of course the motiv for the Saturday half-holiday will be weakened. I do not see any other way for it to be weakened by the Sunday opening. The more cheerful Sunday is made the better chance there is for Saturday. The museums would not be available to the working people on a Saturday half-holiday. The hours of labor close at 1 o'clock. The museums close half an honr before sunset. Certainly this in winter weather would leave but little or no time to go home, dress, and reach the Park, and, when it might be reached, less than an hour to inspect the museums. The working people should hav a whole day like Sunday to reap the benefit of seeing the museums satisfactorily.

"Fifth—Mr. Jesup says that the Sunday opening makes an additional expense. This is a very little difficulty. If the directors will open on Sunday they will find ample support both from the public treasury and by private contributions. The force of this objection is entirely lost from the fact that Mr. Crimmins offered to pay the whole additional expense, and the offer was refused. Mr. Jesup's difficulties are all assumed. There is no legal obstacle. The people desire the Sunday opening. It will make Sunday a better day. It will help the Saturday half holiday, and the expense can be easily met. The real difficulty is with the directors themselvs.

They do not want to open the museums on Sunday, and therefore they seek for reasons not to open; but the reasons in favor of opening are simply overwhelming. What I want to know is, will the directors giv an opportunity for these reasons to be presented, or do they purpose to ignore the expression in favor of Sunday opening by the citizens of New York?"

Mr. Putnam has the hearty support of the trades' assemblies in support of his efforts.

In regard to the above the Times editorially remarks:

We do not see how any impartial person can fail to agree that Mr. Putnam has the better of the argument. The reasons put forward in the pamphlet to which he replies are not strong from the point of view of public policy. If the contract under which the museums are now managed forbids a Sunday opening, a new contract can be made. Whether or not the working people, meaning the people to whom Sunday is the only day of leisure, desire the opening of the museums is a question upon which it is quite idle to speculate. It can be settled only by experiment. If, after the museums had been opened on Sunday long enough for the fact of the opening to be generally known, the attendance did not equal the attendance on week days, it might fairly be said that the people who could not go on week days would not go on Sunday. The additional Sunday labor caused by the opening of the museums would be so trifling, in its relation to the community at large, that it is not worth considering. It would amount to a fraction only of the labor now employed on Sunday in any line of horse-cars. The objection upon the score of expense seems to be disposed of by the offer of a single citizen to defray the whole cost of trying the experiment of Sunday openings.

These are the chief reasons given by Mr. Jesup and Mr. Huntington for objecting to open the museums on Sunday. They are so inadequate that Mr. Putnam's conjecture that they are pretexts is not unwarrantable. The real reason we may assume to be a conscientious objection to "secularizing the Sabbath." This objection justifies any person who entertains it not only in observing his Sunday in the manner which he believes to be commanded of him, but in refusing to be an activly consenting party to the observance of it in other ways by other persons. If officers of the museums should hold it to be their duty to resign rather than to acquiesce in the Sunday opening, they would be within their rights, just as they would be within their rights in resigning from the directorship of a horse railroad company that ran its cars on Sunday, or of a club that opened its doors to its members on that day. They would transcend their rights only when they attempted to impose their own views upon people who differed with them. When the existing Sunday laws were enacted the whole community held the same view about the observance of Sunday that is held by those who now oppose the opening of museums and libraries on Sunday. The opposition can not be justified except upon the ground that that view is not only the true one, but that it ought to be enforced upon those who dissent from it as well as upon those who agree with it. This is a ground that comparativly few people will now be ready to take. Those who do take it are bound by it, it seems to us, to oppose a great number of practices in which they now acquiesce.

After receiving several thousand names to a petition, some of the directors state such a general petition will do no good, but that they might pay attention to one signed by "heads of families," or by those who "helped to found the museums." This is a strange way of dealing with a question in which all citizens are interested, and in whose decision all should hav a voice. The most prominent men in the city hav signed the petition. Is not this enough? It is evident that the directors do allow their religious opinions to influence, and having conscientious scruples against Sunday opening, they mean to prevent it by all sorts of delay and the multiplication of difficulties. The discussion has now spread beyond the bounds of New York city, and the whole country is becoming interested in the progress of the agitation. The following is from the Philadelphia Press:

They hav very little public spirit in New York, and they rise superior to local pride on the idiotic theory that it is provincial. But they hav something that is either a real public opinion or a very fair substitute therefor. For years now this public opinion has demanded the opening of the museums and picture galleries on Sunday, and especially the opening of the Central Park Metropolitan Museum of Art on that day. For years the trustees of this institution hav opposed the notion, and against their fiat the appeals of the press and the public in general hav been as powerless as were the prosecutors of General Di Cesnola. Recently the president and vice-president made public a statement of their reasons for preferring to keep the museum closed. These are in turn answered by Mr. S. P. Putnam. There are various questions of detail, none of which amount to much, as they could readily be arranged if the trustees would consent to try the experiment demanded. This they will not do simply and solely because they believe Sunday is becoming more and more a day of diversion rather than devotion, and, disapproving this, they propose to stand in the breach as long as possible. Their consciences, which will not let them yield, probably prevent them from resigning and making room for directors who hav some idea of the functions of a museum and do not consider it a light and trivial place in which the Sunday that many now spend in the parks or in gin-mills or dance-halls would be frittered away. In Philadelphia we do not believe public piety has suffered since the Academy was opened on Sunday.

The discussion of the Nine Demands is becoming more general every year. They cannot be ignored. The decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa, the case of Mr. Prussing in the Chicago courts, the opening of the museums, etc., show how impossible it is to escape these advancing issues. There will be no cessation until these Nine Demands are acceded to, and if the friends of progress will only make good use of the opportunities daily opening for discussion and work, the total triumph of the principles of Secularization is only the question of a few years. We hav compelled the orthodox to a defense. This is the first step to victory. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Religious Persecution at Jobstown, N. J.

The following letter tells its own story:

NEW YORK, Jan. 2, 1886.

PIERRE LORILLARD, ESQ., Dear Sir: I gladly apologize for seeming to entertain the thought that you could be guilty of such despicable tyranny as to persecute any one on account of his honest convictions, no matter how much they might differ from your own.

Your sense of justice will prompt you at once to recall the expression "impertinent," in regard to my letter to you, when you learn that William Griswold says: "I did not write any order to hav men discharged; the foreman who did it, did it on his own responsibility."

I hav just received the affidavit of one of your employees (duly sworn before Wm. C. Curtis, justice of the peace, Burlington, N. J., Dec. 29th, 1885), "Who, on his oath, saith that one John G. Gardiner at that time in the employ of P. Lorillard as foreman in the said Lorillard's garden, did come to him on or about the 21st day of December, 1885. The said John G. Gardiner told him that he had orders to discharge all persons that joined Jobstown Secular Union."

This proves my letter, instead of being impertinent, was alike very pertinent and necessary, since such an order having been issued by those you had placed in authority, you alone had power to revoke it.

The American Secular Union appeals to your sense of liberty and justice, and requests you to immediately revoke the arbitrary and outrageous decree to discharge all your employees who take part in, or join the Jobstown Secular Union, or any orders to that effect, issued by your foreman Gardiner, or any other person.

Hav the kindness to promptly notify me of your action in the matter. Respectfully yours, C. B. REYNOLDS,
Chairman Ex. Com. Am. Secular Union.

It is clearly proven that the religious bigots did induce the issuing of orders that the employees of Pierre Lorillard, who dared to participate in the exercises of the science school, or join the Jobstown Secular Union, should be discharged. This attempt at terrorism was all the more infamous since it was unauthorized. To the laboring man with a family of little ones, or with an aged and infirm mother, or little orphaned brothers and sisters dependent on him, there can be no more terrible threat than loss of employment in the midst of winter, for it means suffering, privation, and misery to his loved ones.

Such a scheme of terrorism is worthy of the atrocious cruelty that invented the horrible implements of torture used by those devout daughters of the church—Bloody Queen Mary, and her most Protestant Christian sister, Queen Elizabeth.

Some of the Jobstown Christians seem to be actuated by the same spirit as the Pilgrim Fathers, who, themselvs fugitivs from Protestant persecution, as soon as they gained the power, hung the Quakers, and whipped the Baptists at the cart-tail, for daring to differ with them on points of Bible faith.

It would seem incredible that Baptists, who hav so denounced their fellow-Christians of different faiths for persecuting Baptists, should themselvs take the initiativ in persecuting men and women for desiring to attain scientific knowledge.

But we find all devotees of the Bible, no matter what their sect of denomination, become inoculated with the like persecuting spirit, and, whenever they hav the power, are prompt to exercise it. Read Deut. xiii, 6–10; Gal. i, 9; John xv, 6; Gal i, 8; 1 Cor. v, 5.

The Christians of Jobstown had no cause of offense against the Secular Union, for it was only just organized; their excitement and ire was not because in my lectures I had spoken harshly. It is admitted I spoke in the kindest, most considerate, and gentle manner. I made no assertions, no denunciations, but simply read texts from the Bible designed to prove that. Saturday, the seventh day, was enjoined on all God's true people to the end of time; that the observance of the seventh day was the sign between him and his people; that God declared "his covenant he would not break nor alter the thing that had gone out of his lips;" that Christ declared "Till heaven and earth passed, not the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t should be changed in the law of ten commandments;" that the spirit of God commanded James to write, "Whoso offends in one point is guilty of all;" that obedience was the great test, the only true worship, and that Paul declared, "Whose servants ye are to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey;" that there was no authority for Sunday observance except that of the pope and the holy Roman Catholic church, and therefore obedience of Sunday keeping was exalting the pope above God.

Several Christians admitted they had been deceived in regard to what the Bible taught on this subject. Hence the ire of the bigots. They could not justify the dogma of their creed, but they could attempt terrorism, and could persecute those they could not convince.

On the Sunday evening I refuted the assertion that Secularism destroyed all virtue, order, and society, and encouraged crime. I showed Secularists were not responsible for Nothingarians; that the one great principle of Secularism was justice; its motto—its first principle and desire—was to secure to all equal rights and liberty, regardless of religious faith or the lack of it; to learn what is right and do it; secure our happiness by promoting the happiness of others.

I refuted the assertion that Infidels were very ignorant of the Bible and the character of God therein portrayed; read the text showing the cruel, revengeful, vindictiv character of God, as given in the Bible, and appealed to the Christians if there was not some mistake of the translators, for not one present would or could adore such a being as the Bible described God to be. I read to them part of Matthew xxvi, where Jesus himself declares the genuin Secularist shall hav glad welcome into heaven, for the question would not be, "Did you believe right?" but "Did you liv right?"

Among Liberals, I am aware I present the hard facts in all their appalling hideousness, but in new fields I yield to none in care while endeavoring to awake to thought, to avoid arousing ire or prejudice. Could they hav refuted my argument, explained away the damaging effect of the texts quoted; could they hav satisfactorily answered the questions of awakened minds among them, they had not resorted to forged orders and attempts at terrorism and persecution.

This is not a mere local question, but a matter of vital import to every lover of right and liberty in the United States. If such terrorism is exercised on these employees unrebuked, how long ere every bigoted employer will dictate to all in his employ what religion they shall believe, what church they shall attend, what priest or parson they shall support, what faith their children shall be educated in?

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

I am glad Mr. P. Lorillard denies ever having authorized such an infamous order and resents the mere imputation of a possibility that he would sanction such infamous tyranny, and I rejoice that the matter assumed such shape as to render necessary the publication of all the facts, for now the heretofore most lukewarm Liberal cannot be longer blind to the necessity of union and efficient organization as the best means of protecting and defending the right to religious liberty and to effectually resist the encroachment of the bigoted, pliant tools of the church to coerce obedience to her insolent dictation. I hope the prompt and public disavowal by Mr. Pierre Lorillard of any such order as that the church devotees induced his foreman to issue may put an end to all trouble and anxiety on the part of his employees at Jobstown, and that the Jobstown Secular Union will fulfil its glorious mission of eradicating superstition, inspire the study of science, and induce all to love and practice justice. C. B. REYNOLDS.

What a Yarn!

From the Oshkosh, Wis., Daily Northwestern.

At the Congregational church on Sunday morning Professor Towle, in alluding to the efficacy of prayer, told how, in a time of great drouth in the state of Ohio, President Finney of Oberlin College prayed for rain, and prayed so effectivly that before the service was half over rain descended in torrents, although when service commenced the sky was clear and cloudless.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL will giv a course of Freethought lectures at Atlanta, Ill., Jan. 15th, 16th, and 17th.

C. B. REYNOLDS left New York last Monday night for Ballston Spa., N. Y., the home of Mr. William Thorpe, who became a Freethinker by his steps being (providentially?) directed to where a page of THE TRUTH SEEKER was lying in the street. From Ballston Spa Mr. Reynolds goes to Troy, and opens Saturday evening, the 9th, with his stereopticon exhibition.

ON Christmas Day, near Winfield, Kan., J. E. Remsburg experienced his fifth railroad wreck. He escaped unharmed, and, though delayed ten hours, reached Weir City in time to fill his engagement. Saturday evening he lectured on "Sabbath-Breaking," and on Sunday the Weir City band tendered him their services, preceding his evening lecture with an hour's concert. The parsons there feel that something should be done to stem this tide of Sabbath desecration.

LAST Sunday morning the Society of Humanists, or the Positivist Prolectaires of New York, as they variously style themselvs, met at 97 Market street in one of the few remaining Dutch edifices along the East river front. The meeting was held in a loft littered by the implements and appliances of the painter's art, and was composed of a group of mechanics engaged in the study of the writings of Auguste Comte, the founder of the Religion of Humanity. Mr. McCulloch, a sturdy-looking Highlander, read one of Mr. Frederic Harrison's Positivist prayers. The president of the society, Hugh McGregor, standing at a table adorned by a fine portrait of the deceased Henry Evans—the first Positivist workingman in New York—delivered an animated address on the subject of the previous Sunday's reading: "The objectiv basis of Positivism, or the order of the external world as revealed by science." The audience then commenced the reading of a chapter of the "General View of Positivism," each person in turn reading a paragraph. The book was now in the hands of a youth of eighteen, and now in the hands of a man of eighty years; now in the hands of an American, and next in the hands of a Russian, or an Englishman, or Swede, or a Frenchman. Among the audience was Mr. Claude Rodd, of the London Positivist Society, who delivered a prayer, and Mr. Gottfried Brandt, of the Stockholm, Sweden, group. "This meeting," said President McGregor, "I regard as one of the most remarkable evidences of the mighty forces that are fast crushing out the last remnant of an obsolete and effete theology."

Communications.

Conscience is Sick.—The Disease and the Remedy.

There is much complaint that people are not so conscientious in the civilized world as they ought to be so late in the nineteenth century of the Christian era. I believe this complaint is well-founded, and, recognizing the truth of the adage, "In the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom," will venture a few suggestions that hav occurred to me in explanation.

Within the past twenty years I hav heard many men and women, of full average intelligence, and members of high standing in Christian churches, say, in effect, that if it were not for the trinity of fear of hell, hope of heaven, and the love or fear of a God who will everlastingly punish or reward, they believed they should be terribly wicked, and would hav no motiv to be good. In the mean time I hav been making inquiries, as opportunity offered, of Christians and outsiders who professed to believe in the Christian religion, and expect to procure tickets to heaven before the last train starts; and I conclude from their testimony that such fear, hope, and love constitute the main part of the motivs of average people to do right and abstain from doing wrong. In the mean time I hav also been a frequent and attentiv listener to orthodox sermons, and am sure that I am fully within bounds in saying that in them, on an average, fear of hell and hope of heaven, as incentivs to do good and abstain from evil, hav been urged in the ratio of ninety per cent against the field. And it must be conceded by all investigators that in the past Christian teachers and believers relied less upon, and had a dimmer conception of, any other motivs to good conduct than they do now.

With all deference to whom it may offend, I feel it my duty to say that we might as well expect to grow fat on pigs by feeding them sand and saleratus, as to grow a healthy conscience on any such a diet.

And as, during the last two thousand years, conscience appears to hav been fed on little else, it is a wonder that it is not even smaller, weaker, and leaner than it is. Indeed, to me, it seems wonderful that there is now even so much of a trace of conscience left as there is said to be of the tail of the lower animal from which, according to the Darwin theory, man is supposed to hav developed, since it is a demonstrated fact that long disuse of any function, faculty, or member of mind of body will utterly destroy and eliminate it. Therefore the practice of doing good, or abstaining from evil, from any other motiv than the natural consequences of such actions, must prove the death-warrant of conscience, and will, in time, cause the species to become extinct. There would certainly be no serious difficulty in hiring criminals by the regiment to be good, i.e., to observe all doctrinal or biblically prescribed formalities of goodness, so long as their employer should pay them satisfactorily, especially if at the same time they were made to believe that so soon as they quit the good work they would be broiled in hell forever. But, in the nature of things this mode of inducing or forcing virtue would make only hypocrits. It could not in the least improve conscience. It would not even be likely to induce a particle more of skin-deep goodness than was thought necessary to secure the pay. And if the contract permitted them to put off the work until they were ready to commence it without affecting their pay, these employés would be apt to continue their deviltry as long as possible, for what to them, from force of habit, had come to be the fun of the thing.

But how shall we make conscientious men and women by any other method? What is there to build upon? Now, and as I think all can understand, there are some sounds and combinations of sounds that are agreeable to a healthy though uncultivated ear, and others that are disagreeable. Follow the hint given by this fact, and gradually introduce variations with prudence and judgment, and this ear, or those of the successors of its possessor, through the law of hereditary transmission, will, in time, as surely be brought to the highest stage of musical culture, along an ever-widening path of pleasure, as effect follows cause.

So with conscience—which is but another name for that faculty or quality of mind which, when properly educated and blended with the other faculties, also healthy and harmoniously developed, and all up to concert-pitch and in perfect tune, points out the best and most pleasant way of life, not only for the individual performer, but the way which, if he follows it, will confer the greatest benefit on all his influence reaches. And as to the lowest savage there are sounds that please, and sounds that displease, and hence some foundation to build a perception and love of and skill in music upon; so there is always some foundation to build a perception and love of good, or hatred of evil, upon. At first, the savage or child—which is but a savage—may be able only to distinguish good and evil actions as they are immediately productiv of bodily pleasure or pain to himself alone. Then, very gradually, as the reasoning powers are developed, he may comprehend the fact that some actions which giv him immediate pleasure or pain are always followed by secondary opposit consequences, far overbalancing the first effect; as in case of his gorging on palatable but unhealthy food, or having a diseased limb amputated. Here is a starting-point. A little farther on, if he is kept in the road, he will be able to look still farther and perceive that an action, or word, or law that at first and in itself givs only unalloyed pleasure to him, may, by its reflex or remote effects through other persons, always cause him great pain or disadvantage; as in case of a priest or ruler who should attempt to take all that his subjects raised instead of a tithe, whereby, whether he starved his subjects or caused them to rebel and kick him out of office, he would soon find himself deprived of his robes and compelled to root or die. Still farther on—much farther—I think he would clearly see that anything tending in the slightest degree to really improve the condition of the meanest and most remote individual of his race, would tend to increase his own and every one's safety, welfare, and happiness, and vice versa. And, then, he would naturally govern his conduct accordingly. And is not such a state of conscientious development attainable without fear of hell, hope of heaven, or love or fear of a "God of vengeance who will repay?" Ask "heathen" Marcus Aurelius, who seems not to hav been actuated by any such motivs. He said: "One man when he has done a service to another is ready to set it down to his account as a favor conferred. Another is not ready to do this, but still, in his own mind, he thinks of the man as his debtor, and he knows what he has done. A third, in a manner, does not know what he has done, but he is like a vine which has produced grapes and seeks for nothing more after it has once produced its proper fruit. As a horse when he has run, a dog when he has caught the game, a bee when it has made its honey, so a man when he has done a good act, does not call out for others to come and see, but he goes on to another good act, as a vine goes on to produce again the grapes in season.

"Must a man, then, be one of these who in a manner acts thus without observing it? Yes." And again he asks, "What more dost thou want when thou hast done a man a service? Art thou not content that thou has done something conformable to thy nature, and dost thou seek to be paid for it, just as if the eye demanded recompense for seeing, or the cultivated ear for hearing sweet music?" This is a fairly developed blossom of a conscience reared upon its natural mother's milk—i.e., attention to the laws of cause and effect. And here is a blossom of what I will call a conscience formed by the machine method—the heaven and hell forcing method, and one of the best thoroughbreds. It is in the language of the late "eminent divine," Jonathan Edwards—i.e., "The damned shall be tormented in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the lamb, so will they be tormented in the presence of the glorified saints. Hereby the saints will be more sensible how great their salvation is. The view of the misery of the damned will double the ardor of the love and gratitude of the saints" [machine-made saints] in heaven!" And here is this machine-made saint's (Edwards's) conception of the punishment for the slightest unpardoned fault of wife, or child, or mother, which his ideal God, that he thought worthy of love and worship, will inflict, and the view of which punishment over the heavenly walls will, in his opinion, double the ardor of the love and gratitude of all machine-made saints in heaven, i.e.: "The world will probably be converted into a great lake or liquid globe of fire, in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed, which shall always be in tempest, in which they shall be tossed to and fro, having no rest day or night, vast waves or billows of fire continually rolling over their heads, of which they shall ever be full of a quick sense within and without; their heads, their eyes, their tongues, their hands, their feet, their loins, and their vitals shall forever be full of glowimelting fire, enough to melt the very rocks and elements. Also they shall be full of the most quick and lively sense to feel torments, not for ten millions of ages, but for ever and ever, without any end at all!" Does not the contemplation of such a conscience as is here unavoidably implied, and of which there are now thousands of copies in Christendom, constrain the most hardened to exclaim, "O thou comparativly kind, considerate, and merciful devil, who (according to the myth) had pity and compassion on our race, and put it on the way of knowledge when thou sawest God would keep it ignorant, and who thus gave us all that is or can be worth having in life, death, or immortality, what do you think of the conscience of a God who would thus punish his helpless children for a sin of their first parents, or of that of any he might favor, who would hav 'the ardor of their love and gratitude thus doubled?'" Does any one want a conscience that would not scorn and even defy them both? I certainly do not. And I am sure that any blossom less lovely than that suggested in the quotation from Marcus Aurelius is not a mature thoroughbred of its kind. I believe that any one less repulsiv and horrible than that suggested by the quotation from Jonathan Edwards (and which might easily be matched by quotations from the most popular preachers of the day) is immature, a hybrid, or of a different species altogether, mistaken for the genuin machine-made conscience, for such a conscience is the natural offspring of that method.

But, after all, genuin conscience is but con(with) science (with science), always with it, always a part of it, so that neither can exist—at least, in a high degree—without the other. The eminent scientist, Professor Riley, has lately declared that "science, no matter in what fine-sounding names we clothe her, or how high above the average understanding we stilt her, is, after all, but common sense employed in discovering the hidden secrets of the universe and turning them to man's wants."

Is not this an apt, common-sense definition of science? And is it not equally applicable to conscience? And does it not follow that conscience and science—i.e., knowledge—if different at all, are yet the same, as is said to be the case with the persons of the trinity? And is it not almost demonstrated that as knowledge approaches completeness, it must necessarily tend to blend, culminate, lose, and in a manner forget itself in some such conscience or character as was suggested by Marcus Aurelius in the quotation above? If so, then the chief end of man should be, not to glorify any God—not a perfect God, for he could not need, desire, or even tolerate it, as he would be rendered positivly imperfect by it, as a perfect house would be rendered imperfect by any addition, or as a perfect man would be annoyed by the continual fawning of a pup. And certainly we should not worship or glorify a cruel, whimsical, capricious, jealous, exacting, incapable God, that had been outgeneraled and beaten all along the line every day since the dawn of creation (by a "poor devil"), for such would be only worthy of contempt or pity. But then man's chief and sole end and aim should be to get knowledge and understanding, to the end that he, his neighbors, his country, his race, and all things and beings affected by him, here and everywhere, now and forever, might derive from his existence the most and highest happiness and benefit such existence were capable of conferring. So long as a nation shall depend upon imported music-boxes, to be wound only when there is company for music, that nation will not develop musicians. No more, in my judgment, can a nation develop conscientious citizens so long as, and to the extent that, it depends upon an unnatural imported machine-method of inducing conscientious actions. We hav long been encouraging the development of musical talent by natural methods. As one result we hav musicians who are cheap at thousands of dollars per night.

We hav long been discouraging the development of conscience, by the only methods capable of developing it, and as one result, a man of more than fifty per cent of Marcus Aurelius's ideal would starve or be in the poor-house in any average community in less than a month in Christendom, and a character like Christ's would, in less than twenty-four hours, be "knocked out," left naked in the street, put in jail, or crucified, according as it were his day for turning his other cheek, giving his cloak also, raiding the stock exchange, reproving the scribes and Pharisees, or getting up a corner on mess-pork by bedeviling the farmers' hogs with devils, which, it would seem, might better hav been utilized in killing wolves, bears, and snakes. But Jonathan Edwards—what of him? I believe he would still draw as well as ever; or, at least, in the full proportion that machine-made conscience has not been hybridized by the pollen of common sense—or, I should say, as yet un-common sense. Sam Jones draws, also Spurgeon, Moody, et al, who giv the Jonathan Edwards style of hell straight and from the word Go.

Then let the light be turned on, for it is not only the panacea for dwarfed and perverted conscience, but it is the universal and only panacea for all the ills the children of men and women are heirs to—not the dim, one-sided light from the dark lanterns of any creeds or ologies, which seek to, and can only, perpetuate their existence by illuminating their own narrow points while keeping all else in outer darkness—but the broad, unobstructed light of nature. As such light prevails, all narrow creeds and ologies, all superstitions, will die or hunt their holes as do the owls and bats, that thrive only in the darkness, when the morning dawns. Then peace, good will, and universal welfare will take their place and prevail. "Get wisdom and get understanding."*

Pitt, O. CYRUS SEARS.

*I do not know, nor do I care, what idea Solomon wished to convey by the use of these words. But the idea I wish to convey is that wisdom may be regarded as the tools of the mind, and understanding as the ability to use these tools to best advantage. For, as one may hav the finest set of mechanical tools without the ability to make a decent bootjack with all of them, so he may hav vast stores of wisdom, i. e., know a multitude of facts, fancies, mathematics, philosophies, languages, etc., etc., without the ability to do himself or anyone a bootjack's worth of good with all of them, and be likely to cut his own fingers, or split some friend's head, whenever he tries to use them; while some "uneducated boor who never went to school" is actually revolutionizing things with a few rusty tools or ideas he has picked up by the wayside, but which he has learned how, and when, and where use to best advantage.

Liberal Leaves.

Will a few suggestions on the best way to spread our Freethought principles be in order?

What are we doing to reach the young? Hav we done our whole duty toward the children, and the young men and young women?

Since I hav been in the lecture-field I hav seen a generation file past me. When I began "preaching the gospel" of Liberalism men and women who are twenty-five years old now were babes then, and I am not as old as Methuselah was. Where are those babes to-day? With the exception of death's share, the bulk of them bow the knee at superstition's shrine —the cross of Christ. A few hundred thousand hav dropped out of the procession of millions who carry on their shoulders the Christian church. Are there one million activ Antichristians in America? I do not know. If there are even one hundred thousand men and women who do not fear the church's epithet, "Infidel," but rather proudly wear it, what are they doing to make their work effectiv? How meager our effort to save the children from Christian superstition! We lecture to full-grown men and women, whose plaudits over our radical utterances "make the welkin ring," while the wise-as-serpent, crafty Christians empty the cradle to fill the church. We talk about our "Radicalism." We are not Radical enough yet, if Radicalism means going to the "root of things," and it does. We need to reach out for the children. Let us take the children for Freethought and we will take the world. How shall it be done?

For nearly ten years we hav had a national organization. Through it we hav "demanded" that there should be no religious exercises in the public schools. We may hav accomplished something in this direction —a little, a very little. The pious teacher still shuts the belated children out in the cold while he "addresses the throne." Here and there is an "ungodly" but moral neighborhood where Liberals hav been numerous and aggressiv enough to make their demand for secular teaching felt.

Had we not better concentrate our forces upon one demand at a time? Is this not as urgent as any of the Nine? Let us secularize the common school. Our lecturers cannot do this work. They can help. The Liberal people must do it without depending upon any class or organization. It is no small job that is before us. To abolish religious exercises from the common schools is a herculean task. We should get an adequate conception of the work which is before us, and then labor for its accomplishment. This will be a good test of our real strength.

Now we come to the nub of my story—the "ways and means."

Liberal lecturers are abundantly able to hew out their own pathway through any orthodox wilderness, without taking one dollar from the National Secular Union. Instead of receiving pay from the Secular Union, every lecturer, I believe, will take genuin pleasure in soliciting funds for its treasury as soon as I state my proposition, which is this:

Let the funds belonging to the American Secular Union be devoted entirely to the printing and circulation of Liberal leaves. Let them be strewn like leaves of the forest, all over the country. Let the lecturers co-operate in this work by distributing "leaves" at all their public meetings; this labor on their part to be free.

Let us spread them so fast and so continuously that the "tracts" of the American Tract Society will be covered out of sight.

My suggestion is that leaves should not exceed eight small pages—from two pages to eight. Avoid prolixity, aim at brevity. Doubtless this matter will be in the hands of a publication committee.

It seems to me that the first work to be done should be for the children—free the free schools from Bible reading and other religious exercises. Let this be effected by the free circulation of Liberal leaves among the children themselvs, as well as their parents. The leaves should be matter-of-fact, sensible appeals to the reason of child and adult.

The committee of publication should call to their aid, as writers, the best among scientists and Freethinkers generally. Our Freethought women are fitted by nature and education to assume the initiativ in this practical work—Susan H. Wixon, Elmina D. Slenker, Dr. J. H. Severance, Helen H. Gardener, and others.

The cream of our Liberal literature can be culled from the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Boston Investigator, Banner of Light, and other Antichristian publications.

Let our purpose be openly avowed. Hav the children and all mankind understand our object from the start, which is to purge the common schools from religious exercises, and the school books from theological clauses. Then, when Secular schools will be an accomplished fact, the church will not say of the reform, "See what the church has done!"

I am "on the wing" in the lecture work, but shall be pleased to hear from Liberals. I may be addressed at Lake City, Minn., from which point my mail is forwarded to me. "Let us reason together."

W. F. JAMIESON.

The Situation.

Taking a general view of the influences at work directing and molding the opinions of men, and which are to result in benefit or damage to humanity, we find that of priestcraft. When they do not dictate personally, they manage to make agents of government officials, hence we hav in this country the president issuing under the seal of the government a proclamation pertaining to religious rites and ceremonies, thereby not only misrepresenting republican principles, but contemning that unbiased suffrage power which elevated him to the highest office within its gift. Taking the key from the president, state and municipal officers are in turn found playing into the hands of priestcraft with the implicit understanding that a good word will flow out from the pulpit, and, through a miseducated class, redound to the benefit of the politician. While this ball of self-aggrandizement is being tossed back and forth high above the people, they are admonished to view the exhibition with uncovered heads, in humility and admiration. The human race, if they would know it, hav no interest in common with the office of priestcraft. When a beast of burden carries a man there is compensation, for the man feeds, shelters, and cares for the comfort of the beast, but in the former case man clothes, feeds, shelters, and reverences the priest, and receives practically nothing in return.

The governments of both England and Italy are acting agents of priestcraft, and hav agreed, says the North German Gazette, upon joint action to reconquer the Soudan. If this attempted subjugation of the Soudan is not practically in the interest of Christian priestcraft, why do the minions of Catholic Rome join the hosts of Protestant England? Joint action in this particular case is considered advisable as a matter of policy. Christian priests' jealousy of mohammedan priests' success has reached a point where it can bury the hatchet of sectarian war long enough to jointly wreak vengeance upon so powerful a religious rival. There must hav been a tacit understanding with the French government that Catholic and Protestant priestcraft was to extend its influence by the subjugation of Anam, for we heard no protest against the inhuman butchery of the Chinese on their own soil from either church. But when it became apparent that the barbarous and inexcusable invasion of a neighboring country was having a contrary effect, we get the following from official sources at Rome: "Up to November 1st, in the vicarate of Cochin, since France commenced war, nine missionaries, seven nativ priests, sixty catechists, two hundred and seventy members of religious orders, and twenty-four thousand Christians hav been massacred; two hundred parishes, eleven orphan asylums, and ten convents destroyed, and two hundred and twenty-five churches burnt." From the above we conclude that God's patent cultivator, the Christian religion, has struck a snag both in China and Egypt. W. W. JUDSON.

Kansas City, Mo.

What is Money?

The advocates of unlimited silver money, like the paper inflationists, think that by adding to the amount of the currency you increase the wealth of the country. They cannot see that the currency of a country is merely the representativ of its wealth. If you double the amount of currency, either with paper or cheap silver or any other metal, you merely double the amount necessary to represent a certain amount of real wealth. Your currency only represents half as much; the real wealth—the product of the soil and necessities of life—is not changed in value. It is the representativ that is changed, and it takes two dollars instead of one to buy the same article.

And if you inflate the currency with silver and legislate to make it of equal value with gold, you giv the foreign merchant the chance of selling his goods at the inflated price and taking his pay in gold or its equivalent, thus practically reducing the tariff on his goods to the amount of the difference in the price of silver and gold in his country. We put on a tariff that shuts ourselvs out of foreign markets and then use a cheap currency that admits foreign goods practically with but little duty, and this we call statesmanship.

Some argue that we always hav had a silver currency, and why not hav it now, when silver is plenty and cheap? Do they know how small an amount of silver dollars were made since the government was founded, until the last few years? We always had a silver currency for small change, and it is a necessity, but even it was usually Mexican picayunes, bits, and quarters, and they were not legal tender for anything over five dollars, I believe. Some men talk about raising silver to par with gold and keeping it there. They might as well try to stop the Mississippi river, with the mines continually increasing the amount, as they are sure to do, and while it is used as money standard it will inevitably drive the gold out of the country and leave us nothing but a continually expanding currency for ourselvs, which in any dealings with other countries where they hav a staple currency would not be worth fifty cents on the dollar.

J. D.

Mental and Moral Attitude.

I am sometimes at a loss to understand why professed Liberals exhibit such petulance of spirit because others will persist in believing certain things that they deem dangerous and superstitious.

I am led to these remarks through reading "Letters from Friends," and observing how much of this petulance is manifested against Spiritualism, which one writer recently affirms is "the greatest humbug of the age," and which, Materialists will continue to declare, unfits its believers in a great measure for attending to the more important duties of the hour.

As an outspoken Spiritualist on all occasions that are necessary, I wish first to thank all honest Materialists heartily for the good service they hav rendered us in compelling us, in a certain sense, to sift the chaff from the wheat. Having done this, and having sought at all times to be just to every honest phase of thought, as well as to intelligently inform myself regarding the mental positions of the different Liberal schools, my main purpose is always to accept the truth, as I understand it, and to defend it according to the measure of my abilities.

While others, honestly, without doubt, come to a different conclusion, after an experience of over thirty years in the study, examination, and observation of the labors of Spiritualists and Spiritualism, and after reading extensivly the writings and objections of its opposers, my convictions are unchanged that it has been the grandest liberator of the century; that it has done more than any other reform to cripple orthodoxy, liberate woman, and make respectable the teachings of an Ingersoll, in less than half a century; more than Materialism, and science, and the more Liberal forms of Christianity did in two hundred years. Even now, it is this school in the main, or those who believe in more than "one world at a time," that has the courage to face the question of physiological reform, and who dare to hunt down the sham practices and pleas of popular purity, which, in the name of law, makes the present marriage system a means of enslaving woman and ministering to the baser instincts of man.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Tested by this rule, none are superior to the Spiritualists, and as a class, I think none equal in attending to the duties of the hour. Such is my experience with Spiritualistic families; and why not? They realize that we are as much spirits now as ever; that heaven is a condition, not a locality; that we are surrounded with angels in and out of the form, and that the great object of existence is the growth and grandeur of each individual soul into a noble, generous, and just individuality.

While I know that there is a large host of noble workers who esteem all such opinions weak and useless, I also know that vastly the larger per cent of the world's great reformers hav been persons of kindred spiritual sympathies and tendencies.

As I look over my list of personal friends and acquaintances, with whom I hav mingled and labored for forty-five years, there is this consciousness, that the Quakers or Friends, including the Shakers and the Spiritualists, hav been the most thorough workers for human deliverance.

Among the names I most delight to honor are Lucretia Mott, Amy Post, Mrs. Severance, L. Maria Child; Susan B. Anthony, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Phillips, Parker, Pillsbury, Bennett, and a great host of others, not forgetting the beloved Whittier—all never-tiring toilers for human redemption, and all having at least, or more than, a conviction that continued life and usefulness, after we hav cast off the earthly tabernacle, is one of the conditions of nature.

If asked for my reasons for thus believing, my reply is this, that what we hav observed and witnessed of the phenomena at our home and at other places, as well as what we hav gathered from reading and social intercourse, has been of that nature that Truesdell's "Bottom Facts," and the asseverations of Materialism do not affect. Evidence that came through the mediumship of wife and myself, where trickery and deceit were out of the question, prevents us from doubting continued progressiv life when we pass the bound of our earthly careers.

A mere statement of any particular class or phase of the phenomena would serve no good purpose as a means of convincing those who oppose us; for it is so easy, like Thomas Winter, to call it all bosh, all ghostly nonsense, or, like the charitable Liberal who of late says it is the "greatest humbug of the age." Suffice it to say, it is true to us, and a source of continued joy and peace. The dear mother who left the farm in 1846 does not seem afar off; she seems ever near, and under the inspiring influence of her deathless affection I meet, the more hopefully, whatever the present hath in store, or calleth upon me to perform. My highest ambition is to see the reign of justice triumphant, where men will no longer, animated by their littleness, deny to woman all they claim for themselvs, and where reformers will not, through moral cowardice, and in obedience to the dictum of Mrs. Grundy, put off any longer the discussion and agitation of any and every question that has for its object the well-being of our race.

Lockport, Ill. GEORGE LYNN.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 9, 1886.

READY THIS WEEK!

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of all the great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. We will renew one old subscription for a year, and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to one new subscriber for a year, for $5. Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get a new subscriber?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Mr. Jesup and the Museums.

The pressure upon the directors of the two museums in Central Park to open their doors upon Sundays has induced Mr. Morris K. Jesup, president of the American Museum of National History, to publish a pamphlet upon "The Museums in the Park. Should They Be Opened on Sunday?" Mr. Jesup's argument is also adopted by the managers of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, so that the public now has before it all that the managers of both museums can say against Sunday opening.

The arguments of Mr. Jesup are very weak, and he could hav saved himself much trouble by giving the real reason why he and his colleagues object to Sunday opening by simply writing, "We do not want to open the museums." That would cover all the ground. However, since he has not been honest enough to do this, we will note the main points of his ostensible reasons. The first is:

"1. Good faith in carrying out the contract between the city and the museums, under which the museums are conducted, seems to forbid their being opened on Sunday."

To sustain this he quotes from the contract with the city the article governing the opening of the museums:

"That the exhibition halls of said building shall, on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of each week, and on all legal and public holidays, except Sundays, be kept open and accessible to the public, free of charge, from nine o'clock A.M. until half an hour before sunset, under such rules and regulations as the party of the second part shall, from time to time, prescribe; but on the remaining days of the week the same shall be open only for exhibition to such persons, upon such terms as the said party of the second part shall from time to time direct. But all the professors and teachers of public schools of the city of New York, or other institutions of learning in said city, in which instruction is given free of charge, shall be admitted to all advantages afforded by said party of the second part, through its museum, library, apparatus, and collections, or otherwise, for study, research, and investigation, free of any charge therefor, and to the same extent and on the same terms and conditions as any other persons are admitted to such advantages aforesaid."

Mr. Jesup construes this to mean that the museums shall not be opened on Sunday. Any unprejudiced person, however, can see that the city only says to the managers: "You shall keep them open on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, and public holidays, but you need not on Sundays." Evidently the drawers of the contract regarded Sunday as a public holiday, and on account of its frequency absolved the managers from keeping open the museums on that day. The exception cannot be tortured into a prohibition. But if it could, it is very easy to amend the contract.

The next argument of Mr. Jesup is the expense. He claims that the museums are mainly supported by private subscriptions, and the subscribers will not contribute if the buildings are opened Sundays.

This expense account seems slightly mixed. Time and again the directors hav said that the city contributes about $12,000 annually to each of the museums. Inasmuch as the annual appropriation is $15,000 for each museum, we do not see any sufficient reason for stating the amount at $12,000. Again, turning to the City Record, the official journal of the municipality, we find that the employees of the museum are on the city pay-roll. On page 7 of the supplement to the Record of December 29, 1885, the comptroller reports that, under the New York city consolidation act of 1882, he has paid as follows:

July 3	Pay-roll, Laborers, etc., for two weeks ending June 27, 1885	$3.95
27	Pay-roll, Employees, Metropolitan Museum of Art, June, 1885	1,711.74
Aug. 5	Pay-roll Employees, American Museum of Natural History, June, 1885	1,613.30
14	Pay-roll, Laborers, etc., for two weeks ending August 8, 1885	5.78
15	Pay-roll, Employees, Metropolitan Museum of Art, July, 1885	1,691.74
19	Pay-roll, Employees, American Museum of Natural History, July, 1885.	1,821.60
Sept. 14	Pay-roll, Employees, Metropolitan Museum of Art; August, 1885	1,641.74
22	Pay-roll, Laborers, etc., for two weeks ending September 11, 1885	29.59
26	Pay-roll, Employees, American Museum of Natural History, Aug., 1885.	1,821.60
	Total	$10,341.04

Here is over ten thousand dollars paid within three months by the city. At the same rate the city would pay over forty thousand per year to the support of these institutions. We must confess that we do not understand the fiscal relations of these museums and the city.

Mr. Jesup's third argument is that "it is not for the interest of the people, especially of the workingmen, to open the museums on Sunday."

Of course Mr. Jesup knows better than the workingmen themselvs what is good for them, but we really wish he would let them speak for themselvs. The Central Labor Union of this city, which represents over 25,000 workingmen, hav passed a resolution asking for the opening, and several smaller unions hav followed suit. One of the many petitions which will be presented to Mr. Jesup and his fellow-directors, if he will allow the opportunity, is signed by one thousand workmen in the piano trade alone. Either these thousands of laborers err, or Mr. Jesup is mistaken about what is good for workingmen.

For his fourth argument, Mr. Jesup says the Englise people do not open their museums on Sunday. To strengthen whatever argument there may be in this he cites several pages of English opinions as to the beneficent influence of the "divine" Lord's day. This is bosh. Whether the working people of England wish their museums opened or not on Sundays is no concern of Americans. American working people do wish their museums opened, and it is their right to hav them opened. If a closed English museum is an argument against opening ours, then an open museum in Boston is an argument for opening. But what do we care what the English clergy think?

One reason heretofore given by Mr. Jesup we do not find in this pamphlet. It is that donations hav been made to the museums with the stipulation that the museums should not be opened on Sunday. On this point he contents himself with saying:

"I hav been looking over the names of those who hav given [to the museums] this large sum of money, exclusiv of the city. I hav no right to speak of them, or of their religious belief, but from what I know of their views, I am persuaded that the very large majority of these subscriptions hav come from those who desire to see the Lord's day observed and protected."

From this we are led to believe that Mr. Jesup's previous statements were in the nature of general observations and not exact facts. And from his pamphlet the general reader will certainly conclude, with us, that the only obstacle to opening the museums on Sundays is the lack of inclination on the part of Mr. Jesup and his fellow-directors.

Generous New York!

The comptroller's report of the money spent in the city of New York for the quarter ending September 30, 1885, makes a huge paper of sixty-six finely printed pages. It is interesting reading for tax payers, and not the least interesting portion is that relating to the support of asylums, reformatories, and charitable institutions. We condense:

Children's Fold.
For maintenance of children during quarter ending June, 30, 1885	$3,997.43
Foundling Asylum of the Sisters of Charity.
For maintenance of children during June and July, 1885	41,152.14
Hebrew Benevolent Society.
For care of children for quarter ending June, 1885, and amount omitted by mistake during the year 1884	11,624.44
Deaf Mute Institution.
For support of pupils for quarter ending June 30, 1885	3,110.42
Institution for the Blind.
For support of pupils for quarter ending June 30, 1885	1,800.00
Institution for Deaf and Dumb.
For support of pupils from April 1 to July 1, 1885	3,133.23
New York Juvenile Asylum.
For support of children for May, June, July, and August	33,979.80
New York Infant Asylum.
For maintenance of inmates for June, July, and August	19,277.12
New York Catholic Protectory.
For maintenance of children June, and July, 1885	37,542.58
Nursery and Child's Hospital.
For support of inmates during May, June, and July, 1885	25,562.89
Protestant Episcopal House of Mercy.
For support of inmates	244.41
Roman Catholic House of the Good Shepherd.
For support of inmates for quarter ending June 30, 1885	403.23
Shepherd's Fold (Protestant Episcopal).
On account of appropriation for the year	1,250.00
St. Joseph's Institution.
For support of inmates for quarter ending June 30, 1885	3,970.35
Five Points House of Industry (Protestant).
For support of inmates for quarter ending June 30, 1885	2,592.88
Association for Befriending Children and Girls.
For the four months ending August 31, 1885	3,361.01
Total	$193, 001.93

This total is a very respectable sum to be given private religious institutions for the support of inmates who could be cared for much cheaper, if not better, in places provided by the state. But so long as there are votes to be had by appropriating the city's money to "charitable" institutions we suppose the practice will be continued.

The only way to reform it is to change the laws of the state.

Happy.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Independent, has hit upon an easy plan for preparing editorial New Year greetings. On the first day of January, as everyone knows, the correct thing to say upon meeting a friend is, "Happy New Year!" "It is right and manly," concedes our religious contemporary, "to desire happiness." But if the world is to be truly good and happy, the heavenly father must be consulted. Having got thus far on his manuscript, the editor opens the Concordance at his elbow, turns the pages by Hab, Ham, etc., until he reaches Happy. Then his real labor begins, and he gets the Bible and copies:

"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding.

"He that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he.

"Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth: therefore despise thou not the chastening of the almighty.

"But, and if ye suffer for righteousness's sake, happy are ye; and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled.

"If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye: for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you.

"Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

"Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he.

"Happy is the man that feareth always.

"Behold, we count them happy which endure.

"He that keepeth the law, happy is he.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them,

"Happy is that people whose God is the Lord."

The labor of underscoring all this, that the compositor may put it in italics, exhausts the editor, and he closes his leader, thereby shortening it to the comprehension, and no doubt to the happiness, of the reader, who can spend the remainder of the day in reading a poem, specially cabled to the Independent, which appeared two years ago in the Youth's Companion, published in Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

A New Cure for Hydrophobia.

A clerical correspondent has sent to the Freeman's Journal (what a name for a Catholic paper!) what that paper calls a "valuable suggestion" concerning hydrophobia. Whether there be a natural remedy or not, he says, there is a supernatural remedy, well known in Holland and Belgium. "It is the intercession of St. Hubert!"

Saint Hubert, the correspondent explains, was bishop of Maestricht in the eighth century, and the faithful of Belgium and Holland possess unwavering faith in his intercession. In the Ardennes, he says, there is a place of pilgrimage dedicated to Mr. Hubert, called "Lille St. Hubert." A stole of the saint is kept here, "out of which threads are continually drawn, but which, it is said, never grows less in size." Certain obligations are imposed on the pilgrims, the fulfilment of which guards them against the danger of hydrophobia. It is well, the editor of the Freeman's Journal quotes commendingly from his correspondent, that this special devotion to St. Hubert should be made known. "St. Hubert is a much more real person than M. Pasteur. But to many M. Pasteur, of whom we now hear so much, is very real, while St. Hubert is vague. We hav a thousand times more faith in St. Hubert's intercession than in M. Pasteur's inoculation, unphilosophical as this assertion may seem to those scientists who, blind themselvs, are wholly led by half-blind senses."

These words hav the real old genuin Roman Catholic ring. The papists hav a cast-iron creed, a part of which is the belief in saints and the efficacy of their intercession with Mary, who influences her son, who in turn prevails with his supposed father. They are faithful to their creed in all its subtleties, dogmas, and absurdities. Though we may reasonably doubt whether the educated editor of the Freeman's Journal believes in the nonsense of his correspondent, we may be positivly certain that the majority of his readers do. And we may be just as sure that the editor and his priestly colleagues will use the superstitious faith of the Catholic populace to further the purposes of Rome as we are that St. Hubert's stole cannot hav thousands of unreplaced threads drawn from it without diminishing the original size of the stole.

If this tale came from the South of France, where the wooden-shod and leather-headed peasantry believe all the tales of apparitions of the Virgin and holy water cures the priests choose to tell them, it would be hardly worthy of notice. But it does not. It is told by an American priest to the American editor of a paper published in America for American readers. It is true the claims of these people to be Americans may rest on naturalization papers, but all the same they are here to stay, and they hav a vast influence in American affairs. To what depths of superstition they are sunk, then, cannot be a matter of no consequence to patriotic people. It is a matter of immense consequence.

When the archbishop of Montreal told his followers that the small-pox epidemic was a curse sent by God to punish them for holding an ice-carnival, and gave as the remedy more frequent and fervent prayers to the saints, it was thought that "his grace's" asininity could not be paralleled. But it has been; and the archbishop of Montreal and the editor of the Freeman's Journal (which, by the way, is one of the foremost Catholic papers of the country) must be harnessed together. And if the teachers hav such long ears, to what length must not the auricular appendages of the scholars reach!

Editorial Notes.

ITHACA, N. Y., has about 10,000 inhabitants, and a very liberal estimate finds only half of them at church on Sundays. The Rev. J. F. Clymer, Methodist, of the place, says there are five reasons why this is so: 1. Poverty; 2. Pride; 3. Absorption in business; 4. A spirit of retaliation; 5. Infidelity. Regarding this last Mr. Clymer said: "Human learning is thrusting the dagger of skepticism into the heart of the ministers. Many of the educated classes are casting the shadow of doubt on the divine origin of Christianity. Their influence is felt through the press, the popular lecture, our schools, colleges, and in the higher forms of social life." To clinch his argument on this point Mr. Clymer told the following story: "A lad of fourteen years, when questioned by a minister as to his faith in the Bible and in God, very haughtily replied: 'The scientific difficulties in the book of Genesis make it impossible to believe that the Bible was true.'" While we may sympathize with the minister, who knows less than a fourteen-year-old school-boy, we really cannot blame the people of Ithaca for remaining away from religious services presided over by dunces.

THE Rev. Kristofer Janson, who distinguished himself by preaching the first gentlemanly sermon about Colonel Ingersoll that ever was delivered in a pulpit, sends to the Old Curiosity Shop the following stories: "A farmer down in Iowa writes to me: 'The minister of the Norwegian Lutheran Synod tried recently to impress upon me that a man could very well be a Christian if he drank himself drunk sometimes. That the farmers here practice this, his good counsel, you may see from what one of them said when I spoke of calling you down for a lecture: "No, I prefer to go to a saloon and drink up those cents rather than to throw them off to this Kristofer Janson."' Another acquaintance of mine told me that he knew a farmer who wanted to be considered very religious, and who condemned all music as a sin. This farmer went to town and visited all the saloons, so that his comrade scarcely could get him home to the hotel. Coming there, he escaped without his boots, mingled in a quarrel, and was brought once more to the hotel after having obtained a sound thrashing. When his comrade the day after upbraided him for his behavior, he only answered, 'Yes, all of us sin, but it is still a comfort that we hav our faith left.' A lady of Minneapolis has told me that every time she engages servant girls she asks them if they belong to any orthodox society, and if they answer in the affirmativ she dismisses them at once, because she has had very sad experiences. A servant girl had stolen from her, and when she said to her that such an act was not in accordance with her Christian confession, the servant girl answered: 'If we never should sin, of what use then was Jesus Christ to us? He has atoned for all our sins.' This old faith must be very commodious."

THE American miners, writes Frank Wilkeson, are a bold, honest, hospitable race. They despise all sorts of meanness. They regard cowardice as a sin, and their saying, that the Lord hates a coward, is their faith. The larger portion of these men do not believe in a hereafter. They believe that men should not shirk danger; that they should not lie or steal; and that comrades should stand by one another to the death, and that the weak should not be oppressed. They also believe that American miners, well armed and decently mounted, can go anywhere and accomplish anything. Lands inhabited by hostil Indians are not sacred to these men. If they hav reason to believe that mineral lies in territory claimed by the Sioux, or Crows, or Apaches, they go there to see if the report is true. No danger deters them. No probability of death causes them to hesitate. They instantly decide that the possible reward they may secure is worth risking their lives for. These are the men who hav discovered the mineral wealth of the West. These are the men who hav explored the rolling, storm-tossed sea of wooded hills that extended from the northern Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast. They hav found whatever is of value in the far West. Their ranks are constantly recruited by additions from Western agriculturists. The ranks of the hunters of timid, inoffensiv Chinese are not recruited from the American miners. There was not an American-born miner in the cowardly mob that attacked and murdered the Chinese miners in Wyoming. I hav been informed, on good authority, that there was not an American miner in any of the mobs that attacked the Chinese miners in Washington territory.

THE publication day of the Labor Union, Grand Rapids, Mich., this year fell on Christmas day, and the editor wrote a little sermon: "All the world over to-day, wherever Christians are found, on land and sea, among rich and poor, this festival is welcomed and enjoyed as is no other in the whole year. And yet, viewed from a purely human standpoint, no other single event in the world's history has been the precursor of so much misery to mankind as the birth of that little child in the obscure village of Bethlehem. Announced ages before as the coming restorer of freedom and prosperity to his people, heralded as bringing to mankind peace and good will—the result was a flat and fearful failure. His own people, unable to understand him, refused to believe in him and at last judicially murdered him. The church subsequently founded in his name and professing to practice and inculcate his doctrins hastened to ally itself with the then greatest tyrant and meanest murderer in all the world, the Emperor Constantine; and as they had been persecuted and oppressed, the Christians became in turn persecutors and oppressors. And it seemed that almost simultaneously with the advent of the new religion what civilization and 'good will' there was on earth took fright and fled away, and left that long nightmare of centuries known in books as the Dark Ages. As that era of gloom and despair slowly passed away, a feverish activity took its place, and the church of Christ directed that activity into those gigantic forays of slaughter and pillage called the Crusades."

IT appears, says the Pall Mall Gazette, that there are still some Christians in the Russian empire who retain one characteristically pagan custom of their forefathers—the sacrifice of beasts as a part of public worship. Not long ago the St. Petersburg Zeitung stated that this practice was in use on certain occasions at Wyborg, in Northern Finland, among the Karates, who are devoted adherents to the orthodox church. The Sviet now states that the same ritual survives among the orthodox islanders of Mantschinschart, about twenty-five versts from the Monastery of Walaam, where there is a chapel dedicated to the Prophet Elias. Several times every year three oxen, and sometimes more, are brought by Christian pilgrims to the chapel, in the front of which they are solemnly slaughtered amid the ringing of bells. The dead beasts, however, are not now burnt, as they formerly were, but are boiled, and the pilgrims, together with the villagers, make a hearty dinner out of the sacred flesh.

A RUSSIAN artist, M. Vereschagens, has painted, and exhibited by means of photographic copies all through Austria and Hungary, two pictures, entitled respectivly "The Resurrection" and "The Holy Family." In these compositions Christ is depicted as a merely human and historical person. They are very realistic, and their intent is to show that Christ accomplished his miracles by trickery and without superhuman power. The pictures hav terrribly shocked the church dignitaries, and an expiatory mass has been celebrated in the Stephankirche in Vienna to ward off the evils that the exhibition of these pictures would otherwise bring. In Hungary Cardinal Haynald, archbishop of Calocza and Bacs, and the leading members of the Magyar nobility hav given notice that they will withdraw their patronage from any institution in Buda Pesth which exhibits Vereschagens's pictures. The imperial government at Vienna has taken up the question, and, as a test case, has ordered the prosecution of the Russian artist's Vienna agent for selling photographic copies of the objectionable pictures. If we can obtain a copy of these pictures, our readers shall hav an opportunity of seeing what shocks the good Christians of Europe. We fancy they can bear the sight without fainting.

A VERY good illustration of the injustice of exempting churches from taxation is the riots that hav been intermittently going on for some weeks in the Polish congregation at Detroit, Mich. The bishop dismissed the pastor for immorality and financial dishonesty, but the pastor would not be dismissed, and instigated his parishioners to violently oppose any change. Scores of people hav been severely wounded in the riots, and one man was shot dead. It has been necessary to station some scores of policemen around the church and the bishop's residence. The church's property is protected at an expense to the city of several thousands of dollars, but not one cent of public revenue is ever derived from the church. We fail to see how pecuniary injustice can extend much further than this.

LAWYER EDWARD W. CHAMBERLAIN reports that Mr. Burnham Wardwell is at the Putnam House, Fourth avenue, between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh streets. He is still suffering from the terrible starving and freezing inflicted upon him in Dedham jail, Mass., and during the whole of last week was confined to his bed. His many friends, however, says Mr. Chamberlain, will be gratified to know that he is surrounded by sympathetic people, who are doing all that kindness and humanity can do to mitigate his sufferings, and if there is any virtue in good nursing, the noble old man will soon again be in the field to continue his battle against cruelty and inhumanity in the treatment of prisoners, paupers, and the insane.

THE police justices of this city held their annual meeting last week to talk over the subject of crime in the metropolis. It appears by their discussion that the police justices contemplate with a good deal of uneasiness the recognized fact that crime does not lessen in the midst of large and increasing communities, New York being no exception to the general rule, and they are at a loss to account for it. But if they were philosophers, as well as magistrates, they would find the solution much easier. Statistics prove that crime, with the exception of ministerial slips, is the direct result of hard times. Preachers, however, commit crimes because a great many of them are hard cases.

MOODY is a literal interpreter of the Bible. In one of his sermons in Brooklyn some time since he gave his audience this bit of cultured rhetoric. It is exactly orthodox in the importance it attaches to belief: "That thief on the cross—he wasn't saved by works, was he? He had a spike through both hands; he couldn't work for salvation. And a nail through both feet; he could not walk to Christ for salvation, even if it was to be had that way. But there was no spike through his heart; he could believe."

THE Industrial Appeal, of Ottumwa, Ia., says: "The Appeal is a paper that goes to the homes of all classes of readers. The liberal-minded Christian and the Freethinker both fill up on our excellent mental nourishment. To the latter class we recommend the New York TRUTH SEEKER as a paper that will satisfy the most liberal-minded truth seekers of these very progressiv times."

"YOU, gentlemen, hav been preaching for years," said August Spies, the Socialistic agitator, to a lot of Chicago ministers, the other day, "and, except in a few individual cases, what hav you accomplished? Nothing that I can see. There is as much suffering and as much stealing as there ever was."

LAST "Hospital Sunday" the contribution of the Episcopal church of the Nativity amounted to the magnificent sum of three dollars. The Episcopalians claim exemption from taxation on the ground that churches are charitable institutions!

FREETHINKERS throughout the state who hav circulated petitions to the legislature for the taxation of church property are requested to forward them to us at once that they may be put in shape to present to the new legislature.

HIGH license has decreased the number of saloons in Chicago from 13,000 to 9,000, and added nearly $1,300,000 to the revenues of the city. This is a strong argument in favor of high license.

THOSE of our subscribers in the city who hav petitions for the opening of the museums on Sunday are requested to send them at once to this office.

Letters from Friends.

ELMOS, TEXAS, Dec. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 to pay my subscription for the year 1886. I cannot do without THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think it the best paper I ever read, though it is all I can do to pay for it on account of poverty. But it is doing good in this country. I send each number out on missionary work, and it does its work well wherever it is read. Free-thought advances slowly here, but, I think, surely. I remain

Yours, etc., HENRY MOODY.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Dec. 21, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $1 from Mr. Slenker for Campaign Fund, and $5 for myself, $4 of which you will place to my credit on account, and $1 for helping to illustrate THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish I could giv more toward this good work of picture-making, but I hav too many calls upon my slim funds. I spend very few dollars for my own special benefit; it nearly all goes to the public, one way and another, as well as my spare time and brain-work. Affectionately, ELMINA.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., Dec. 24, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $5 on THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year to a new subscriber, and on account for same. Hope you will alter your plan of make-up, and giv a table of contents of subjects in each number. It will save considerable time in finding items of importance to many readers, and we will do all we can to increase the circulation. This is the only thing that we think the paper now lacks, and hope it will be illustrated. This is the fifty-eighth person we hav induced to subscribe in our twelve years.

Wishing you a prosperous New Year, JOS. F. DUNN.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., Dec. 28, 285.

BROS. SOMERBY AND MACDONALD: Please find inclosed $3 for subscription to your valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for 286. Mrs. Thorpe and myself could not keep house without it, hence it will be a welcome visitor as long as I am able to pay for it. I hav been trying to get a few more names, but it seems to me that there are too many gods in Ballston. After Brother Reynolds has been here there may not be quite so many. I hope not. We are doing all we can for mental liberty. Hoping you all had a merry Christmas and will hav a happy New Year, and that THE TRUTH SEEKER may liv long and be powerful in doing much good in the cause we love, Yours in the cause of humanity,

WM. THORPE.

BURLINGTON JUNCTION, MO., Dec. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As my time expires the 1st of January, 1886, I hasten to renew, and send you one new solid subscriber. Inclosed find $5, which place to our credit.

Professor Jamieson has been with us this fall, and after delivering five or six lectures, met Elder Grubbs, a Campbellite, of Kentucky, in a six-session debate, and if ever a man got a good "grubbing," the elder got it. Mr. Jamieson is shaking the dry bones of orthodoxy all over Northwest Missouri worse than Joshua's rams' horns ever shook the walls of Jericho, and it is quite common to hear the old devilish spirit of persecuting Christianity crop out in such words as, "He ought not to be allowed to speak such sentiments," or, "He ought to be burnt at the stake," and many other expressions that only intolerance could suggest.

Although there are no organizations in this part of the state, the Agnostic element is very large, and lecturers draw good houses. The only drawback is that the many wait for the few to do all the financial part of the work.

I take great pains to leave my Liberal papers where they will be found by orthodox friends, and if it is thought that I don't notice it, the papers generally somehow walk away and are read. One of the most eager persons to read THE TRUTH SEEKER is a Covenanter God-in-the-Constitution minister, who has of late abandoned his eternal-punishment-predestination-foreordination and infant-damnation theory, and is fast approaching the light of Liberalism. Every subscriber should circulate his papers where they would do the most good, and induce everyone to read. As to illustrating THE TRUTH SEEKER, I would say that I am more in favor of increasing the circulation, so that the price could be lowered and brought within the reach of the many poor.

Yours fraternally, Geo. W. MAY.

EAST RODMAN, N. Y., Dec. 24, 285.

MR. EDITOR: One more paper and the time for which I hav paid is up, but I hav not the money to remit just now, and will hav to ask you to continue sending it (if you think you can trust me), and I will send the amount just as soon as I can spare the money, or until I can sell my hops.

Farmers are hard up; most farm produce depends upon foreign demand to establish our prices. They (foreign countries) hav stimulated production in their provinces of such products as they most need, until they are not compelled to buy nearly as much of this country (which has put on a tax sufficient to boycott their goods) and what they do buy is at lower prices. I think that prices will be lower next year than this, for the reason given above; I may be mistaken, I hope so at any rate.

The manufacturer's cry of "protection for the laborers" puts me in mind of Patrick Henry's speech in which he says: "Yes, such protection as wolves giv to lambs, covering and devouring them."

Quite a portion of the Democrat party started out a couple of years ago to revise the tariff and check the robbing of the masses for the especial benefit of the wealthy few, but I guess they sold out to the few; it looks so, to say the least.

Protectionists say that "high tariff builds up the manufactures and givs employment to countless laborers here," but when they hav got them built, and the natural law of supply and demand comes in to reduce prices and giv the people the benefit of their competition, they shut down from a third to one-half of the time, that their goods may be consumed at the protection prices. Now when are we (consumers) to get the benefit of this "building up of home manufactures?" It is very much like building competing lines of railroad, and after they are done the people begin to look for the great benefits they hav been told would arise from the competition. They (the railroads) pool their earnings and continue their exorbitant rates, and we are left out in the cold to whistle for the benefits, and we can whistle until the Methodist's hades freezes over, and we can walk over on the ice for all they care. The laborers are thrown out of employment and suffer for the necessities of life, or are reduced in pay until they are just as bad off, and if they strike, they, the manufacturers, will import laborers from other countries, which show just how much they sympathize with the laborer. Bosh! it is all moonshine.

How much money can I make out of protection? that is all there is of it. Well, there is more sense in the Catholic movement toward accomplishing their ends by the means they employ than there is in the protectionist's method of benefiting the country, and they will succeed long before the former gets his eyes open to the facts in the case. They (the Catholics) hav withdrawn their children from the common schools here and established a parochial one, whatever that is. Then they got up a fair and raised money enough to support it, the prominent business men of town aiding, that they may not be boycotted by them, and shelling out liberally that they may be patronized by them and considered very generous and almost a Catholic. And not a warning voice from the press of Watertown. Buildings hav been erected by the town sufficiently commodious and equipped to accommodate all of its children, but now they need not be so large or as many teachers employed.

The free school system has received a blow that will impair its usefulness; but then, the Bible had a place in every one and Protestant teachers to expound its meaning. There is not much difference between them, only the Catholics are better organized and can succeed in imparting more superstition to the pound than the Protestants can.

Now, about those pictures I should say, if money comes in sufficiently, put in a picture once in a while, and whenever able send out "missionary tracts" to those who will scatter them broadcast over this church-ridden country. There are many who do not know anything but what their good shepherd tells them, and we know that they are honorable men and wouldn't lie.

Heywood and Mitchell knew that their course at the state Convention would not meet with favor from a great majority of the Convention, and then to take the course they did shows them in no enviable light. As high-minded and noble men they stepped down and out in the estimation of a great majority of the Liberals of the country. Let them go. If they will issue a call for a convention and promulgate their mental idiosyncrasies as the prominent object of said convention, they could judge of their popularity by the numbers present, and then, perhaps, they could see themselvs as others see them. Hold a convention, please do, gentlemen, and not make a stink wherever you go, and you will be credited as more honorable, if your ideas do not meet with an overwhelming success. M. E. ROSE.

LEXINGTON, KY., Dec. 3, 285.

MR. EDITOR: At present we are having a refreshing season. For the past three weeks the community has been burdened with one of those old-fashioned hell-fire Methodist revival meetings. These meetings are presided over by one Rev. H. C. Morrison. To insure good houses he was advertised far and near as the eloquent "boy preacher." Right here it might be well to remark that "boy preachers" are becoming quite fashionable. Morrison is the third "boy" that has been developed during the past two or three years. But one, to judge from his looks, is bound to acknowledge that he is rather an old boy, for, to all outward appearance, he is a youth of at least thirty-five or forty years. This boy makes no pretension to education. He knows nothing, he says, about geography, arithmetic, history, or grammar. In fact, the only thing the "boy" does know is theology, and very little of that, if we are to judge from his alleged sermons. And thus does the old saying hold true, that the Lord always chooses the "weak vessels of the earth to confound the mighty." The "boy's" conversion, to say the least, was something remarkable, if not miraculous. Being originally a farm hand, or, as he himself puts it, a "plow-boy," the Lord suddenly and without warning called him to the ministry while working in the fields one day. This is rather a weak story, but I suppose we shall hav to accept it, considering that it is inspired like all other pulpit lies. If I were a profane worldling, I would say that the "boy" had the almighty dollar in view at the time of his "call," and that his "conversion" is simply a business affair, or, to put it more properly, a change of business.

Monday evening, Nov. 30th, was set apart for men only, ladies, of course, being excluded. Several Liberals attended, though out of curiosity only. The "boy" opened fire by saying he had no desire to frighten men into the church, but if they did not accept the savior (and he might hav added, the devil, too, for if you accept the "son," you are bound to accept his brother also), they would surely go to hell, and there burn in everlasting fire. Horrible news for the sinners! But none died from fright. "Some people," went on the "boy," "ask why we don't preach something new. My friends, there's nothing new to preach. It's the same old gospel. God's plan of salvation remains just the same, and so does hell; and you men who refuse the savior will find that my words are true when you land in hell." A friend, Mr. Charles C. Moore, formerly a preacher, but now an outspoken Freethinker, and editor of the Daily Observer at this place, remarked that it was something strange why ministers will persist in preaching an angry God and an endless hell. "Such ministers," he said, "must be bad, wicked men at heart." Brother Moore's statement is true, but it is easily explained. The devil is just as essential to the Christian scheme of salvation as Christ is himself. If there was no devil, there would be no sin, and consequently no use for the priest. If the devil must go, so must Christ; and if Christ must go, so must his gospel and the priest who fattens on that gospel. Remove the devil and his lake of fire, and you remove the priest. It is utterly impossible for the latter to do business without Beelzebub and his brimstone pit. You had just as well talk about life existing independent of the sun as talk about the sky-pilot preaching the gospel independent of his Satanic majesty. They are "pards" in the "divine plan," and inseparable.

Some time ago some one C. Fannie Allyn, I believe, suggested that Miss Susan H. Wixon write a story for THE TRUTH SEEKER columns. It was a good suggestion, for, with her well-known reputation as an authoress, the brilliant and gifted editress of the Children's Corner could write a story acceptable to all classes of readers. And I feel safe in saying that there is no one, not even a Christian, who would not read a story from the pen of this accomplished writer and kind-hearted lady. Her high literary attainments, her intellectuality, and her attractivness as a writer and novelist, together with her thorough understanding of human nature, unquestionably (I was going to say, imperativly) demand that she favor us with a romance. If her duties as editor of the Children's Corner will permit, by all means let us hav a serial from her gifted pen. Yours, for the story,

D. B. COZINE.

TORONTO, Dec. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: On Thursday evening last Mr. Charles Watts lectured on "English Politics and their Effect upon Ireland," in Temperance Hall in this city. The audience was small, but a more appreciativ one it would be difficult to find. The lecture was a carefully studied chapter of historical incidents, clear and perfectly lucid in depicting the effect of English misrule of the past on the present and future of what Mr. Watts eloquently described as the warm-hearted and impressionable people of Ireland. Any attempt of mine to describe the lecture would but do Mr. Watts an injustice; therefore, I will content myself by saying that of the many discourses it has been my good fortune to listen to by Mr. Watts this lecture named above by far transcends anything I ever heard upon the subject named. I am not alone in giving this unqualified approval; the audience returned an upstanding and unanimous vote of thanks, and before leaving the hall Mr. Watts was enthusiastically requested to repeat his lecture in the same place at an early date, due notice of which is to be given. A large committee was at once formed for the purpose of making arrangements for what promises to be one of the largest mass meetings ever held in the city of Toronto on the subject named. Yours sincerely, J. ICK EVANS.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 28, 1885.

TO HIRAM VAN PELT, Cleveland, O.: As you wish to be enlightened on the subject of hair-snakes, and as I hav not seen any reply to your letter of October 12th, I hav concluded to grant your request.

If you had examined those hairs with a microscope, you would hav discovered that there was no new creation or evolution about them, but that they were covered with the slime of the dirty and stagnant water, and that millions of little animalculæ had attached themselvs to the hair and carried it along, which gave it the appearance of life. The flesh which you thought you were stripping off the hair-snake was only the slime and dirt of the water and millions of these animalculæ, with which the stagnant water is filled where the hair-snake is found. Yours respectfully, C. D. WALLACE.

LAKE BREEZE, O., Nov. 19, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I want to get the papers containing an account of the Albany Convention and also the Cleveland Convention. I hav seen a copy or two of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and like it first-rate, all but the spelling. I don't think you can bring the general public up to your standard. You may be able to change their religious views, but you can't their spelling. Don't undertake too much at one time. It distresses me to read misspelled words if I know they are misspelled. It may be foolish, but I can't help it. Inclosed please find 25 cents, for which please send me your ANNUAL for 1885. Yours respectfully, WALT ROOT.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Dec. 27, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to me that Mr. Watson and some others take a wrong view of the rights of others at conventions of the League, or American Secular Union. They seem to think because we claim to be Freethinkers (although we publish to the world the Nine Demands that we are working for) that everybody, the advocates of every ism, hav a right to take up the time of our conventions to air their own peculiar doctrins on any and all subjects. This seems to me to be very unreasonable after the officers of the Secular Union hav spent money and time to advertise a meeting of the Union to advance our own ideas; after delegates hav spent money to attend, and taken two or three days to try and advance the cause we are organized for. A crowd of cranks of all kinds might take up the time of the convention, and the business for which it was called could not be attended to at all. Mr. Watson complains that the time of the Cleveland Convention was taken up with the program, and when anyone attempted to break in upon it they were sneered at by some and laughed at by others. And why should they not be? What right has anyone to break in on a convention of any kind to discuss matters entirely foreign to the object of the convention? Besides, the truth of the matter is that no one not properly sent as a delegate to represent some branch of the League, or Union, has any right to speak without asking leave of the delegates present. "Listening to twaddle," may be very well occasionally, but at a convention of that kind is not the place. If Freelovists, Spiritualists, and organizations of any other isms want to air their views, let them hav conventions every week if they want to, but I do not see that they hav any right to force their ideas on the Secular Union. J. DOWNES.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Dec. 29, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to say to Mr. Mallonee, through your paper, that it will be well for him to go to a woman's school and learn what the law is in regard to woman's property rights before he makes another statement so entirely false as that in his open letter to me of December 26th. He says, "In all the states the laws are in favor of the wife;" that the husband is obliged to support her to the best of his ability, and when he dies she is his heir for life. This is totally false; there hav been many changes in the laws of several of the states in the past twenty or thirty years in regard to the rights of a wife or widow, but they need a good deal of doctoring yet, and let my friend be assured that there are women enough at work to bring about further changes in the near future, as they worked in the past and succeeded, even though good men like our friend in Cleveland declared them "out of their sphere," and, more dreadful still, threaten them with old maidism, and pronounce them Freelovers. I wish he, Mr. Mallonee, had defined Freelove; I am sure as I understand the definition, he himself advocates it, where he says: "Any man or woman who needs law in the family, that is, man-made laws, had better draw out of the contest; they are not Liberals, they never will be, and the sooner they join a church the better for the cause of liberty." Now, for the life of me, I do not see why our correspondent is not, according to his own showing, a full-fledged Freelover—but he is a man, and it may not hurt a man to be called what is by some people considered a wicked name; I mean people who hav not seen this last definition. Mr. Mallonee thinks if "our girls were taught that a true wife and a true mother were the highest type of womanhood, there would be fewer unmarried women seeking employment."

There hav been for several years past a great many married men seeking employment. Would teaching them that the highest attainment for man is to be true husbands and fathers giv them employment? Perhaps it would be well to begin your teaching with your own sex. But to be serious, my brother, 'tis too late in the nineteenth century to call the "woman's rights reform" "twaddle," or to seek to circumscribe the sphere of woman. She was permitted to learn the alphabet, she has found out her capabilities, she believes fully in the right to a voice in the laws that govern her, she knows the power that money givs, she knows how, and is willing to earn it for herself; all she asks is "equal rights and fair play," and Mr. Mallonee is almost the only one of the professed Freethinkers who writes himself in opposition. Our late ex-president, good and true Elizur Wright, used to say the woman's rights reform was the reform of reforms. My article is long enough; if Mr. Mallonee finds it difficult to see the laws that I complain of, I will help him to find them in some future time. Faithfully, LUOY N. COLMAN.

LOUDONVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Our TRUTH SEEKER came to-day, and to-night, after reading the tale of "Roger the Cat" to my little daughter (omitting to read the expression "O Lord") I settled down for a good hour of steady reading, which I hav enjoyed immensely, and now I feel just like "speaking out in meetin'."

I am anxious for information. Mr. Mallonee says in his letter to Mrs. Colman: "A woman without a dime marries a man worth a million. Immediately he becomes responsible for all her debts. He is compelled to support her to the best of his ability, and when he dies she is his heir for life." Yes, she is heir for life to the amount of one-third only of his possession should he die without having made a will. Is not that the "law of the land?"

I remember reading of a case where a woman toiled many years with her husband to obtain a home of their own. Finally they succeeded, but had enjoyed it but a few years when the husband died one day, struck down without warning, and without having made his will. They had no children, and the law gave her only one-third of his possessions, and, as his nearest relativs claimed the other two-thirds, the poor woman was compelled to "move out," and see the home she had toiled for sold. Now I want to know, Mr. Editor, if that could really happen. Is that the law? If so, please inform Mr. Mallonee that we hav found one law which does not favor women.

What fallacy! Well, pray, Mr. Mallonee will you—can you explain to me why it is that, as a rule, a man can almost invariably command twice the salary that a woman does for the same work?

Oh, pshaw! that sounds like real orthodox cant: "If more of the girls of America were taught that a true wife, a true mother, were the highest types of womanhood, there would be fewer unmarried women seeking employment.

Let me tell you, sir, the real fact of the case is that if there were only more male children born and raised, there "would be fewer unmarried women seeking employment." What is a poor woman to do if she has lost father and brother, and no man has asked her to be a wife and a mother. The land is full of "true wives and mothers" who are toiling daily for "daily bread" for the little mouths, and whose hard earnings go many times into the saloon-keeper's till, while the true husband and true father (?) has ever ready a sneer for "an old maid."

Had we more true fathers and true husbands we should hav fewer aching hearts among the living and fewer broken hearts hidden under the sod.

A woman who owns her thousands or millions, be she single or married, must pay taxes the same as a man, yet can hav no voice in framing the laws of her land nor in choosing the men who shall.

Evidently Mr. Mallonee is a true husband with a "true wife," who has made him "her god and her king," therefore he has not realized the truth of the saying that "one half the world does not know how the other half livs."

"A lot of twaddle about 'slaves to man,' 'woman's wrongs,' and other nonsense," may probably unfit her for the duties of life, but the idea that she has a right to vote for the men (or women) who are to make the laws by which she is to be governed never unfitted any sensible woman for the duties of life. There's "twaddle" and twaddle, you know.

I am a Freethinker, but not a Freelover, and hav not the slightest sympathy with their views, believing in marriage and home as a grand and sacred institution. Like many others, I hav been interested in the discussions of the "Albany arrest." Mr. Palmer has my hearty approval of the course he has pursued. He is evidently a person of refinement. The Freelove element has done so much to retard our progress. Knowing their views on certain matters are so distasteful, they will, forgetting all the "little niceties" of life, crowd in and make trouble. I always feel so indignant when I think of Mr. Bennett's imprisonment! It brings to mind the picture of the grinning ape, using the poor cat's paw to draw the chestnuts out of the coals.

Yet I hav no doubt there are some among them pure and conscientious in their views, but it's like Mormonism, where a man, a good Mormon too, clings to his one wife and takes no other. Some people do not always practice what they preach, you hav probably observed.

My best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I wish you a Happy New Year, you and all the office.

Sincerely, WINEFORD V. ASPINWALL.

CALISTOGA, CAL., Dec. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In answer to Mr. Mallonee I should say, barring that particular resolution at the Convention, I think you are wrong. First of all, if women are citizens, the suffrage is their right. Second, they are our peers by nature if not by opportunity, and are entitled by nature to equal rights, opportunities, etc., whether they care to avail themselvs of them or not.

If Mrs. Mallonee is content to hav you represent her, that is her business. But many women prefer to represent themselvs. Many hav been badly treated by their male representativs, and for anyone to yield a part of her rights or freedom irretrievably, is to enslave herself to that extent. If she has the right to think for herself, naturally the right to act should go with it, else she is fettered, and many useful thoughts and impressions are "born to blush unseen, and waste their sweetness on the desert air."

The confidence and sweet assurance that my husband will watch over my political and legal rights is often lost. Husband dies or gets drunk; brothers and fathers are dead, drunk, or hav wives and other daughters to represent. And you know how well they do it. Of course, women suffragists talk about the right to cast a ballot. That is because they are denied that right. And if that right granted necessitates their carrying arms, their husbands, brothers, fathers, and lovers will hav a golden opportunity to show their chivalry. I would grant the ladies the right to vote, and claim the right of protection if I needed it. Has it really proved a failure wherever tried? And if it has, that is no valid reason, for self-government often failed before our American attempt. I say attempt, because it is only partial yet,

The probability, or certainty if you will, that orthodoxy will use the new element to outflank Secularism is not a question of right but expediency; and to my mind it is the only good leg the opposition has to stand on.

The idea that women might become mental duplicates of men does not strike me as very bad. Would not the effect be a little reversed, too?

Still, the greatest liberty consistent with the good of others can be met in no other way. To vote or take part in the government of the country will not destroy any natural function of their bodies; it will not change their sex. And why they should be less useful, less thoughtful, or less lovable, I do not comprehend. I know that men claim that they will cease to be virtuous, affectionate, womanly, etc. But I cannot view it that way.

"Strong-minded girls usually die old maids." Are you sure? Well, maybe they get as much pleasure out of life that way as if marrred. You might find double the number of weak-minded ones anxious to be free, if that is any argument.

I am willing to trust the women, nature, and freedom, and fight for them if necessary. J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

NEW GLASGOW, VA., Dec. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Although but a new reader of your valuable paper, I would like to make one or two suggestions through your columns, and trust that, if not acted on, they will at least be received as sincere. First, I would thank you for the good work you are doing in publishing such works as "Rational Communism," which is so able a work that I fancy it is written by Lyman Abbott, and if you would publish a few extracts from it (such as chapter IX. and X.) it would hav a much larger sale, for anyone reading that much would wish for more. Another point is the disposition to quarrel, among Liberals, on unimportant points. This is wrong, and can only lead to the hindering of our cause. It is bad enough for religious people to spend time, money, and brains fighting over some dogma or creed, without having our (at present) small force wrangling among ourselvs, and we should apply to those who advance what we think wrong ideas on love or other conduct the rule we want all others to apply on religious subjects—will it stand the test of common sense? If not, and your opponent thinks it will, why, drop the matter at once. The last thing I wish to mention is the subject of illustrating your paper. Don't. The illustrations will cost more than the same space in reading matter, and though they may attract some, I fear they will not convince any. For years I hav been a subscriber to the New York Sun, but I fancy there are many like myself who had much rather hav it without illustrations. For instance, its story "Snow-Bound at Eagle's." We all know what a coach looks like, how men on horseback appear, or how a girl would look sitting on a bed, etc., etc. Where is the mental benefit derived from the above? J. WHIDDEN GRAHAM.

MILWAUKEE, OR., Dec. 17, 285.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of December 5th appeareth John Hindman, "Surveyor and Civil Engineer," and offers two years' subscription to your paper to anyone "who will prove, by geometrical calculation, that the sun is over twelve thousand miles from the earth." I take it for granted that Mr. Hindman, being a civil engineer, knows approximately how much a degree measures on the surface of the earth. He knows, for instance, that in going north the north star will appear to rise about one degree for every 70 miles, and consequently that the computation of the earth's diameter at about 8,000 miles is nearly correct. Now, let him place himself in northern Mexico, or some point 23 degrees north latitude, where in the long days of summer the sun at noon will be directly overhead; then, if the sun is only 12,000 miles from the center of the earth he will be at noon only 8,000 miles, or one diameter of the earth, away. Hence the apparent diameter of the sun would be one and one-half as great at noon as at sun-rise. As there is no perceptible difference, the sun is not only more, but immensely more, than 12,000 miles away. Q. E. D.

Again, a circle with a radius of 12,000 miles has a diameter of 24,000 and a circumference of 75,000 miles. If the sun is only 12,000 miles from the earth and covers only about 30 minutes, or half a degree, or one 720th of a circumference of 75,000 miles, his diameter is only about 104 miles, instead of 800,000 miles, as astronomers compute! But the shadow of the moon in an eclipse sometimes comes to a point before it gets to the earth, showing that the sun is larger than the moon, but in a total eclipse the moon's shadow is sometimes 180 miles across. But the moon's shadow being a cone, the moon itself is much more than 180 miles in diameter. The moon covers about half a degree, or a 720th of its orbit. Hence we hav 720x180=129,600 miles for the circumference of the moon's orbit. The radius of that, or the distance of the moon, would be at least 21,600 miles. But the moon passes between the earth and the sun, hence the sun is still farther away, and therefore more than 12,000 miles. Q. E. D.

If the moon, which is nearer than the sun, was only 104 miles in diameter, one would only hav to go 104 miles on the surface of the earth to giv the moon a change of position among the stars of half a degree, or her apparent diameter, instead of over 2,000 miles, as is now the case.

Venus passes around the sun in an orbit inside that of the earth. When she is between us and the sun she is frequently hidden by the moon. Hence when the earth and moon and sun are in a line there is more than half the diameter of Venus's orbit between the sun and moon. But Venus is sometimes 47 degrees from the sun. Hence Venus must be more than two-thirds as far from the sun as the earth. Hence if you add Venus's distance to the moon's, you will hav the sun over 36,000 miles from the earth. This is no attempt to compute the distance of the sun, but to show friend Hindman that the solar system is no such little orrery as he supposes. If the sun were the distance and size he supposes, it would be no wonder that God occupied nearly six days in making this big earth, and only a part of one day in making the sun, moon, and stars, and setting them in the firmament. It would not take much of a god to stop such a little billiard ball as that for Joshua to finish his fight, or to set it back twelve degrees to illuminate Hezekiah's boil while they cured it by applying grape juice. Astronomy is no guess-work. Let friend Hindman study Proctor, beginning with the little problems, and he will find no ground for disputing the big ones. D. PRIESTLEY.

CUSSETA, GA., Dec. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I see my subscription has about run out. Please giv me credit for the inclosed amount. I am sorry to see so much division among Liberals. Some of them remind me of the Hardshell Babtists down here: they strike at every thing that comes within reach, especially whisky and Spiritualism. The Constitution and laws of the United States giv men the right to make and sell whisky, and then tax it ninety cents per gallon, and the state of Georgia can confiscate it. If that is not robbery between the two governments, I don't know what it is. We hav fought for state sovereignty and lost, then we took an oath to support the Constitution and laws of the United States. Now if the states can over-ride the Constitution and laws of the United States, what guarantee of protection hav we for anything? I lost $20,000 by that foolish attempt at state rights in 1865.

I was in hopes never to see it tried again. The Methodists here, and a good many others, claim that Prohibitionists are led by Providence. Well, Providence is a dangerous leader; he led Booth, Freeman, Guitean, and all those prowling hypocrits that liv off the labor of other people.

I hope in the future we may be more agreed. Churches here are anything but prosperous; numbers of them are abandoned. The gain of the Baptist the last year is only two per cent; Methodist no better; the others all dying out. One of the judges of the Supreme Court of Georgia is as strong a Materialist as I ever saw. He says religion will do for women and negroes, but not for white men. Lawyers are almost universally Infidel; so are the doctors.

Hoping you may hav a Merry Christmas and prosperous journey through life, I remain, W. F. MOULDER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Beauty.

I've seen the form of faultless mold,
By artless elegance controled
In every movement made;
In charms so rich fair Venus' art
Could scarce one absent grace impart,
With all her skill arrayed.

I've seen bright eyes, whose gentle beam
An angel's brow might well beseem,
So mild their witching gaze;
Soft cheeks I've seen of fairer hue
Than Eden's brightest rose e'er drew
From morning's purest rays.

Not graceful form, nor starry eye,
Nor rosy cheek of loveliest dye,
All cast in beauty's mold,
Hath such rare power to touch my breast
As (on some calm, sweet mien impressed)
The beauty of the soul.

Rude Time the casket may devour,
But far beyond his ruthless power
Its fadeless gem endures;
So age may bend the fairest form,
And mar each bright external charm,
Soul-charms age but matures.

S. BREWER.

Biographical.

HYPATIA.

Alexandria was, as is well-known, at one time the great seat of learning, the intellectual capital of the whole world. It will always be celebrated as the birth-place of some of the noblest and greatest of mankind. In Alexandria was born in the year 370 Hypatia, daughter of Theon, the famous mathematician of that period. He educated his daughter in mathematics and philosophy, taking great pains with her training. Little is known of her mother, but we infer that she must hav been a woman of noble qualities to be the parent of such a daughter as Hypathia, who was of that high order of intellect which absorbs knowledge readily, grasping and retaining all that came in her way.

She was sent to Athens in her early days and studied under the Neo-Platonist Plutarch, who taught philosophy and expounded the ancient oracles of Chaldea.

Under his instruction and guidance she examined theurgy, the supposed art of communicating with the gods.

Finishing her course of study, she returned to Alexandria, a lovely, highly-educated, and most accomplished woman.

She was one of the most beautiful of her sex, witty, eloquent, and possessing the most pleasing, gentle, and attractiv manners. With all her wit, beauty, and eloquence, she was neither vain, haughty, nor self-conceited.

She became a teacher, reopening the school of Plotinus, and soon became surrounded by a class of students, eager to learn of one so gifted and learned in the sciences.

She was called the "Mistress of Philosophy," and became the literary belle of Alexandria. Undoubtedly, she was the best educated woman of her time, and drew around her the savants and wise men of the city and surrounding country, among them the wise and learned Orestes, governor of Alexandria, who often consulted with her and deferred to her opinions in state matters.

Naturally, a woman of her beauty and rare abilities had many admirers, and many lovers sought her hand in marriage. But she turned from them all and resolved to devote her time and talents to teaching philosophy and mathematics.

It was unusual for a woman to teach in those days, and, as she did not accept the teachings of Christianity, she provoked the animosity of those Christians who were then in power. They declared she rebelled against the authority of St. Paul; as she did, for Paul had said a woman should not teach, but should sit in silence and subjection. Because Hypatia disregarded this edict and was a a pagan in religion, she became an object of spite to the bigots of the church. Not content with ridiculing her and applying to her the most opprobrious and false epithets, they resolved to put her to death, because she taught among other things that monasticism was silly and ridiculous.

Hypatia, notwithstanding the threats made against her person, pursued the even tenor of her way, studying and teaching every day.

Cyril, who at that time bishop of Alexandria, instructed his followers to silence the famous teacher, and told them what to do to carry out a most diabolical plan.

One day as she was returning from the academy where she taught she was seized by a party of monks, dragged from her carriage, and stripped naked in the public streets. They then forcibly carried her fainting form into a church, which was called Cæsareum, and there murdered her, scraping the flesh from her bones with sharp shells. After this was done they took her bones to a place called Cinaron and burnt them.

It was as if Philosophy was struck dumb at the martyrdom of this lovely and eloquent expounder of its doctrins. Literature was mangled with her sweet and attractiv person, and lay prostrate through that night of woe and despair very appropriately called the "Dark Ages." The indignation of her followers was so great at this cruel and most dastardly treatment of Hypatia that Christianity afterward changed the story of her horrible death to make it appear that she perished in the cause of religion! And in the Catholic church to-day she is numbered among the saints, known to followers of that religion as Saint Catharine of Alexandria!

Her martyrdom occurred in the year 415, and is among the cruelest and wickedest events that mark the history of the Christian religion in its early days. Of her writings—and it is believed she wrote many treatises on philosophic subjects—only an astronomical table is preserved.

She was a brave, pure, true woman, more than ordinarily gifted and eloquent, the most intellectual and attractiv champion of Freethought in the fifth century. Let us, while we lament her tragic and untimely end, emulate her virtues and gather inspiration from her courage and truthfulness, nor ever forget to honor Hypatia, the philosopher and Freethinker of Alexandria. S. H. W.

Wonders of the Ocean.

PEARLS.

Pearls, those beautiful, solidified drops of dew, are products of the ocean, the secretions of the pearl oyster. This animal is unlike the oyster we use for food. Its shell is lined with a white, silky, iridescent substance called nacre.

Pearls are formed from the same material, only, in place of being deposited upon the valves in layers, it is gathered together and condensed in small globules which develop themselvs on the insides of the shells, or in the fleshy part of the mollusks.

Generally there is some little particle of a foreign substance which serves as a nucleus to the concretions. It may be the egg of a fish, or a fine grain of sand around which is deposited in layers the highly-prized gem.

The Chinese, and other Eastern people, turn this fact to account, and introduce into the inside of the body of the oyster a round grain of sand, glass, or metal, which in time yields a pearl. Whole chaplets are sometimes produced by inserting grains of quartz connected by a thread.

These are used by religious persons to count their prayers. My dear children, is it not one vast pity that so many lovely things of earth, sea, and sky should be made emblems and instruments of superstition? Imagin yourselvs with a string of beads in your hands; you are hungry, you go to your father and ask for food, you slip a bead down on your string; you ask again, then slip another bead; he pays no attention; you ask many times, earnestly, pleadingly, slipping a bead through your fingers every time, till the whole number of forty or fifty beads hav passed along the string; your father has paid no attention whatever to you. He is certainly very unkind. Every good, sensible person will say so. Yet we are told that God, to whom these people pray, counting their beads over and over, is a kind father, but he acts just like the cruel father whom you hav asked for bread. I hope no children who read our good Liberal, common-sense papers will ever tease God for things they can get by their own endeavor, and, indeed, for no other things; it is lost time and wasted force.

If you remember this, and act accordingly, it will be as a valuable pearl of wisdom to you.

Coming back to our sea pearls, I must tell you how they are obtained from the depths of the ocean. The oyster is procured by diving. The divers divide themselvs into groups of five men each, who labor and rest alternately. They dive down from forty to sixty feet, often further, and remain down from thirty to eighty seconds. Each man has a stone fastened to one foot to make him descend rapidly. Having reached the bottom he throws himself on his face and gathers all the oysters within his reach, then pulls a cord attached to his person as a signal to the men above, who quickly draw him to the surface.

A good diver will go down fifteen or twenty times in succession. The labor is extremely severe; sometimes as the diver comes above the water blood will issue from his ears, nose, and mouth; he is also in danger of being devoured by sharks, which lie in wait near the diving-places.

At noonday a gun is fired from the shore as a signal for all the boats to come in, so all the oysters may be searched for pearls; this must be done before night sets in, in order to prevent robbery. Yet, with all care and watching, a diver will sometimes find a valuable pearl and swallow it in a "jiffy" when no one sees him. Of course, it is indigestible, and passes through the alimentary canal, and is again found by the cunning thief.

After the pearls are taken from the shells they are sold by weight; those taken from the bodies of the oysters are the purest, and are termed paragons, or virgin pearls. In cleansing them they are placed in sacks with powdered nacre, and worked to polish them. They are then passed through a series of sieves, in order to sort them according to size.

The shah of Persia has, perhaps, the richest pearl in the world; it is valued at $900,000.

Denver, Col. MRS. BUCKNER-JOHNSON.

About the Moon and Earth.

Professor Ball, the astronomer, tells us that the ocean tides, which are caused by the moon's attraction, operate as a brake upon the rotation of the earth on its axis. The moon is very slowly receding from the earth, and as the earth's daily revolution is being continually retarded, the days are growing longer in the average. The matter is not likely soon to become a factor in determining the time or wages for a day's work, since the day only lengthens about one second every thousand years. The change, however, is constant, and will go on until the earth ceases entirely to revolve. Some fifty million years ago the moon was so close to the earth as almost to touch it, and spun around the earth every three hours. It is one of the gratifying facts that while many of these calculations can be made with great exactness, the circumstances are such that an error of a few thousand centuries is of no particular consequence.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—A PALINDROMIC SQUARE.

A professor of Hebrew, and Latin, and Greek,
A nativ of Friesland, for the first you must seek.
The Bible translation in Dutch he compared
With other translations and "original word,"
Wherein he so forcibly showed the great gain
Of using the Hebrew and Greek to explain,
That thereafter a knowledge thereof was required
By some synods of those who to pulpits aspired.
No Moodys, or Joneses, or Jaspers they sent
To explain what the great Jewish "Jabberwock" meant.
Had these synods for natural sciences held
The Cooks and the Talmages, too, were expelled.
Contemporaneous with Bruno divine
He died in the Era of Man twenty-nine.
Anything very minute is the second,
A small man or creature, a dwarf, Milton reckoned;
'Tis only a drop of the limitless tide;
To animalculæ and such things applied.
'Tis a small kind of type, or yet, if you wish,
We'll call it a minnow, a very small fish.
Yet a second, my first you must never suppose,
For he had outgrown his small clerical clothes.
A genus of tropical plants is the third;
A sour-sop, perhaps, is a more common word.
The fourth, and the second, the last and the first,
By pairs are the same, each the same, too, reversed.
No matter which side of the square is below,
To the left or the right, down or up you may go.

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

2.—RIDDLE.

What root is stronger than oxen?

I. A. POOL.

3.—MATHEMATICAL.

A's money, plus four-fifths of itself, equals B's. What per cent must B lose to hav the same as A?

WM. SCOTT.

4.—MATHEMATICAL.

$1,200, placed at compound interest for the term of five years, amounts to $3,000. What is the rate per cent?

G. W. WILLIAMS.
Aledo, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, DEC. 26, 1885.

2.—19.39x.

3.—"Every honest miller has a golden thumb."

4.—A hog's head.

SOLVERS.—Alex. Calder, Kate Branton, O. F. Whipple.

Chat with Puzzlers.

LENNA G. ATWOOD.—You solved the problem correctly. We would be pleased to hav a longer letter from you for our correspondence column.

J. K. P. B.—We are glad to hear from you again. We all miss you when you are not in the Puzzle Box. The absence of one of our best puzzlers is explained by the fact that he has turned astrologer! We shall expect our horoscope will be cast without delay.

EPISCOPUS.—Seven is the "lucky number," and Pauline is right—the girls do hav the hardest lot. We are overrun with communications and puzzles, and all are welcome, but some must wait. In the mean time, let no one get "miffed," or get "hoppin' mad" at trifles. We never will hit anybody's "crazybone" or tread on literary corns if we can help it.—ED. C. C.

Correspondence.

ONT., Dec. 5, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father and mother read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and they hav four little Infidels that read the Children's Corner, of which I am the eldest except one. I never see any letters in the Corner from southern California, so I thought I would write you one if you think it is good enough to print. We came down from Dakota two years ago because my father was sick. Father and I and a little brother came around the Southern route. We were ten days on the cars. We saw lots of Indians and cowboys, and I went up to the fort at Yuma. We saw big herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. We had lots of fun. My mother and sister and eldest brother came by the Northern Pacific three months after we did. This is a very nice country. We can get fruit every month in the year. We hav oranges ripe now, but we miss the snow and ice. We never hav any here, so we missed the fun of skating and sleigh-riding downhill, but we get lots of other things to make up for it. We all go to school now. The school is kept in one room of the Methodist College. The teacher used to march us all into the chapel for reading and prayer. My father stopped us and she did not go in any more and got awful mad. We play at noon a game of ball and hav a good time now. I must close, and if this is any good I will try again some time. I am only twelve years old, and never tried to write one like this before. I don't know whether you can read it or not.

LUTHER JOHNS.

[A very good letter, Luther. Let us hear from you again.—ED. C. C.]

OAK POINT, W. T., Dec. 21, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: If you are not too much annoyed with letters from young misses like myself, I thought perhaps you would like to hear from some one out here. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for the last six years, and we all like it very much. I am ten years old, and go to the district school in summer, and in winter we hav a teacher at home. This last summer we had a lady teacher, and a very religious one, too. My sister and I hav always taken pieces out of THE TRUTH SEEKER to speak in school on Fridays, and on one occasion this lady told us to hav some good pieces, for she expected visitors. My sister spoke "Mr. Tubbs's Christmas," and I spoke the "Young Inquirer," both pieces taken out of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. The lady was so shocked that she afterward would allow us to speak only such pieces as she gave us.

Dear Miss Wixon, we are having a very pleasant winter out here. We hav flowers in bloom in our garden, and plenty of wild flowers all around us, and only three days before Christmas. I wish you and all connected with THE TRUTH SEEKER, a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. Very respectfully, from your little friend, LIZZIE LAWSON.

[We are never annoyed by letters from our friends. We are always pleased to hear from them, especially when they are as interesting as the above. Lizzie's teacher probably has not had the advantage of reading so excellent a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER, or she would not be so bigoted. We are sorry for her and hope that time will set her right. We thank you, Lizzie, for your kind wishes, and trust there are many happy years before you and all our friends and readers.—ED. C. C.]

FLORENCE, WIS., Dec. 8, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: When papa brings home THE TRUTH SEEKER I am always glad to look over the Children's Corner. I am only nine years old. I am in the fourth reader at school. I love my teacher very much, and think you must hav been a teacher some time, as you like the children so much. Some of the puzzles I can make out with papa's help. I write letters to my grandmas and cousins, and uncle; some are in Colorado and some are in Ohio. I guess you will get tired reading such a long letter, so I will close.

From your little friend, OLA MARSH.

[You are right, Ola dear, in thinking we hav been a school teacher, and we are still teaching a large school in the Children's Corner, and Ola is one among our bright little scholars.—ED. C. C.]

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

"ZITTA KII."

A new book by Owen E. Longsdorf, of interest to all Liberals and lovers of thought. Neatly bound in cloth, gilt edges, on fine heavy paper. Price one dollar, postage free.

Address the author, 12 Louisa street, Williamsport, Pa. 3teow2

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Friendship Liberal League No. 257, of Philadelphia, will celebrate the 149th anniversary of the birth of the Author-hero,

THOMAS PAINE,

January 31st, 1886, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets, at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M., to consist of addresses, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. Entertainments free.

Supper at 5:30 P.M. Tickets for supper, 25 cents.

Liberals throughout the state invited.

3t2

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

PRICE, $1.25.

THE STORY HOUR.

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

By SUSAN H. WIXON.
Author of APPLES OF GOLD, ALL IN A LIFETIME, Etc.

WITH NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Between the dark and the daylight, when the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations that is known as the children's hour."
LONGFELLOW.

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED BY THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 CLINTON PLACE.

THE SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethough would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

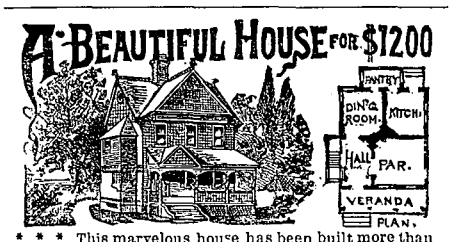
POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.



Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION. (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—
J. E. REMSBURG.
Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place. NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

SEND TO ELMINA FOR THEM.

DIANA.—A startling book! Original in theory, scientific in treatment, and unobjectionable in language. None should marry without reading "Diana." Sexual satisfaction through magnetic influence Love rendered permanent and lasting. Third edition, enlarged, revised, and improved. Price, 25 cents.

SOCIOLOGY.—Consisting of essays, poems, short lives of Land Reformers and other reformatory topics; worth $2; bound in cloth and sold for 50 cents. Written by Masquerier, a good old man who has spent a lifetime in trying to help humanity.

THE DARWINS.—By Elmina. Price, 50 cents. "I have read 'The Darwins,' and am pleased with it; and so are all to whom I have lent it. Were such works more plenty, Christians would be less numerous."—D. Nielson. Three books for $1.00, and Green's Freethought Directory, price, $2.00, sent also for $1.10 $2.10 for all four.

Address MRS. E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

Poetry.

The Sphinx.

The mystery of good and ill,
The mystery of joy and woe,
Love's ecstatic, burning thrill,
Pain's keen darts and quivering throe;
Life, and bliss, and harmony,
Death, and fear, and misery,
Instinct, thought, and human brain,
Spirit, heaven, or future pain;
God, or law-evolving Chance,
Design, or atoms' whirling dance,
What we guess, and what we know,
Whence we came, and whither we go,
Skiey worlds, and monads small—
Riddles one, and riddles all.

In our hands one only clue,
What seems right to bravely do.
Revealed shall all riddles be
Only to Sincerity. J. WM. LLOYD.

Keep Moving.

The swallow feeds on tireless wings;
"Honey costs work," the worker sings;
No good comes save what effort brings—
Keep moving.

Slowblood mopes through life's monotone,
Nor sees his path with pearls bestrewn.
These gems alertness gets alone—
Keep moving.

In youth's unrest, its grief and glee,
Tentativ evolution see,
Building the man that is to be—
Keep moving.

The rivers seaward ever flow,
Singing and shining as they go;
Still pools are pestilential, so—
Keep moving.

The earth hath its diurnal whirl,
The moon is night's revolving pearl,
The outer orbs a stellar swirl—
Keep moving.

The winds from many quarters blow,
The clouds float o'er us fleet or slow,
The tides incessant ebb and flow—
Keep moving.

Wouldst fain see superstition die?
Nail priestcraft's sanctimonious lie?
See knowledge beam from freedom's eye?
Keep moving.

Dost long for lucre, power, or fame?
(A gilded life, a sounding name?)
A lover, love?—whate'er thy game—
Keep moving.

Brooklyn. JAMES P. KENYON.

Book Notices.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. Ingalls. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price $1.

We hav received from the TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city, a book of 320 pages, showing the cause of poverty and wealth: "The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment," by J. K. Ingalls. It shows how nations hav fought, the stronger oppressing the weaker, and appropriating their wealth; the tendency of our own country to the same barbaric action, on account of the extravagant growth of wealth and the increase of poverty. No action of our government to equalize the toiling multitude with those who toil not, by giving them a fair proportion of the land of our country. It is a work that Congressmen and legislators should read and apply the remedy for those they profess to represent, and avert the impending crisis of desolating wars. It is a book that all who can should read, and particularly the very wealthy of our country, who are in the greatest danger should an outbreak of the masses occur. Almighty Nature proclaims the equality of man, and they who trample upon her laws must suffer the penalty of her omnipotent tribunal. If the wealthy bring on their own destruction, then there is no power on earth to prevent it. No law will prevent a sweeping tornado in its course.—Liberal.

In this fresh contribution to the ever increasing volume of literature on economic questions, the author endeavors to show that land and labor are the only factors in production, and hav no exchangeable ratio to their own products; that labor, divorced from, or disinherited, of the land, is only an abstraction without productiv power, and that land without the application of labor is unproductiv of economic values; that the whole device of income without work is fraudulent, and that all exchanges which involve pure profit, rent and interest, to the extent that they involve them, are no economic exchanges whatever, but the fraudulent or hazardous obtaining of something for nothing. Mr. Ingalls asserts that "we are living under a system of capitalistic aggrandizement, or commercial monarchism, which has no parallel in the history of our race." He believes, however, that there is a principle of law which will giv an equitable share of the products of industry to each who shares the labor, and that to discover and record this law is the true province of the legislator.—Chicago Evening Journal.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. By Helen H. Gardener. With an Introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. Price $1.00; paper 50 cents. The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Miss Gardener is a young lady who has a mission, and this mission is to help women to lift themselvs up from the position of dependence in which they now are, and the first step she takes to advance that work is to show the fallacy of Bible teachings as regards women, and the dependent position which they must forcibly occupy so long as they permit these teachings to control their conduct and to regulate their social status. In pursuance of her object she has delivered several lectures, which are reprinted in the work before us. These lectures rank far above the average and will take place among the best. They are not only logical, practical, and sprightly, being enlivened by a keen wit and much latent humor, but there is an earnestness in them that makes itself felt in every word, and sends them home to the hearts of the hearers.

One feature specially pleases us. Miss Gardener does not abuse the men for women's position and beg for better treatment. She calls upon the women to dare to think and act for themselvs, and to gain the place which rightly belongs to them. She recognizes, if not in so many words, yet by the whole tenor of her arguments, that this world is a place of conflict, where each must bear his part—in thinking as well as working—but she indignantly throws off the fetters which the Christian religion has twined around her, and which forbid women to act and to think as their intelligence and their desires would prompt.

While the matter in these lectures is all good, we feel that it is specially good as coming from a woman, for it is a sign that the good work is progressing and that the seed is bearing its fruits. It is indeed progress that a young, refined, handsome woman should dare to mount the rostrum and address large audiences in behalf of her sex and to impeach before the bar of reason the false teachings which hav been so effectual in keeping women in their position of industrial, political, and social dependence, and it is the more encouraging that, instead of being frowned upon and discouraged, Miss Gardener should be welcomed by large audiences, her lectures commented favorably upon by the leading papers, and reprinted in the handsome form presented in the book before us.

We hope and believe that the book will meet with a large sale. It contains a handsome picture of the gifted lecturer, and is such a book as all thinking women ought to own and feel proud of as containing an earnest defense of their rights by one of their own number.—The Sociologist.

"Men, Women, and Gods" is the title of a recent work by Helen H. Gardener, who will be recalled as having lectured in this city some time ago. It has an introduction written by Robert G. Ingersoll, and is dedicated to Mrs. Ingersoll, to whom the author refers as "the brave, happy wife of America's greatest orator and woman's truest friend." Miss Gardener, we believe, is in some sense a protégé of Ingersoll, who "backs her up" in her views of things. The book consists of three lectures, in which the author ventilates her opinions of the Bible, and of the treatment and condition of women as related in that volume, and through the various records of the world's history. Colonel Ingersoll declares that the writer of the book has "read the Bible with open eyes," with vision unclouded by the mist of sentimentality, and has had the courage to tell the result of her investigations, and that no human being can answer her arguments. It certainly is a red-hot book. It contains a picture of the author and her autograph. Published by The Truth Seeker Company, New York.—Syracuse Herald.

"Men, Women, and Gods, and Other Lectures," by Helen Gardener, with an Introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Well, well! This is quite superb! Every woman who is tired of slavery, and thinks the orthodox Bible is humiliating her too much, to require her to "ask her husband at home" on matters wherein she is better posted than he is, should hav this book. The author handles the clergy and the system of Christianity with a master hand, and has the faculty of getting at the point by short cuts—just like a woman. She tells of a clergyman who was giving his "reason for opposing medical or scientific training of any sort for women." He said: "Her whole energy and force of action (outside of the family) must be expended on religion. If she were allowed other fields of action or thought, her energy, like that of a man, would be withdrawn from and fatally cripple the church." Which the author meets in those few strong words: "To me, however, it seems that any organization that finds it necessary to cripple its adherents in order to keep them, has a screw loose somewhere,"

This book would be a splendid present to prepare for Christmas time. It would be a splendid missionary performance for a few ladies to unite and make a present to their preachers in cases where they will be able to appreciate it. For gentlemen no more useful, captivating, and elevating selection could be made for a Christmas present to ladies than this. The paper, the printing, the whole get up of the book, including the portrait of the author, is splendid.—Nonconformist.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote; five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR the YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," presenting the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10c.; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $2.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.
Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

TESTIMONIALS:

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nut-shell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

[Please Order by Number.]

No.		cent
1	Discussion on Prayer. Bennett and others
7	The Story of Creation. Bennett
8	The Old Snake Story. "
9	The Story of the Flood. "
10	The Plagues of Egypt. "
11	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett
12	Balaam and his Ass. "
13	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "
14	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers
15	Come to Dinner. "
16	Fog Horn Documents. "
17	The Devil Still Ahead. "
18	Slipped Up Again. "
19	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. Bennett
20	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett
21	The Great Wrestling Match. "
22	Discussion with Elder Shelton. Bennett	1
23	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett
24	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell
25	Discussion with George Snode. Bennett
26	Underwood's Prayer
27	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. Bennett
28	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran	1
29	Paine Hall Dedication Address. Underwood
30	Woman's Rights and Man's Wrongs. Syphers
31	Gods and God-Houses
32	The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. Bennett
33	What has Christianity Done? Preston
34	Tribute to Thomas Paine
35	Moving the Ark. Bennett
36	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil
37	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.
38	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z
39	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam
40	Bible of Nature versus the Bible of Men. John Syphers
41	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett
42	Elijah the Tishbite. "
43	Christianity a Borrowed System. "
44	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood
45	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett
46	Did Jesus Really Exist? "
47	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter
48	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson
49	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild
50	Jonah and the Big Fish. Bennett
51	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1
52	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood
53	Questions for Bible Worshipers. "
54	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett
55	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman
56	Bible Contradictions
57	Jesus not a Perfect Character. Underwood
58	Prophecies. Underwood
59	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. Underw'd
60	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. "
61	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden
62	The Jews and their God
63	The Devil's Due-Bills. John Syphers
64	The Ills we Endure—Their Cause and Cure. Bennett
65	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.
66	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown
67	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 2
68	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon
69	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker
70	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon
71	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman
72	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Bennett
73	Foundations. John Syphers
74	Daniel in the Lyon's Den. Bennett
75	An Hour with the Devil. "
76	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett
77	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett
78	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett
79	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman
80	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett
81	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. Syphers
82	Christian Courtesy. D. M. Bennett
83	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey
84	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London
85	Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind. Bennett
86	An Enquiry About God's Sons. D. M. Bennett
87	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. Underwood
88	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. E. D. Slenker
89	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson
90	Biblo-Mania. Otto Cordates
91	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood
92	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter
93	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle
94	The New Raven. Will Cooper
95	Jesus Christ. Bennett
96	Ichabod Crane Papers
97	Special Providences. W. S. Bell
98	Snakes. Mrs. E. D. Slenker
99	Do the Works of Nature Prove a Creator? Sciots.
100	140th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als
102	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell
103	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett
104	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson
105	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro
106	Franklin, Washington, and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett
107	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown
108	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. Preston
110	Invocation to the Universe. Bennett
111	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett
112	Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage
113	Come to Jesus. Bennett
114	Where Was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston
115	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett
116	The Sunday Question. Bennett
117	Constantine the Great. S. H. Preston
118	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. W. S. Bell
119	The New Faith. Stoddard
120	The New Age. W. S. Bell
121	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers
122	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett
123	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll and the Observer
124	Sinful Saints. Bennett
125	German Liberalism. Clara Neyman
126	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood
127	Tyndall on Man's Soul
129	Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman
130	The Ethics of Religion. Clifford
131	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr
132	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson
133	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood
134	Talks with the Evangelists
135	Is There a Future Life? Bennett
136	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett
137	Christian Love. C. L. James
138	Science of the Bible. John Jasper
139	Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston
140	Astro-Theology
141	Infidelity. H. W. Beecher
142	Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon
143	Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins
144	The Comstock Laws
145	If You Take Away My Religion, What Will You Giv Me Instead? Martin
146	Seymour Times Prayer
147	Reply to the Index on Comstock Laws
148	When Did Paul Liv? Scholasticus
149	Age of Shams
150	The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Huribut and Wakeman
151	What is the Bible? M. W. H
152	A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas
153	Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway
154	Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce
155	Co-operation the Redeemer of Society. S. M. Papin
156	Free Speech and Free Press. P. B. Shelley
157	Questions from a Western Reader. Bennett
158	The Fool's Creed
159	Bennett Indignation Meeting at Boston
160	Sabbath Observance. W. E. Colemau
161	Protestant Persecutions
162	Eighth Letter from Ludlow Street Jail. Bennett
163	Ingersoll's Creed

Scientific Series.

1	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Elsburg, M.D.
2	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood
3	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood
4	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin
	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M. D.
5	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll
7	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.
8	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford
9	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske
10	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures
11	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson
12	Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M. D.
13	Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

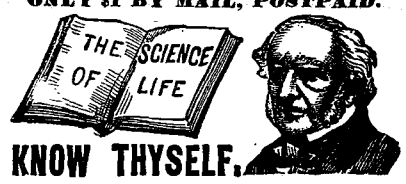
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.



BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

THOUGHT ... Rochelle, N.Y.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass, who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all dissases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. ... Baltimore Block, Utica, Oneida Co., N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Gems of Thought.

How much lighter load the people of England would hav to carry to-day; how much better off might be her poorer classes, had she not spent the thousands of millions in war that she has, to say nothing of the hundreds of thousands that hav laid down their lives for glory! True, she would hav fewer colonies than she has now; her dominions would not extend all around the globe; but it is very probable that her people would be happier. —D. M. Bennett.

THE deity is known to us only by his production, and is a single being in the universe, not comprehended under any species or genus, from whose experienced attributes or qualities we can, by analogy, infer any attribute or quality in him. As the universe shows wisdom and goodness, we infer wisdom and goodness. As it shows a particular degree of these perfections, we infer a particular degree of them, precisely adapted to the effect which we examin. But further attributes, or further degrees of the same attributes, we can never be authorized to infer or suppose, by any rules of just reasoning. Now, without some such license of supposition, it is impossible for us to argue from the cause, or infer any alteration in the effect, beyond what has immediately fallen under our observation.—Hume's Essays.

THE manner in which a nation in the aggregate treats animals, is one chief measure of its real civilization. The Latin races, as we know, come forth badly from this examination; we Germans, not half well enough. Buddhism has done more in this direction than Christianity, and Schopenhauer more than all ancient and modern philosophers together. The warm sympathy with sentient nature which pervades all the writings of Schopenhauer, is one of the most pleasing aspects of his thoroughly intellectual, yet often unhealthy and unprofitable, philosophy.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

I WOULD not enter on my list of friends,
Those grand with polished manners and fine sense,
The man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
An inadvertent step may crush the snail
That crawls at evening in the public path
(A necessary act incurs no blame),
But he that has humanity, forewarned,
Will step aside and let the reptil liv;
For they are as free to liv and to enjoy that life,
As God was free to make them at the first,
Who, in his sovereign wisdom, made them all.
—Cowper.

THE question is not concerning the being, but the nature of God. This I affirm, from the infirmities of the human understanding, to be altogether incomprehensible and unknown to us. The essence of that supreme mind, his attributes, the manner of his existence, the very nature of his duration; these and every particular, which regards so divine a being, are mysterious to men. Finite, weak, and blind creatures, we ought to humble ourselvs in his august presence; and, conscious of our frailties, adore in silence his infinit perfections. They are covered in a deep cloud from human curiosity. It is profaneness to attempt penetrating through these sacred obscurities; and next to impiety of denying his existence is the temerity of prying into his nature and essence, decrees and attributes.—Hume's Dialogs on Natural Religion.

THE doctrin of demonism led to the witchcraft horrors, and cost the lives of untold thousands of innocent human beings during a period that has been justly called the age of insanity. During the twelve centuries, from the first Council of Nice to the dawn of Western rationalism, a sane inhabitant of Christian Europe must hav felt like a philosopher caged in a lunatic asylum, and subjected to the control of a brainless and heartless keeper. . . The god of nature bears witness against the God of Galilee. To all who hav eyes to see and ears to hear, skepticism has become a religious duty. It was once blasphemous to deny the trinitarian dogma, it is now blasphemous to defend it. The slanderer of nature has ceased to be our God. The men who were killed for "heresies" against the Christian creed hav become martyrs of a higher religion.—Felix L. Oswald.

TO-DAY I hav got out of all trouble, or rather I hav cast out all trouble, for it was not outside, but within, and in my opinion. Take away thy opinion and then there is taken away the complaint, "I hav been harmed." Take away the complaint, "I hav been harmed," and the harm has been taken away. Begin the morning by saying to thyself: "I shall meet the busybody, the ungratful, the arrogant, the deceitful, the envious, the unsocial—all things happen to them by reason of their ignorance of what is good,"—Antoninus

Odds and Ends.

AMBITION, my son, says the paternal editor of the Boston Transcript, is what other people hav; it is a very bad element in anybody's composition. Never be ambitious, my son, but simply show an honest and praiseworthy desire to excel. Of course you see the difference, and will act accordingly.

SOME person who deserves to be hanged has written the following reasons why women are called ducks: Because they are not all tame. Because there is a good deal of sport to be got out of the wild ones. Because they may be captured. Because they may be sold. Because, as proved by the results of public examinations, they may be plucked. Because, as we can see in the illustrated newspapers, they may be drawn. Because they may be beautifully done, a good deal of butter being usually employed in the process. Because they are often well basted. Because they are always dressed in some fashion for dinner. Because they hav long bills. Because there are always plenty of them in the market.

GOING TO CHURCH.—A DOMESTIC FARCE IN ONE SCENE.

Dramatis Personæ.—The Juggins family, consisting of A. Juggins, senior, ditto junior, Mrs. Juggins, Emma, Rose, and Florrie.

Scene, a parlor; time, Sunday evening at 6:30. Family discovered conversing.

MR. J.: "Well, my dears, it is half-past six, we must see about being off to church. I suppose you are all going as usual?"

J. Jr.: "Oh, I can't go to-night; I hav promised to meet Tottie at seven o'clock, and I wouldn't disappoint her for the world." (Fastens his masher collar, at the imminent peril of cutting his throat, and exit hastily.)

MR. J.: "Well, Augustus has gone after that barmaid of his; but I suppose we can make up a party to do the respectable thing at St. Cucumber's. (To wife) Are you going, my dear?"

MRS. J.: "I hav a beastly headache, and that horrid organ always makes it worse. I'll stop at home to-night."

MR. J.: "Another deserter! Well, what do you girls say?"

ROSE: "I'm sure I sha'n't go. My dress is a shabby old thing, and my bonnet is not fit to go out in. Last Sunday Mrs. Pieces wore a new threeply bombazin jacket, and had a Guinevere hat trimmed with green baize ruching. She put on airs because I hav worn the same old bonnet for two months, and I nearly died with vexation as I sat next to her. I'm not going to church to look a fright, and St. Cucumber's must worry along without me till you let me hav a new dress and a hat like Mrs. Pieces'. So there!" (Tears ad lib.)

MR. J.: "Well, I will see about the finery. But you will go, Florrie, won't you?"

FLORRIE: "I can't to-night, papa. I hav promised to accompany Jenny Jumper to hear the Rev. Silas Windbag, the Roaring Devil-smasher of the Alleghanies. I wouldn't miss him for anything. He is over here on a preaching tour, and is such a dear man! He preaches in a tent, and when he gets excited he makes the roof flap. Jenny heard him last Sunday, and she says he gave her a cold chill fourteen times in the hour. I must go, and I shall."

MR. J.: "All right, trot away. He'll be smashing devils somewhere else next week, and then perhaps the old shop and old Mr. Snuffleton will be good enough for you. Well, Emma, you and I must go together."

EMMA: "O yes, papa, I will go with pleasure. The Rev. Emanuel Duck is to preach to-night, and I am dying to hear him again. He is a perfect pet of a man, and has such lovely white teeth! I never enjoyed a sermon so much as the one he preached last Sunday, on—on—I forget what it was on; but his dear blue eyes were fixed on me all the time, and his sweet tenor voice went straight to my soul. I shall be ready in half a minute!"

MR. J.: "What! Is that clerical masher, Duck, going to preach to-night? That simpering, oily, painted tailor's dummy going to hold forth? He's only put up to catch the silly girls; his sermons are simply bosh and water. If old Snuffleton—who does, at least, send you quietly to sleep—intends to sail his ship with Captain Duck at the helm, here's one of his crew who takes a leap overboard! 'Dear blue eyes!' indeed! (Sarcastically.) Never heard of any flighty fool of a girl who wants to be Mrs. Emanuel Duck, hav you?"

EMMA (indignantly): I didn't expect you would insult the curate and your daughter! It's too bad. (Tears ad lib., as before.)

MR. J.: "What! another grand display of fountains? Well, I'm off to the Pig and Whistle to hav a chat on politics with old Jawkins. Shan't be in till eleven!" (Exit and curtain.)

NOTE.—The Established church of England is the bulwark of our glorious British constitution.—G. S. in London Freethinker.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH,

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT G. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

News of the Week.

THE Grant monument fund is more than $115,000.

THE Co-operativ Wholesale Society's establishment in Whitechapel, London, has been burnt. Loss, £60,000.

TYPHUS fever is prevalent in the Albany penitentiary. Eleven deaths hav occurred, and there are now sixty patients.

BLAINE'S book, "Twenty Years of Congress," is practically complete, and the second volume is announced for the latter part of this month.

THERE were in this city last year 30,038 births; 35,696 deaths; 11,716 marriages; 159 foundlings; 74,372 arrests, 54,883 of whom were women; and 281,170 immigrants arrived.

ON account of the prevalent hydrophobia care, the municipal authorities of New York hav established a dog-pound, and policemen are instructed to kill or capture all unmuzzled dogs.

FREDERICK FISHEL, of this city, stole $75,000 from his employers, spent it on a woman and on cards and the races, and ran away to Canada. He is now a prisoner at the police central office.

THE proposition is up to divide the territory of Dakota and make the southern half a state. Dakotians are greatly excited over the matter, and many of them are at Washington to look after their interests.

THE total number of business failures in the United States in 1885 was 10,637 against 10,968 in 1884. The amount of money involved in the failures for 1885 was little more than one-half that of the previous year.

EFFORTS are still being made to recover the bodies of the twenty-six miners who were imprisoned and suffocated by the recent accident at the Nanticoke, Pa., coal mine. It is expected that a month will be required to reach the bodies.

THE Rev. Dr. George R. Bristor, whose sixteen-year-old servant, Ida Downs, accuses him of criminally assaulting her, received three persons into the Spring Valley Methodist church last Sunday, and administered the communion service.

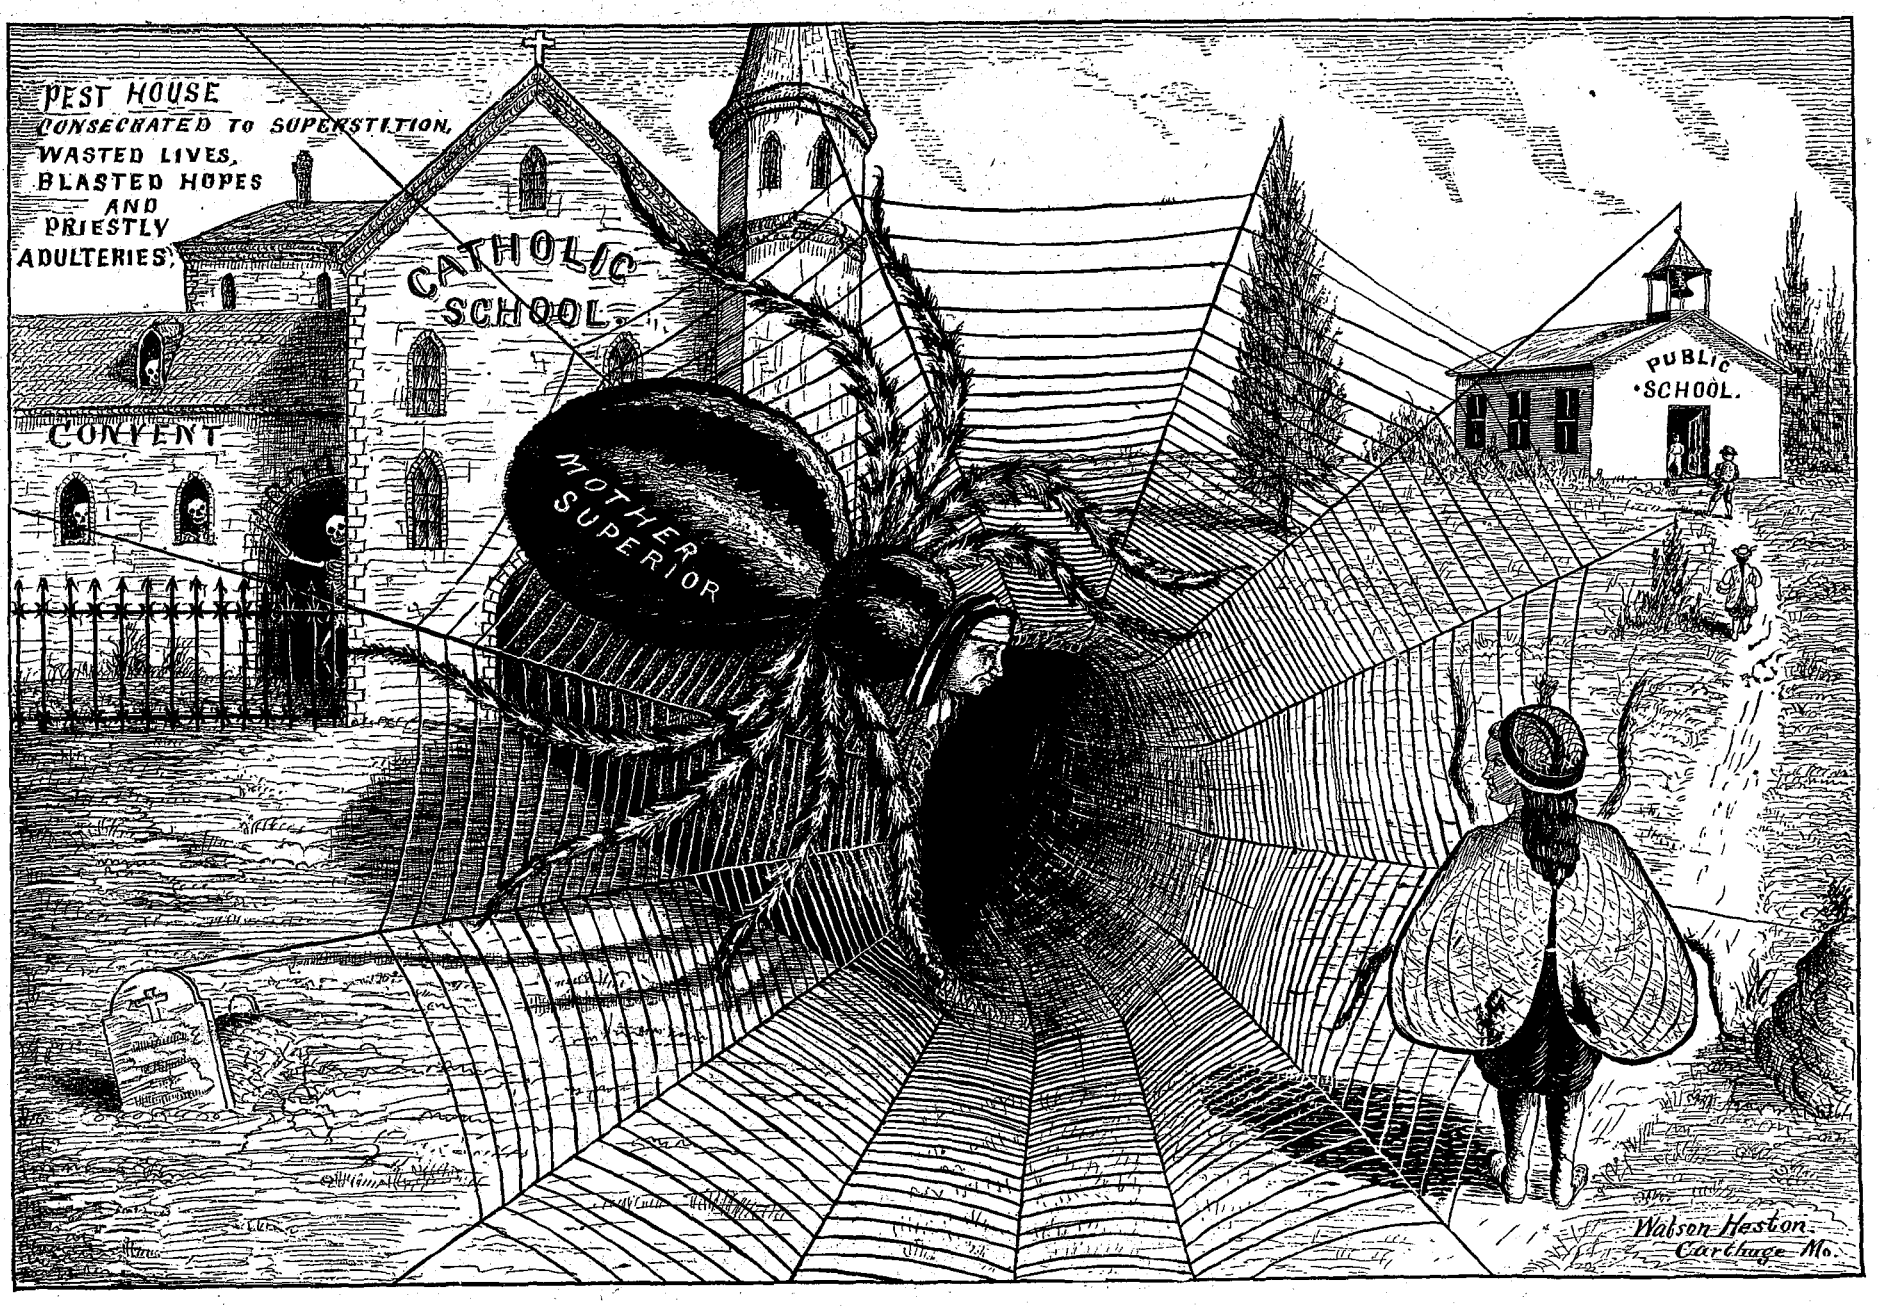
THE New Year struck New York amid great noise made by innumerable horns, whistles, and bells. The old habits of making calls and filling up with exhilarating fluids was widely observed. On January 2d the streets were thronged with ladies making calls on one another.

GOVERNOR HILL of New York was inaugurated on New Year's Day. The ceremonies of the occasion were conducted with a "Jeffersonian simplicity" which excelled in magnificence and ornate display those attending the inauguration of any of the forty-seven previous governors of New York.

THE Rev. Mr. Gray, of Millerton, and Miss Rachel Nicolson, of Fox Harbor, N. S., came to New York and put up at a hotel last Friday night. Saturday morning the woman was unconscious from inhaling gas, and it is supposed that she blew her light out instead of turning it off. She is recovering, and Mr. Gray says he will marry her as soon as she is well enough.

THE children who went from Newark, N. J., to Chemist Pasteur at Paris to be inoculated for hydrophobia are now on their way home. M. Pasteur thinks they are out of danger. There is to be a Pastcur institute in America where the great chemist's researches may be laid before physicians here. Articles of incorporation of such an institute hav already been signed.

THIRTY-EIGHT men hav lost their lives in constructing the new Croton aqueduct in Westchester county, this state, commenced last year. The grand jury fail to find evidence of any criminal carelessness on the part of those in charge of the work. It is said that in the construction of the Hoosac tunnel in Massachusetts the loss of life was sixty-eight men to the mile.



PRESIDENT CLEVELAND in a recent letter to a New York man says: "I don't think there ever was a time when newspaper lying was so general and so mean as at present, and there never was a country under the sun where it flourished as it does in this. The falsehoods daily spread before the people in our newspapers, while they are proofs of the mental ingenuity of those engaged in newspaper work, are insults to the American love for decency and fair play of which we boast."

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 3. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, January 16, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

"THE SPIDER AND THE FLY"

Notes and Clippings.

THE Philadelphia Academy of Science has just received a bequest of over $51,000, yielding a present income of $1,500.

MISS JANE BANCROFT, Ph.D., has resigned a professorship in the Woman's College of Evanston, Ill., to accept the Chair of History in Bryn Mawr College.

MORE people die in one year from trichiniasis than in twenty years from hydrophobia. Yet the owners of hogs pay no tax, buy no muzzles, and hav no hogs shot down.

A LOUISVILLE man who has no late night-work away from home calls for a tax of $100 on pistols. The Courier-Journal thinks a better scheme would be to raise the price of whisky to $100 a drink.

THE St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that while there may be reason to think that small-pox has been sent upon Canada as a punishment for her sins, it is very difficult to believe that she is so desperately wicked that she should be required at the same time to endure a series of lectures by Joseph Cook.

THE treasury department has denied the application of the Rev. Ladislaus Grabowski, of Polonia, Wis., made to the president, for the free entry of a confessional and other articles imported at New York for the use of his church. The articles in question consist mainly of tulle in the piece, embroidered with metal, chandeliers with lustred crystals or glass, and finished materials for the construction of confessionals. It is held that these articles are not embraced in any of the provisions of the free list exempting regalia, statuary, etc., imported for religious societies, from payment of duty.

CHAPLAIN BASS, of the penitentiary in Brooklyn, says that twenty years ago only five per cent of the prisoners had previously been Sunday-school pupils, but that now seventy-five per cent of actual and suspected criminals hav been such. Another minister, Mr. Crafts, givs an account of an inebriate asylum where the per cent is eighty; and another of fallen women, where all hav been in Sunday-schools.

IN the investigation being made of the conduct of the excise commissioners of New York city in licensing immoral resorts, Mr. R. A. Giborn, a wine-dealer who supplies liquors to the Haymarket, one of the most infamous of the city's dives, answered thus a question as to whether the women he had seen in frequent visits there appeared to be reputable: "In my judgment, as a good Christian, I ought not to say anything about the character of women of whom I know nothing."

THE Congo Free State has entered the postal union. A list of postal rates ranging from five to fifty centimes has now been adopted, and five different postage stamps issued, all bearing the profile of King Leopold and the words, "Etat Independent du Congo." The business of the new state is transacted in Brussels by four ministers, who preside over the departments of justice, finance, foreign affairs, and commerce, and the interior and police. The state is divided into four administrativ districts, each having a governor, and all being under the charge of Col. De Winton, the administrator-general. The four governors hav had several years' experience on the Congo, and were among the most trusted and enthusiastic of Stanley's lieutenants.

A DREADFUL famin prevails in Eagle Island, Ireland. Last year's potato crop was the most scanty known for many years, and of the few potatoes gathered one-half were diseased. Many hav implored the Dublin Castle authorities to assist these poor people to earn a living by building certain much-needed public works. The only reply of the officials was: "The poorhouse is open." This reply is as absurd as it is brutal. The nearest poorhouse is thirty miles distant from there, and if crowded to the roof could not hold one-sixth of the people who are now facing starvation.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Church Standard writes on Dr. Farrar's sermon in Trinity church, saying: "I would like to strip off mere verbiage and ingenious alliteration, and ask what Canon Farrar meant when he said that God is 'not coffined in ancient creeds.' If the English language means anything, these words express contempt for the ancient creeds. If such works had been uttered by Robert Ingersoll, I should not hav been in the least surprised, as he has never professed to believe in the ancient creeds. As a churchman I believe in no other God except the God set forth by the Catholic church in the ancient creeds. And yet, according to Canon Farrar's rhetoric, my deity is not a living God; for a coffin incloses only the dead, whether gods or men. I ask you, Mr. Editor, in all sincerity, what do you think of such an expression concerning the creeds of the church from one who professes to be a priest of the church?"

THE Evangelist says: "When we are saying to ourselvs, Peace and safety, we are in the greatest danger; for another cloud rises and darkens the land. It is the shadow of Nihilism—not Russian Nihilism, which aims only at the overthrow of political institutions, but something far more destructiv, as it aims at the overthrow of our religious faith. A generation ago much was said of the danger of German Rationalism, as in the generation before much had been said of the danger of French Infidelity. But America has produced a form of unbelief that throws these into the shade—a skepticism which strikes at faith even in God the father almighty, and in life everlasting. It is cold-blooded Atheism which stalks abroad in this land of the Pilgrim fathers."

"BUSINESS," says M. J. Savage, "has done more to make the world truthful than all the instituted religions of the past put together. It is feared that religion has not been very potent in this direction. The one thing that was needed to giv mankind a sense of brotherhood was that races should know each other; and the one thing that has helped on this mutual acquaintance more than all else is commerce. The world's business, then, has done more for philanthropy, for justice, for deliverance from oppression, than all other agencies combined. Through a large part of human history the intensely religious ages hav not been distinguished for social purity, for truth-telling, for honesty, for kindness, or for justice. And in no great commercial city of Europe or America is a business man trusted any sooner to-day because he is a church-member or is prominent in any religious movement."

Communications.

"The Catholic Church the Mainstay of American Institutions."

Monsignor Capel recently delivered a lecture on this subject in California, in the course of which he said:

There are, at the lowest calculation, from eight to twelve millions of Catholics in the land who are as true to American principles as the needle is to the pole, and who are daily increasing in number and in influence, and to say that the teaching of the Catholic church to such people is dangerous to the American republic is a declaration so false that he who makes it should be branded as a public enemy, a disturber of that peace which should be the bond of union in American society.

Is the lecturer simple enough to believe that Americans hav forgotten the past history of the Catholic church, of her Inquisitions, her autos-da-fé, her wholesale murder of those who disbelieved in her pernicious doctrins? Does he forget that his church teaches it as a paramount duty of her supporters that they must yield implicit obedience to a foreign potentate, the pope, and that wherever the church has obtained a footing it has invariably bred dissension, disruption, and disunion, and has never been at ease until those governments were totally overthrown and the cross—that emblem of superstition and cruelty, along with disease and moral death—substituted in their places? Again, he says:

The teachings of the millions of Catholics in America—so far from being dangerous to the integrity of American institutions, or their preservation—is the firmest chain that can link American citizens together, and thus the Catholic church becomes at once the strongest mainstay of the American republic. The enemies of the church and the American autonomy are constantly crying out that Catholicity is a foreign religion for the reason that Catholics render obedience to the pope. But who can tell the world what religion is peculiarly American in its invention?

Spiritualism is about the only form of religious frenzy which America has developed thus far—Episcopalianism, Methodism, and all other isms having been imported into this country from England or some other portion of Europe; hence all forms of religion are alike foreign, and thus the charge against Catholicism—as being alone foreign—is as false as it is fraudulent.

Does Capel forget that Pope Gregory VII., otherwise known as Hildebrand, who came into power by poisoning his predecessor Alexander (1073), and who died in exile for his many crimes (1085), had drawn up in the year 1075 a declaration of papal rights which hav been enforced with vigor by the succeeding popes (as long as they had the power) and hav been submitted to by papists as ordinances from God? There are twenty-seven of them, and perfect beauties at that. Space will not permit mention of them all, but I will select just a few directly bearing on the subject under discussion: 2. The title universal belongs to the Roman pontiff alone. 7. The pope has power, according to circumstances, to make new laws, to create new churches, to transform a chapter into an abbey, to divide a rich bishopric into two, and to unite two poor bishoprics. 8. He alone has the right to assume the attributes of empire. 12. He has a right to depose emperors (and presidents also, I suppose). 16. No council can call itself general without the order of the pope. 17. No chapter, no book, can be reputed canonical without his authority. 19. He cannot be judged by anybody. 22. The Roman church is never wrong, and never falls into error. 27. The pope can release the subjects of bad princes from all oaths of allegiance (of course all princes who were not papists were bad).

These absurd, wild, extravagant, and wicked pretensions were acquiesced in and submitted to by the court of Rome, and are to this day contended for, and would be enforced, in this country, had that detestable monster, the papal church, the power to do so. Neither Spiritualism, Materialism, nor any other ism, originated in this country, but be it said to the honor of the supporters of all except Catholicism that their belief does not exact allegiance to a foreign spiritual prince, as Romanism does. A Romanist cannot be true to his teachings and be a devoted citizen of this country—an utter impossibility. He further said:

Our blessed redeemer cannot be called a foreigner in any portion of the world formed out of nothing by the hand of God. Nor can the religion he formed be called foreign, except by those fanatics who are ignorant of her teachings and her history. The twelve apostles were not looked upon as foreigners by the nativs of the lands they visited, nor was the Catholic church which they represented thus rebuked by the peoples among whom they were called to preach God's truth. The church was commanded to teach "all nations," hence her home is in all lands, as she represents God's kingdom in every clime comprised within the entire universe. Long before the caravel of Columbus touched the shores of America, and long before Protestantism was known in the world, republics had existed in Europe, and were never menaced in their principles or disturbed in their progress by the presence of the Catholic church in their midst. The church of God is consonant with all kinds of governments; she can exist under monarchy or republicanism, and so long as she can exercise her religious mission she heeds not what form of civil organism surrounds her. In the opinion of the speaker, the best forms of government were a limited monarchy and a republic, with a preference for the latter; but popes and priests hav nought to do with any form of government, so long as such civil rule is not antagonistic to the divine law

As the Catholic church was not founded until after the year 324 A.D., it is rather presumptuous for Capel to claim that the apostles represented it in their travels. Can Capel inform us the name and location of any European republic that existed during the period that Romanism held sway? History does not record the fact. It must hav been in the wilds of Asia or Africa, where the blighting influence of popery could never reach them. How can the church of God be consonant with all kinds of governments, when heretical rulers (all outside of popery) are denounced with the bitterest hatred by that very church? That church has manufactured "divine law" to suit its own convenience. Is the man forgetful, ignorant of history, or a falsifier? He continues thus:

The moment an American Catholic child reaches the age of reason, it is taught by the church that it has certain duties to perform toward God, its neighbor, and its country. It is told that it must love God, be just to its neighbor, and be true to its nativ land. In this way Catholic children are molded into model American citizens, possessing that individualism which is so characteristic a feature of the citizens of this country. Moreover, the church inculcates the value of virtue and morality into the breast of every child educated under her supervision. She teaches that the family is the fundamental basis of the strength and perpetuity of any government, no matter by what name they may be designated. The family was founded by Almighty God, and "what he had joined together let no man put asunder." Such is the teaching of the church, and in thus instilling into the minds of the youth of America a love of God, a friendship for their fellow-citizens, and a patriotic ardor for American principles, the Catholic church proves herself the mainstay of American institutions.

From the moment the child of a Romanist mother is born into the world, the offices of the priest are called into action—aye! long before that; the mother is "churched" and is well-versed into the "patent morality" of Romanism. The abuses and crimes of the confessional are vivid in her memory; and as a natural consequence become interwoven with the very existence of the embryotic child. Those are the seeds of that "virtue and morality" of which this traveling falsifier speaks so glowingly. Where can children be found that are more disrespectful to their parents, more lawless in their acts, more criminal than the children of Romanists, taken as a whole? In support of Capel's declaration that the church is the champion of virtue and morality, I will make a few extracts from the "Sacred Roman Chancery," in which is contained the exact sums to be levied for the pardon of each particular sin. As long as pardons are in the market, so long will crime be rampant:

Robbing a church	$2.25	Priest to keep a concubine	2.25
Simony	2.25	Ravishing a virgin.....	2.00
Perjury, forgery, lying.	2.00	Murder of father, mother, sister, brother, or wife	2.00
Robbery	3.00
Burning a house.....	2.75
Eating meat in Lent....	2.75
Killing a layman.....	1.75	Nun, for frequent fornication in or out of nunnery.....	5.00
Striking a priest.....	2.75
Procuring abortion.....	1.50
Dead men excommunicated.....	3.00	Marrying on forbidden days.....	10.00

All incests, rapes, adulteries, and fornications committed by a priest with his relations, nuns, married women, virgins, and concubines, with the joint pardon of all crimes together, $12.

The above are selected from Hawee's "Church History," Smith's "Errors of the Church of Rome," Watson's "Theological Tracts," and Moshiem's "Ecclesiastical History." It is somewhat strange that the priests should deny that indulgences are granted, and yet print a book with all the rules, regulations, grades of crime, and prices attached thereto, for the guidance of those priests.

Passing over his frivolous remarks about divorce, family ties, etc., I come to where he says:

The Infidel element of our day has transferred the power which comes from God to the people. But we must not be deceived by the specious assertions of such transposers of truth. Every man—from the president to the humblest—derives whatever power he possesses, in the family or the nation, from almighty God, and to him must he render an account of his stewardship. There were fully forty thousand Catholics in America during its struggle for independence, and to a man they were found on the side of American liberty. Catholic France, Ireland, and Poland sent their sons to help in the holy cause of this nation's freedom. Washington, the father of his country, had so high an opinion of Catholic aid and valor in that memorable struggle that he highly eulogized the Catholic element for its assistance, both by land and sea, in the cause of liberty and right. And even at this day the Catholic element is most prominent in the military defenders of this country. At every military post Catholics are found who are ready to imperil their lives in defense of liberty's flag against any foeman, whether foreign or domestic.

His assertions about man getting his power from God is mere balderdash and not worth noticing. He prates about the Romanists' services during the war of Independence, and their present loyalty to the United States government. A military life is an easy and a lazy life in time of peace, and that is why so many of the "faithful" are found there. Again, many of them hav no trades (except praying and preying), and thus enlist in the army. Their services in the Revolutionary wars was more the result of hatred to England than of patriotism for the United States. I suppose it was patriotism which brought them over here to fight for King George III. in 1776 to '83. During the Civil War the South furnished as many Romanists, in proportion to its population, to fight against and destroy the government, as the North did to uphold it. And as for loyalty and citizenship, many of them only acknowledge it and claim protection of the United States government when their lives are in danger as a forfeit of outraged law in foreign countries. The talk about Romanists being loyal is a glaring falsehood. Americans are not so foolish or blind as to believe Capel's glowing lies. Washington warned his countrymen to "beware of foreign influences and powers." Let us follow Capel further. He says:

The Catholic church impregnates the mind of every child in her schools with a love for virtue and hatred of vice. The old republics of Rome fell through the vicious customs of their citizens, and if we in America are not careful, history will repeat itself in our downfall, just as it did in the dissolu- of other governments even in modern days. Ill-gotten wealth, unlimited luxury, and unbridled sensuality are the worst foes af Christian governments in these times, and the countries that are honey-combed by such vices are on the verge of that precipice down which other nations as great as ours hav fallen. The Catholic church, therefore, again proves herself the truest friend of this republic by constantly raising her voice in the school-room, the pulpit, the press, and on the platform, teaching the youth and the adult alike the grand lessons of Christian virtue, true patriotism and morality, by which alone mankind can transmit to posterity the civil power of Christian government. For performing this grand duty the church is assailed by bigots, and traduced by thinly-disguised traitors.

Let us examin and see how much virtue is taught by the papal church. Infanticide is justified by the holy fathers (in order to hide their own crimes). Seventy-two theologians of the Jesuits hav taught regicide. Thirty-seven theologians of the Romish faith hav taught the right to murder. "A priest who commits adultery is not criminal in killing the husband who assails him" (Rev. Father Jesuit Henrique's "Moral Theology," vol. i, book 4). Seventy-five theologians hav taught theft. I could quote many more "holy teachings," but it is not necessary. Capel talks of ill-gotten wealth, etc. How does the humble follower of the meek and lowly lamb of God afford to pay ten dollars per day for accommodations in the Palace Hotel at San Francisco? If he is desirous of finding "unbridled sensuality," he can find oceans of it in the convents. A nation that is honeycombed with Romanism will soon be honeycombed with crime. Look at Ireland, Spain, Italy, and Russia—Greek church. When the truth is told about her past and present crimes the cry is raised of "bigots and thinly-disguised traitors." But I care not. Romanism must be destroyed or it will destroy our government, the object it is stealthily aiming at. He ended his "talking-machine speech" by denying that the church took any part or interest in politics, but that her whole aim was to build up virtue, morality, and honesty, and repeating the false claim that "the Catholic Church was the mainstay of American institutions." (The Fifteenth Amendment, also, I suppose.) Safeguard of morality in the United States forsooth! When did you find it out, Capel? Romanism is the great and secret enemy of human liberty.

EMANUEL M. JONES.

Radicalism and Negation.

With much interest hav I read "A. B. B.'s" late article on "Constructiv Liberalism." Without the initials, I should hav known its author by his peculiar pungent style. Our age has but one Arthur B. Bradford, whom I knew near twenty years ago, as he and I were associated on the Christian Leader, in the Free Church, battling against "the sum of all villainies." The brains which kind nature has given us, and a sincere love of and diligent search after truth, hav most happily brought us together on a firmer ground than when we thus stood in the Free Presbyterian church. Then it was on assumptions, now on science.

While his article clearly shows the mountain we hav to remove and the means essential to effect it, his faith in its being done, I fear, is too nearly of the mustard-seed kind. Negativs are easier than affirmativs, and on the whole of more importance. The old Jewish Decalog has at least eight negativs to two affirmativs; thou shalt not, rather than thou shalt. With this Mr. Bradford agrees. The blows that bring down are better and easier than those that build up. Were it possible for Samson to hav pulled down the pillars and the mighty temple, crushing the thousands under it, the work was probably of more value to his kind than that of building it up. The thousand million dollars in slaves, cursed and cursing the heart and the life out of our republic, as Mr. Bradrord finely says, was destroyed in a moment by a dash of Mr. Lincoln's pen. So is the dash of a thousand pens—Mr. Bradford's not the least—destroying the curse of superstition and emancipating human minds. Not only are the shackles of priestcraft breaking from the minds of our countrymen, but in England, France, and yet faster, in Germany. The rays of science from Berlin are dissipating the gloom of superstition rapidly, and happily education means liberty. The twain are so joined together that no man may put them asunder. Our free schools are freeing minds. Our text books on geography, astronomy, and geology are imbibing the nebular theory- Geology versus Genesis is bound to win. Before Mr. Bradford shall take his last sleep, we hav reason to hope that evolution will be taught in our schools, as Woodrow had to teach it to his Christian students. Truth is mighty and will prevail, and even when crushed to earth it will rise again so much the mightier.

All we need do is to learn it, proclaim it, and, if need be, suffer for its sake. Our war is far nobler and our victory surer than the many waged with carnal weapons. The Bible is too full of absurdities to stand for a moment before common sense, honest investigation. Hence, with our downward strokes, let us "lay on, McDuff, and damned be him who first cries, Hold, enough."

Assumptions and credulity, which mean a want of common sense, make up Bible religion. These are nearer nothing than something. At best they are no more than untempered mortar, ready to fall off faster than the time taken to put them on. They are too thin to do much harm, or to be in any wise formidable. The Bible dogmas never hav been nor ever can be more than half believed. They are quite too light to gravitate any dangerous distance into the mind. Not one Catholic in ten thousand really believes the wafer to be the body of Christ, or the wine his blood. Freeman, of Pocasset, tried hard to believe in the Abraham and Isaac story, in the resurrection of his murdered little daughter, but all in vain. If he effected a partial, superficial belief, it all went off, as she did not, could not, come to life. His terrible experiment has done more to make Infidels than our articles, since the tragedy has reached the religious mind, beyond our writings or even Ingersoll's lectures. As hydrophobia dreads water, so this sickly faith of Christians dreads common sense discussion, and well it may, since in our age of investigation it cannot wholly escape it. The refuge at the horns of the altar is playing out. As a confirmation of the position that errors cannot be believed as truth, let anyone try his own mind. For thirty years I tried, for instance, to believe in bodily resurrection, and yet never effected it. Seeing that in less than a century after death the body goes into vegetables, and as they are eaten into other animals, it is impossible not to perceive that no body is left on which Gabriel's horn can act. Were it possible for Joshua to prostrate the walls of Jericho, it is possible for him to hav prostrated them had there been none. Let the old slaughtering savage general come forth and try his horns, if they may be resurrected, on wall-less Jericho, and the failure will make him, as he ought to be, the butt of ridicule. In view of all this, and thousands of other patent facts, we may well take heart. Notwithstanding the eighty thousand educated and salaried priests in the devil's service, Mr. Bradford's earthquakes of science are sure to sink them. Indeed, no more than a little surface tremor is needed to frighten and put them to flight. Webster compared Calhoun, struggling in his slough of nullification, to a steed sunk in the morass, where every effort at extrication but sunk him the deeper. So of clergymen; let them try, and try, and try again, that much deeper in the slough of error and fraud must they sink. Not so much our noble Lincoln as our ignoble Davis freed our millions of slaves. The Confederate fire-eating effort, this silly man at its head, unshackled the oppressed slaves quite sooner than had the peaceable administration of Mr. Lincoln had the South kept its peace. Then let us duly appreciate every effort for truth and freedom, freely giv to sustain our journals, redouble our diligence, and defy a second edition of the Spanish Inquisition. W. Perkins.

Ocala, Fla.

Roman Catholic Mummery.

On a recent Sunday morning a man wearing a Wettstein Freethought badge pin was walking along East Eleventh street. As he came opposit the door of St. Ann's Catholic church, the rain began to fall, and he went in to get out of the wet. He was obliged to buy a ticket before entering, at an expense of fifteen cents. Young women who looked as if the fifteen cents was all the money they had or were capable of earning paid the same. It is a mistake to say that salvation in free.

St. Ann's church, architecturally, is somewhere between a jail and a theater. Its interior is about as cheerful as a grave. The ticket bought at the door landed the visitor in a seat well forward. Here, watching the rest as they came in, he discovered that he had omitted a ceremony which seemed an important feature of the program. This was kneeling at the door of the pew and saluting the altar before entering—a performance which goes under the term genuflexion. The visitor had neglected to genuflex. The thing is done becomingly or not according to the gracefulness of the devotee; the young fellow who got into the slip with the writer dropped upon his knees with a tough swagger, and made a motion toward the altar as though about to say, "Well, here's lookin' at yees." In each pew is a low bench running the whole length of the pew. It is so arranged that the worshiper can slide from his seat of knowledge to his knees with a very slight effort.

The altar, at the further end of the church, resembled an enlarged soda fountain. Above the altar gaslights were burning at the end of long taper-shaped things made in imitation of candles. Over and back of these a picture of a naked man nailed to a cross added its cheering influence to the scene, and still further up a stained-glass window displayed three likenesses that might pass for the king, queen, and jack in a eucher deck.

Soon the stage around the altar began to be peopled with absurdly and fantastically dressed persons. There were boys in red robes, young men in Mother Hubbards, and a lusty priest habited in an embroidered curiosity that, hanging from his shoulders fore and aft, made him look like one of those traveling advertisers who walk the streets sandwiched between two signs. These individuals all appeared suspicious of the altar's intentions toward them. They acted as if they were afraid of it, and, whenever passing the arrangement, they kept an eye on it as if the thing were liable to jump at them. The boys got upon the stage by entering a side door of the auditorium and marching up a short flight of steps where the leading musician usually sits. The priest came on from the flies.

When the congregation had all arrived and done their devoirs toward the altar, there were perhaps three hundred people present, two hundred and fifty of whom were women. The music which opened the services was good. Instead of reading the Bible the priest gave out some Latin extracts from a large book. His words were delivered with an abominable nasal drawl, called intoning, which was most offensiv to the ear. This driveling exercise was interspersed with music and a quantity of ridiculous mummery incapable of description. A second curiosity, in the form of a priest older and fatter than the first, read announcements, marriage banns, if that is what they are called; and the names of persons who needed praying for. To these he added a tedious sermon consisting of remarks on the worthlessness of this world, the glory of the next in case you got into the right berth—otherwise it would be hot—and the duty of supporting the Catholic church. To this end a collection was immediately taken up. The visitor felt that the fifteen cents he had paid at the door was ample remuneration considering the quality of the entertainment, and he therefore refrained from putting any money into the box which the usher held out to him on the end of a stick.

In the place of a benediction the priest dismissed the congregation by maneuvering his fingers across his front, following the lines of an imaginary cross.

All along through the service, barring the sermon, which lasted an hour, the audience knelt and arose by turns; the women slipped their beads along the string, and all did the best they could to wallow in the dust. The man with the badge pin appeared to be the only spectator; the rest performed, and it gave him a shaky sensation to watch them. He felt somewhat like a man who has a watch which he knows is right, but which disagrees with the timepieces of all his neighbors. The Catholics are yet in the middle of the slough of superstition. If any one doubts this, let him attend a Catholic service. Idolatry, paganism, religious abasement, could not sink lower. If Jesus Christ had run across one of these religious insane asylums in his day, he would hav cleared the house with a club.

Where Are Your Gods and Ghosts?

Friends, every now and then we read of some terrible scene of human woe and misery, something so utterly heart-rending and horrible that we are sick unto death to think of "man's inhumanity to man;" and we wonder how it is possible for anyone to be so callous, cruel, and brutal—yet no! brutes often shame such deeds as men damn themselvs in doing!

When I read the terrible sufferings of the small-pox patients in St. Roche's Hospital, my first thought was, And all this was done under the guard and guidance of the mother superior and the nuns, who hav for ages, in all climes and countries, been called so merciful, tender, and unselfish in caring for the sick and suffering! Verily, thieves, robbers, and outcasts, would hav shown more mercy than these Catholics hav done.

The Sun says "the fault is due in no respect to the sisters," and then tells us that when an attendant brought a few ragged blankets for additional covering "the nuns were not to know of it, or they would raise hell with him." And one poor demented patient was even put in the wood-shed to be out of the way, and this was ordered by the lady superior. She must indeed be a strange "lady," and what must the others be if she is "superior?"

If thousands of dollars are freely given to send relief to the sufferers who voluntarily seek the North Pole, why should only eight dollars a month be paid to women to nurse the victims of a terrible disease like small-pox? And is it not enough to suffer from the disease itself without being fed upon unpalatable food, having no care or medicin, and last and worst, not one drop of water for days, till insanity set in, and death came to end it all?

Think of these things, my friends, and ask yourselvs what your gods were doing that they lifted no finger to help, that they inspired no benevolent ones to send food, money, and medicin. Were they counting hairs and feeding sparrows? And the guardian spirits we hear so much of? Why did they not "materialize" food, drink, and medicin, blankets, and nurses? If one of these sufferers who asked "for God's sake" for water had been your child, your wife, your mother, your heart's darling, and your spirit had been witness to the terrible pangs of thirst, would you not hav ministered unto them? Would you hav waited for a medium and a dark closet?

I tell you, my friends, one such a narrativ as this of St. Roche's Hospital is enough to kill all belief in gods and ghosts in all reasoning minds. Garfield's death in the face of millions of prayers made many an Atheist, and this case of St. Roche's Hospital will make many more of them. The poor priest-ridden people will learn that they themselvs must become gods; and if they want happiness and heaven, they must work for them here and now; work for the highest good of all; must become themselvs what they admire and adore in their gods. "Blessed are the merciful;" but the gods they adore must be merciful men, and not the heartless gods—wretches—who can allow and witness such hospital horrors. Oh, how long it takes to mold a race into humanity, love, and kindness!

Long, long, long a-growing,
The fruit of all the Old
Ripening to-day in thee.—Whitman.

Snowville, Va. Elmina Drake Slenker.

Religious Agitation.

We of the Secular Union are charged by our enemies with doing nothing for Secularization. Here is an editorial which happened to appear in the Detroit Evening News during my recent stay in that city. The writer, Mr. Judson Grennell, is also one of the leading contributors to the Labor Leaf, and is one of the most logical, concise, and clear writers on all social problems to be found in Michigan. The Rev. Z. Grennell, his brother, is the high-salaried pastor of one of the most fashionable churches in that city. Don't think he pays much pew rent in his brother's church. He says:

The agitation for a religious revival all over the country as well as in Detroit will doubtless be followed by an agitation on the part of Freethinkers against the church. When the reaction from the excitement produced by what is termed "a spiritual awakening" comes, which awakening is too often nothing but a passing excitement instead of a change of heart—a breaking away from evil practices and the leading of the converts' thoughts and desires into new channels—the enemies of the church will reap their harvest. Physical depression will succeed physical exaltation, and in the place of faith will arise doubts, so that after the religious will come the irreligious revival, and instead of only three hundred Liberal Leagues in the country there will probably be five hundred or one thousand.

For the hold Liberals, Freethinkers, Atheists, Infidels, or whatever they may call themselvs, hav on the public, the churches are in a measure to blame. They hav taken advantage of their numbers and influence to perpetrate a wrong on the community in general, and on those who happen to think differently from them as regards religious beliefs in particular. This wrong is the exemption of church property from taxation, which is a semi-official way of uniting church and state.

Ever since the National Liberal League came into existence, nearly ten years ago, through the attempt of the National Reform Association to "put God into the Constitution of the United States," there has been a steady growth of societies formed to fight the church. Prof. Francis E. Abbot, now, or until recently, of Harvard University, was in 1872 the editor of a paper in Toledo called the Index, and he formulated Nine Demands which hav generally been accepted as the platform of the Liberals. The first plank reads: "That churches and all other ecclesiastical property be no longer exempt from taxation," and on this, more than on all the other eight combined, hav the Liberals been able to rally the greatest number of adherents. Other demands are that ministers be no longer employed in a spiritual capacity by the civil or military authorities; that appropriations for sectarian institutions, whether of a religious or educational character, cease; and that "our entire political system be founded and administered on a purely secular basis." In short, they call for the complete separation of church and state, and they proclaim that until this is done they will unceasingly endeavor to overthrow the church by attacking both its government and its dogmas.

As proof that there is a union between church and state in the United States, Freethinkers point to the fact that the government appoints Christian ministers and pays them out of the public purse to offer prayers in legislativ halls; that it salaries men to teach the Christian religion to soldiers and sailors; that it bestows upon religious institutions millions of the public money; that it causes the Bible to be read in the public schools; and that it sets aside one day as a particularly holy one, in obedience to the demands of the church. Whether these constitute a union of church and state, it is unnecessary to argue. Suffice it to say they do not constitute such a union as the public generally hav in mind when speaking of a state religion. But it is a fact that the exemption from taxation of over $700,000,000 of church property in the United States is a wrong that needs righting in the interest of the churches themselvs.

Perhaps if our churches would, in the matter of taxation, acknowledge the correctness of the position taken by their enemies; and consent to pay their share of the burdens of government, they would be more successful in winning souls to Christ and in filling their houses of worship with seekers after truth. At least they would wrest from the Freethinkers one of their most effectiv weapons. The strength of a chain is shown by its weakest link. The vulnerability of a ship of war is regulated by the part that is most liable to present to the enemy the best chance of penetrating it. So it is with the churches. One of their weak spots is their freedom from taxation, whereby injustice is done, and most of their efforts in behalf of public morality are made abortiv.

E. A. Stevens.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, WILLIAM ALGIE,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,697.07
Mechanicsburg Secular Union charter fee,	5.00
R. G. Ingersoll ($150 previously acknowledged)	200.00
A friend,	1.00
Sophie Newkirk,	1.00
M. G. Shoemaker,	1.00
Jos. Wagg,	1.00
J. S. Shephard,	.50
N. S. Johnson,	1.00
F. Zipp,	1.00
Wm. Hillert,	1.00
H. Merrick (annual membership),	1.00
Captain Smith (annual membership $1),	2.00
A. W. Hughan,	1.00
Charles Nuessle,	.50
M. E. Felton (annual membership),	1.00
Elisha Hyatt,	5.00
E. Carpenter,	1.00
Dr. Jno. Collins,	5.00
Jno. Downes (annual membership),	1.00
P. F. Spencer,	1.00
Isaac Slenker,	1.00
L. T. Womack,	1.00
Mrs. Wm. Raynor,	.50
E. A. Vidal (annual membership),	1.00
O. C. Jillson,	2.00
Rufus Perkins,	1.00
Jno. Nuessle,	1.00
John D. Powers,	10.00
Zenas Kent,	1.00
Total,	$1,946.57
Less $150 previously acknowledged as Mr. Ingersoll's pledge,	150.00
Total pledged and paid,	1,796.57

News and Notes.

The immediate duty of every Freethinker in New York is indicated by the following from R. B. Jackson, of Long Island. Push with all possible rapidity the petitions for church taxation, etc., in order that action may be taken this winter before the Senate and Assembly at Albany. Co-operate in every county. Will the Liberals of Long Island please communicate with Mr. Jackson, so that by joining forces more work can be accomplished? As fast as signatures are received, forward to the TRUTH SEEKER office, or to J. J. McCabe, corresponding secretary of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, 35 Van Woert street, Albany, N. Y. An effort will at once be made for the introduction of a bill to carry out the measures asked for by the petition.

SEAFORD, QUEEN'S Co., N. Y., Dec. 29, 1885.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 5th you say to the Freethinkers of the state, "Push the petitions for church taxation, etc., rapidly." I hope our friends throughout the state are acting on the suggestion. If anyone will take an activ part in circulating the petitions, he will soon become convinced of the urgent necessity for prompt and vigorous action. If I mistake not, they will discover that nearly the whole power and influence of the churches are used to oppose our just demands.

We are circulating the petitions in this neighborhood, and although the influence of the one (Methodist) church in this place is against us, we are meeting with very good success. I hav confined my efforts so far to this (first) election district of this town (Hempstead). I think I could perhaps help Mr. Carman in his district (the second). At any rate, I am willing to try if he wishes me to. In the adjoining town of Oyster Bay I can perhaps aid in the work. If you know of any person or persons in that town who are engaged in circulating the petitions, will you be so kind as to open the way for me to communicate with them and ascertain if I can assist in any way? Yours respectfully, R. B. JACKSON.

The following address from J. J. McCabe, corresponding secretary of the New York state Freethinkers' Association, contains good words, not simply for the Liberals of New York state, but for those of every state in the union. Harmonious action is the need of the hour. With my whole heart I would emphasize this address. Let Liberals in every place come together, if only a few in number, and work for the common end. In all the history of American Liberalism there never was a better opportunity for united and successful effort.

NEW YORK STATE FREETHINKERS' ASSOCIATION.
ALBANY, N. Y., November, 1885.

DEAR FRIEND: This year will be memorable in the annals of Freethought in this country. The well-paid propagators of superstition, falsehood, hypocrisy, and religious cant hav determined that the office of the theological impostor shall continue to be respected by mental slaves and feared by those who hav been liberated from the bondage of priestly tyranny.

It is the duty of those who hav been awakened from the hideous nightmare of superstitious fear, with its devils, vindictiv gods, and slimy assassins of manly honesty and honor, to do what they can to eradicate superstitious fear from the minds of all men, women, and children with whom we come in contact. In order to giv force and vitality to the cause of mental libery, Freethinkers in every locality should try to organize societies, no matter how small the number at the start. Notify those whom you know to be Liberal or opposed to theological dogmas. Either act yourself or select some other person to act as president. Hav some one to act as secretary. Call your society by whatever name you choose, but if agreeable to a majority, call it the Secular society of your locality. If you hav no rent to pay for the place where you meet there is no use of charging members for initiation or dues. Let each member of your society do what he or she can in the matter of enrolling members of your town or county organization. If the number in any one locality is too small to make it an object to meet once a week, try to meet at least once in each month. After you hav organized your society please inform me by letter and I will try to send reading matter for distribution. In the mean time do all you can to encourage our people to support the editors and publishers of those newspapers and magazines that indorse and support the National Secular Union.

"In union there is strength." Divided and fragmentary efforts, if continued, will keep Freethinkers in the same position they hav always occupied, namely, that of an unorganized band of skirmishers.

The resolutions adopted at the last state Convention hav struck the priestly orders with terror. They now see that the work of aggression has commenced. The changing of the name of the National Liberal League to that of the American Secular Union has put the great questions in which we are interested in proper shape. We are taxed to support $800,000,000 dollars of church property. We are taxed to support sectarian education in schools, asylums, juvenil reformatories, and penal institutions. Therefore we should welcome, cheer, and strengthen the hands of the apostles of Secularism. Out of the sixty million inhabitants of the United States, thirty-five millions are not connected with any religious organization. The majority of these are Liberals, Freethinkers, and Secularists. They are not interested in the welfare of any church. The scientists of the country are with us in heart, and are only waiting for the rise of the Secular tide to enter the field against priestcraft.

If man or woman ever had a glorious cause in which to labor and make sacrifices, it is the cause of Secularism. It is written that Jesus said that he did not come to bring peace into the world but a sword; to put the parents against their children and the husband against the wife. Now, if Christianity has been conducted on this principle for 1,800 years—and we all know by personal experience that it has—are we who are in possession of the truth going to allow the propagators of a barbarous superstition to ride over us rough-shod? I hope not. Therefore let all Freethinkers labor enthusiastically to organize societies; repel cheeky and ignorant sectarian pretensions with rational arguments, kind acts, and good behavior. Allow no priests or ministers to baptize your children or to pray or preach over your dead.

In any locality where the number of Freethinkers is small, weekly meetings could be held at the homes of the members of the society, changing about from one place to another. In any town where there is a hall that can be occupied for such purposes, Liberal speakers should be invited occasionally.

The petition for the taxation of church property should obtain as many signatures as possible. Any person who wants these petitions will please write to the undersigned.

Again let me say to you, do what you can to help the cause of mental liberty, justice, and universal brotherhood.

Yours truly, J. J. MCCABE, Corr. Sec.

I would call attention to the following important communication from W. S. Wood, of Wisconsin, an old and reliable worker in the ranks of Freethought. The facts which he relates of the action of the ecclesiastical forces should arouse Liberals to vigilance. The evidence is multiplying that there is a wide and determined effort to capture the instrumentalities of education for the benefit of the church and theology:

SHAWANO, WIS., Oct. 7, 1885.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, ESQ., Sec. National Liberal League, My Dear Sir: There is a matter of importance that I wish to call your attention to for consideration at the meeting of the League (not to add to the Nine Demands), which might be covered by a resolution, perhaps, so as to get the subject prominently before the people. It is the liberal and scandalous way in which our government is farming out the Indian children—the wards of the nation—to the different sects to be stuffed with catechism, bigotry, myths, and superstition at the public expense, under the disguise of being "educated" at sectarian schools.

I refer now more particularly to that most bigoted and despotic of all the sects in denying the right of private judgment—the Catholic church—because I happen to be near where the tyrannical rule of that church is put into practice under my observation. Instance: The Green Bay Agency of the Menominee and other tribes of Indians is located near here, in this county, upon an Indian reservation, including also the Oneida tribe in Brown county. The tribe in this county for some twenty years hav been under the "missionary" influence of Catholic priests, who never exhibited any special interest in their "education" until some two years ago when the government instructed its agent to erect a large building at an expense of ten or twelve thousand dollars, as a public school for the education of the youth of the agency. As soon as the priests found they could not control the school they began the erection of a large school-building of their own, and pushed it with such vigor as to complete it before the government did its building. The government school was to clothe and feed and lodge as well as to educate. The pupils of its school and the Indian youth were delighted at the prospect.

But, Lo and behold! when the school was ready to open, the priests had forbid them to attend it on penalty of losing their souls in hell, and had also exerted such influence upon the parents as to make them prevent their children from attending any but the Catholic school. Thus the good intentions of the government was defeated by the priests whom it permits to stay among the tribe, and fill them with prejudice and hatred toward public schools, which they represent as Godless cesspools of infamy, and unfit places for the education and advancement of their children. The government was virtually booted off the reservation, and the agent had to go to other tribes not under Romish influences to find students to occupy its building—except in cases of some half-dozen which hav since been taken away through the influence of the priests.

A few months ago a new agent, whose appointment was asked for by Mrs. General Sherman, of St. Louis, on the ground that he was a Roman Catholic, has been appointed, and the superintendency of the public school has since been placed in the hands of a Catholic. It was formerly in the hands of a friend of our public schools.

But to cap the climax, in the political scramble for Catholic votes and influence, the government has placed the Catholic school also under the public patronage, and is paying it between ten and twelve thousand dollars a year to be taught what the church dictates, among which is enmity to public schools, to say nothing of the catechisms, infallibility of the pope at Rome, and the way to count beads.

It was over two years ago that I saw a boast in Catholic papers that the church was getting over $100,000 a year to "educate" Indian children, and since then hav seen scores of notices where the government had placed Indian children by the scores and fifties in the Catholic schools in the Western states and territories, and appropriated large sums for their pretended "education." The church maintains a "Catholic bureau" at Washington to negotiate in these matters, and bring the influence of the church to bear on corrupt politicians to effect its object.

What right has the government to use the public money to promote religious bigotry, and teach sectarianism of the Catholic or any other stripe? I venture to say that the Catholic church, for purely sectarian purposes—or perhaps any other sect—will undertake the education of the entire youth of this country if the government will foot the bill with the people's taxes.

I am decidedly in favor of educating the Indian youth of all tribes, as the best means of progress and development—educating in what will be useful in making them intelligent citizens, in the arts of industry and usefulness, the whole scope of secular education, but not in farming them out to be crammed with theology and priestcraft, which has only been the cause of oppression, war, and persecution in all past history.

Government can educate the Indian youth as cheaply as and better than it can hire it done. Then let this infamous work be stopped. Let the country be waked up to the danger of enlisting more of the ignorant classes to strengthen the effort being made for the union of "church and state." The scramble of the last administration to capture the Catholic vote is only equaled by the present one to recapture that which was lost in the appointments because they are Catholic. It is high time the people's attention was called to this thing which the corrupt and unprincipled political office-seekers after power are doing on every hand. And there is no more fitting agency to do it than the Liberals of the country, who ought to be above party and mere political scramble when the civil and religious liberties of the country are thus threatened.

When a political party, as in the case of the Democratic party of Iowa and Ohio, as it has done this year, dares to nominate a candidate for governor who is in favor of taxing church property, the Catholic church takes a hand in politics in a most lively way. This is manifest in the Catholic Citizen of this state, which is a strong Democratic paper, and circulates largely in both the above states. It advises all Catholics to vote against and defeat these Democratic candidates for governor.

I hav long been of the opinion that the Liberalists will never make their influence felt and useful until they organize as a voting party or become more independent of party politics than they are now, in seeking the nomination and then the support of known Liberals.

But to return to the purpose of this letter—the subject of government support of sectarian education of the wards of the nation. Let Liberals everywhere, especially in the territories, watch the extent of the practice, and report through THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the country will be surprised to learn how the people's money is being used by their chosen agents to get and retain power by corrupting the very sources of our safety.

In haste, very truly yours, W. S. WOOD.

The above letters show the interest and enthusiasm there are for the cause for which the American Secular Union is organized. The question simply is, Shall we be united among ourselvs? Any professed Liberal who labors to create discord is worthy only of the utmost condemnation. He is doing more injury than it is possible for any Christian to accomplish. The Christians are our open enemies, and we know how to meet them and their efforts. But he who, under the guise of Freethought, seeks to distract our forces, confuse the minds of the people, and bring up false issues, should receive the condemnation of everyone who desires the progress of Secularism. There are ways by which honest and fair criticism can be expressed, and by which wrong can be righted, without an indiscriminate and calumnious attack. He who lends himself to any such method of redress is the ally of the church. He is the "cat's-paw" of the Christian. He covers himself with infamy. The action of the American Secular Union is open as the day. There is no concealment. To every proper tribunal there will be a strict and fair reckoning of accounts. The thing to be settled, the important thing for Liberals, is this: Are there enough honorable, generous-minded, just, and earnest men and women in this country to maintain a strong, united, and victorious organization? Or is the body of Liberals in this country to be distracted, like so many theological parties, with petty quarrels? I myself hav faith to believe that the good and noble will triumph—that the spirit of harmony will prevail. Never was there a brighter prospect than now for the union of Liberals. I hope that every man and woman who realizes the greatness of the interests at stake will rally and do the very best work he or she can do for the common cause. The attacks made upon the Union should only influence its friends to be more devoted and more determined to see that its platform shall become the law of American politics. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Albany Secular Society.

At the annual election of this society, held January 3, 1886, the following officers were elected: J. J. McCabe, president; Mrs. H. A. Iliohan, first vice-president; W. Dickson, second vice-president; C. Herbert Luck, corresponding secretary; J. J. Jansen, financial secretary; C. L. Edinger, treasurer; Thomas Dugan, custodian. C. HERBERT LUCK, Sec'y.

The Division in the Philadelphia Union.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Dear Sir: Within the last few weeks we hav had some hard battles to fight with certain members who had openly avowed they would "rule or ruin." These members were bitterly opposed to paid lecturers in the first place, and in the second place would ignore all allegiance to the American Secular Union and the Nine Demands of Liberalism, declaring as far back as August last that if lecturers were paid from the treasury of the League they would not pay their dues. The above declaration they faithfully kept until, according to our by-laws, they were dropped from the roll of membership, and excluded from a voice in the business meetings of the League by a majority vote of the members present in good standing. This resulted in several of the friends of the disturbers resigning from the League, and, having in their possession the new charter purchased by the League for the purpose of holding property under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, they went secretly, through the following week, and formally organized themselvs into a legal organization, rented the hall over the heads of the old organization, and even declared Friendship Liberal League No. 257 dissolved. But the founders of No. 257, who think more of honor than of law, determined to sustain the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and maintain their allegiance to the American Secular Union. Hence they went and secured another hall, took the treasury with them, and in loyalty to the great body of Liberals throughout the country, hav been doing since what little they can to spread the Gospel of Humanity by engaging the officers of the American Secular Union to present before the citizens of our great city the objects and aims of Secularism. On December 13th ult. we had with us Brother Reynolds, chairman of the American Secular Union, who gave us two excellent addresses. In the afternoon he lectured on the "Defense of the Devil," which lecture was received by his hearers with overwhelming appreciation. In the evening his subject was, "The Nine Demands of Liberalism," which also gave great satisfaction and won for the speaker a triumph over the prejudices that had been implanted in the minds of some of his hearers through the influence of those who were opposed to the platform of the Union and its officers. On the 27th ult. we were favored again with the gentle, though logical and zealous, efforts of Samuel P. Putnam, secretary of the American Secular Union, who lectured to a large and appreciativ audience in the afternoon upon the "Demands of Humanity," and in the evening upon the "Aims and Objects of the American Secular Union." His subjects were handled in a very masterly manner, and all who listened to the discourses not only expressed great satisfaction, but also a desire to know more of Secularism through the same channel. And now let me close my remarks by stating that on the 31st of Jan., 1886, we shall hold our Paine celebration at our new hall, Broad and Woods streets, when we hope to hav a feast both for the body and mind, consisting of addresses, recitations, music, vocal and instrumental, also a supper for the hungry, and hope that in the future we may realize for Liberalism what we now desire, viz., harmony and prosperity. Yours for truth and freedom, Philadelphia, Pa. Prof. W. Seymour.

The Liberal Club.

"Oratory is simplicity," began Dr. P. P. Field, of Boston, in his address upon "The Physiology of the Voice, and the Delsarte Philosophy of Expression," before the Manhattan Liberal Club on Friday evening January 8th.

The evening was a cold one, but not cold enough to prevent a large audience from being in attendance.

"The man with the badge-pin" was not there, so "An Occasional" had to do the duty of reporting the deliberations of the club.

President Wakeman first announced an unusual amount of good literature on the table, particularly two numbers of The Truth Seeker, one of which contained a tribute of respect to Honorable Elizur Wright, from Col. R. G. Ingersoll, and also an article "by your humble servant" upon the question, "Is it Safe to Emancipate Women?" Mr. Wakeman characterized that number, as many others had already done, as one of the best ever published, which was saying much considering it was The Truth Seeker he was speaking of. "There were also," he said, "four petitions upon the table to be signed by those who had not already done so; one for the taxation of the churches; one for opening museums on Sunday; one for the repeal of the Comstock Bills [not laws]; one for enfranchisement of women."

Dr. Field went on with his address. His exposition of the philosophy showed that Delsarte had in the domain of expression, including that of voice, attitude, and gesture, made the same discoveries that Mr. Andrews has in regard to the universe as a whole, or as far as we know it, and of each and every domain of the universe, viz., that there is a fundamental threefold distribution to be made. Other philosophers, Delsarte included, discover the fact in different domains of this threefold distribution, while Mr. Andrews goes further and shows that it is an inherent law of nature that it should be so, and that nothing can exist upon any other plan.

The full significance of this may not be apparent to the superficial observer, or to anyone until he undertakes to solve some one of the many problems facing the community to-day. Then he may realize their importance. Ask one, for instance, how he can reconcile the Anarchist and the Socialist, for reconciled they must be in order to hav a harmonious society, and I think he will giv it up as an unsolvable conundrum, unless he understands these inherent principles of all being, and that society must be constructed upon the same basis, and upon the right balance of these principles in actual working. Then he will see that the state Socialist will hav to recognize the principle of freedom or individuality, and consequently the individual and the free play of the individual cannot be ignored, and the Anarchist will hav to recognize that the principle of order or government, or superiorities, etc., etc., cannot be ignored.

Dr. Field's address, illustrated as it was with charts, was extremely interesting, as was evidenced by the interest of the audience.

Instead of the usual discussion following, various persons read passages furnished them by Dr. Field to allow opportunity for analysis and criticism of voices, and faults and failings of voices. Dr. Field said he found not one bad voice, and many good ones, which leads one to ask if Liberal thought has any effect upon the voice. He said also that all the voices might be improved by proper culture, and for this purpose he proposed to form a class especially for Liberals.

But the most notable event of the evening was the complete conversion of Mr. Wakeman to the idea of the normal aud legitimate necessity of culture in elocution, and his open confession thereof. "Hitherto," he said, "he had considered elocution and the teaching thereof a fraud and hypocrisy, because it had no foundation, but Dr. Field had shown a scientific basis for his system, therefore he indorsed it." Afterward he was heard to say that he hoped to get his daughter into the school. Altogether, the Liberal Clubees had reason to be well satisfied with the evening.

A Brand-new Miracle.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I send you an account of a miracle which I clip from one of our St. John's papers. It has one advantage over the miracles of old, for we know something about the man.

He is a man of God, full of faith and prayer, and if God answers prayer there is no reason why an Almighty God could not cast out of a man a quart or two of cabbage as easily as he cast out a legion of devils eighteen hundred years ago. Jonah prayed, and was cast out of a four-inch hole onto dry land, and yet there are some who will not believe this little cabbage miracle, because it is not in the Bible! It is not treating Mr. Welch fairly, for he has the credit of having performed another miracle six months ago. He commanded a sick woman to arise, and she "arised." M. Babcock.

THE MIRACLE.

From the Mason, Mich., News.

A gentleman from Holt was in this office within the past week and gave us the following account of a miracle said to hav been performed in Delhi by Rev. Mr. Welch, leader of the praying band that has recently conducted so successful a series of revival meetings there. Mr. Welch, according to the gentleman's narrativ of the occurrence, was dining at the home of a German family near Holt. Among the other delicacies on the table was a copious supply of sauerkraut. When Mr. Welch was asked to partake of this he replied that it was a dish of which he was especially fond, but that the Lord had forbidden him to eat it, and he dared not disobey. But after smelling the fragrance of the kraut and feeling a strong temptation to partake of it, he finally decided to ask divine permission to indulge for this once. So, leaving the table, he prayed long and earnestly to be allowed to eat of the kraut for which his soul so strongly yearned. At last he arose with the assurance that his request was granted, and that he might eat. After that the kraut was not refused, but Mr. Welch partook to his heart's desire.

That evening, when he came to conduct his revival service, the reverend gentleman was smitten with sore gastronomical distress. Something in his stomach hung heavy as lead. He had no doubt what it was; it was the sauerkraut which he had wickedly asked to eat, although conscious when he proffered his request that it was forbidden him. Now, in punishment of his indirect disobedience, it was lying in his stomach an indigestible mass. His pain was so great that he could not well conduct the meeting, so he prayed again that the kraut might be removed from his stomach to that of a young man in the audience, who, in the successful conduct of the meeting, was willing to carry the clergyman's load. Our informant assures us that in answer to Mr. Welch's prayer, his stomach was relieved entirely, but that the young man at once became exceedingly ill, and after experiencing exceptional pains and sickness in his stomach, went out of the church and threw up a large amount of sauerkraut. The miraculous part of the occurrence became most apparent when the young man confessed that he had eaten no kraut within six months, and that his stomach was entirely at ease until Mr. Welch's pains commenced to disappear. How the pickled cabbage could hav appeared in his stomach except through the intervention of some supernatural agency, is the problem.

The gentleman who related the above is an old resident of Delhi, and a gentleman of undoubted veracity and candor. He did not giv the story for publication, but as one of the remarkable incidents in connection with the remarkable meetings which Mr. Welch has conducted.

Lectures and Meetings.

C. W. Stewart writes: "When I took up your New Year's number the first thing that greeted my eyes was your superb cartoon representing the danger that threatens Liberty. This gratified me, for it givs evidence that The Truth Seeker has enlisted the potent element of art in the cause of mental freedom. Next came Colonel Ingersoll's splendid tribute to Elizur Wright, which will find an echo in the heart of every true Liberal. Then came T. B. Wakeman's unanswerable argument on the suffrage question, which thoroughly disposes of every objection to that movement. And so on to the very last page. I found the entire number filled with matter that makes it worth a whole year's subscription, and I felt very much as a preacher is supposed to feel during a successful revival. I wanted to shout, 'Glory!' Never in the history of Freethought has there been such a demand for work. I hav already received more calls than I can possibly fill during the remainder of the season, and all the speakers seem to be equally busy. My third month with the society of Ottumwa will close January 31st. Preparations are now being made to celebrate the Paine anniversary in an appropriate manner. It is grand to liv in this age and breathe the air of liberty, and realize that the noble souls who toiled for the just and true did not labor in vain."

J. E. Remsburg's recent tour through Kansas appears to hav been one continual ovation. Immense audiences greeted him nearly everywhere, many going from ten to fifty miles to hear him. At several places the bands volunteered their services. Referring to his Concordia speech in opposition to the Bible in the public schools, the Kansas Blade says: "The lecture delivered by Mr. John E. Remsburg at the Opera House, Monday evening, was just what every person who knows him expected it would be—a forcible presentation of the objections Liberals hav to the Bible in the schools. . . The lecture was pronounced by many persons who were not supposed to be Freethinkers a masterly argument against the Christian claim, while Liberals regard it unanswerable." Of his lectures at Minneapolis, the Minneapolis Democrat says: "Mr. Remsburg's lecture Tuesday evening was well attended. The large audience last [Thursday] night is the best commentary upon his eloquence and merit as a speaker." At Newton Mr. Remsburg gave a course of lectures. In addition to a lengthy synopsis of the first lecture of the course, "Sabbath-Breaking," the Daily Republican of that city contained the following: "Professor Remsburg's lecture at Music Hall last evening was well attended, considering the inclement weather. The audience was composed of the thinking, reasoning people of the community. Mr. Remsburg's subject was 'Sabbath-Breaking,' on which he discoursed eloquently for an hour, bringing some powerful arguments and undisputed authority to bear in support of his claims." On each of the following evenings the Opera House was packed with an audience numbering nearly one thousand. At the close of his engagement here Mr. Remsburg was waited upon by a delegation comprising some of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of Newton, who wished to secure his services for a year. As an inducement they offered to pay him a salary equal to the highest salary paid by the churches of that city for a minister.

Giv the Museums Equal Rights with the Saloon.

Of the "Sunday question" the Church Standard says it is "not easily settled on any basis that requires the recognition of Sunday as any other than a weekly holiday recognized by law. That it is to be in any sense a holy day, which the civil authorities are called upon to recognize in even the most limited form, is the cause of much of the confusion in the minds of many persons, whose religious instincts are undoubtedly much offended by the idea of what they regard as a desecration of the Sabbath." And after saying, "Abstractedly we should regret as much as they anything that would tend to destroy that reverence for a sacred thing which even as yet clings to Sunday in the minds of many who hav lost most other sense of such kinds of obligation," it asks: "Is it well to insist on the keeping up for a time by the arm of the law a state of things that must pass away whenever the direct question comes up for settlement, Why is Sunday to be observed? Is it wise for those who hav religious scruples to insist there shall be no yielding in this matter to the not altogether unreasonable requirement that one part of the provision made by law, and made at the expense of the whole community for their instruction, or their amusement, or their benefit, shall be free to all upon that one day upon which the greatest number can avail themselvs of it? When so many and such objectionable places are open on Sunday, and the civil authority is either powerless, or unable, or unwilling, to close them, it may be doubted whether one that is not at all objectionable might not better be opened."

Some time ago we printed a list of amounts asked for from this city by the managers of the different asylums, reformatories, and charitable institutions for the current year. The total was $1,094,002.90. Our accommodating board of estimate and apportionment in their final estimate hav raised this to $1,205,073.50. The tax-paying public is not informed for what purpose this extra $111,070.60 is to be used. It seems that our municipal government think the people of New York will stand the most reckless extravagance. New York is the most extensivly taxed city in the world. Paris taxation is $5.40 per capita; Berlin, $7.35; London, $7.40; Brooklyn, whose people are complaining loudly, pays only $10.88; but New York citizens pay between $30 and $36 per capita. The general extravagance of our rulers is shameful and this particular item for religious grist-mills outrageous. Think of every man, woman, and child in the city being compelled to annually contribute a dollar to support a lot of religious harpies who make a business of charity!

Communications.

Faith and Morality as Factors in Salvation.

The meaning ot the term Faith, as used in this article, is belief and trust; that of Morality, good conduct in this life.

The elementary principle of all the religious teaching of the Bible, and the various churches based on it, is faith. This faith is the child of education, and has not any necessary connection with moral virtue. Fanatic assassins and sensual idolaters hav often displayed a faith unsurpassed by any Christian saint. An equally vehement faith has, in many instances, inflamed the persecutor with zeal and armed the martyr with endurance. Saul, the Hebrew zealot, breathing forth threatenings and slaughter against the infant Christian church, was imbued with a faith as strong as that of Paul the Apostle. He would hav suffered for the Jewish law and traditions as much as he afterward suffered for the sake of Christ. Some of the most eminent Bible saints, whose pious and godly lives are emphatically indorsed by the God revealed in the Bible in terms of the highest commendation, according to the statements of the same book, were men of the grossest habitual vice, with scarcely a redeeming moral trait in their character. This is a very strong assertion, but it is thoughtfully made, and its proof is at hand.

For our edification and spiritual comfort, let us carefully examin the Bible account of the life of the godly David, to the spotless purity of whose life an all-wise and all-good God gave this explicit testimony, saying, "I hav found David, the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will" (1 Sam, xiii, 14, and Acts xiii, 22). After David's death, we are informed that God himself, by the mouth of the prophet Abijah, pronounced this glowing eulogy on the perfect life of his servant David: "Who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart to do only that which was right in mine eyes" (1 Kings xiv, 8). And again, to silence every possible objection to the holy purity of this man whom God specially delights to honor, we are told in 1 Kings, xv, 5, that "David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from anything that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." In accordance with this exception, I will not charge David with this sin in the following brief review of some of the most prominent actions of his pious life, as depicted in the inspired pages of God's most holy word. (Chiefly condensed from Bradlaugh's Life of David).

While this pious man was living in exile through fear of Saul, there gathered around him four hundred people, composed of such as were in distress, discontented, and in debt (1 Sam. xxii, 2). Captain of these men, he and they led a wandering life, and sometimes exacted a kind of blackmail from persons of property. For permitting Nabal's possessions to escape unrobbed the upright David demanded compensation. As Nabal did not comply with this unjust demand, David resolved to murder him and all his household for their wicked reluctance to quietly submit to his extortions. Before David did this, Nabal's wife saw David and compromised the matter with him. He accepted her person, and ten days afterward poor Nabal was found dead in his bed (1 Sam. xxv). Shortly afterward David, now at the head of six hundred brigands, went and lived during sixteen months under the protection of Achish, king of Gath. While residing there, this holy man robbed the inhabitants of neighboring places, killing the unfortunate people, and leaving neither man nor woman alive to inform Achish of his depredations. And as he always walked in God's ways, to whom lying lips are said to be an abomination, he lied to the king to hide his base actions (1 Sam. xxvii). Still his conduct must hav redounded to the glory of God, whose ways are not as ours. Shortly after this the Philistines went to war with the Israelites, and the unpatriotic David offered King Achish the help of himself and his band of men to make war on the people of his own country; but the Philistines had the honor to reject the traitor's aid, and thus save David from the consummation of his base offer (1 Sam. xxviii, 12; xxix). When he became king over all Israel, we are told that he captured the stronghold of Zion, and on that day proclaimed that "whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain" (2 Sam. v, 8). Joab goes up first, to smite the lame and the blind, and becomes chief, by odious "merit raised to that bad eminence" (1 Chron. xi, 6). And God is represented as being well pleased with this inhuman conduct of the brutal monster David, who for the barbarous murder of these poor helpless persons rewarded Joab with the leadership of the armies of God's favorit people. David himself seems to hav been quite vain of his physical perfections. This we are led to infer from the fact that, on the occasion of a wonderful religious revival, he slipped off most of his clothing and returned to the primitiv fashion of Eden as closely as the degenerate custom of his time permitted. In this condition he danced and shouted before the admiring gaze of his subjects. He seemed specially delighted to make what in this Infidel age of the world would be called an indecent exposure of his godly person in full view of the young women of the congregation. Michal, probably the most modest of his many wives, saw him go through this little performance, and, in that tone of cutting sarcasm which offended wives know so well how to use, said, "How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the vain fellows shamelessly uncovereth himself" (2 Sam. vi, 20). The Lord seems to hav been highly pleased with David's conduct on this occasion, and punished Michal for her reproof of David by inflicting upon her the then dreaded curse of childlessness (2 Sam. vi, 13, 23) (Kelso). This exemplary man, after God's own heart, whose holiness should mantle the cheek of Infidelity with the burning blush of shame, according to Psalms xxxviii, contracted a disease that made him roar and left neither soundness in his flesh nor rest in his bones. But to the honor of this chosen vessel of grace be it told that in this severe affliction he remained so divinely saturated with Bible piety that he was still able to triumph over his light afflictions, which in the end worked for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. From the depths of his misery he rejoicingly exclaims: "In thee, O Lord, do I hope!" Certainly; why should you not hope in the Lord? You need not despair, holy David. By faith take a dip in the cleansing blood of the "lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii, 8). This will be your passport through God's great bankrupt court of salvation, and you will come out as good as any new-born Methodist saint, ready to join in singing the heavenly song:

> I will steal, I will rob, and I'll murder,
> Or do any dark deed that I will,
> Just ceasing in time to be sorry,
> And Jesus will settle the bill!

And there will be abundance of joy in the Jewish-Christian heaven, "more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance" (Luke xvi, 7–10).

We are told that David repented and was forgiven for having committed the crimes of murder and adultery in the case of Uriah and his wife, and that the good God, who is all-just, killed an innocent child which had no part or share in its father's dreadful crimes, and never chose that it should be born from the womb of Uriah's wife (2 Sam. xii, 14, 15). After this, David became more cruel and merciless than before, for we are informed that he now sawed people with saws, cut them with harrows and axes, and made them pass through brick kilns (2 Sam. xii, 31). David had sworn to Saul that he would not cut off his seed, i. e., he would not destroy Saul's family (1 Sam. xxiv, 16–22). But he now took two of Saul's sons, and five of Saul's grandsons, and gave them up to the Gibeonites, who hung them. In this way the godly David kept his sworn promis to Saul (2 Sam. xxi, 4–9). The anger of the Lord being kindled against Israel, and he, wishing some excuse to punish the descendants of Jacob, moved David to number his people (2 Sam. xxiv, 1). In the account of the census which David caused to be taken, there is a trivial disagreement to the extent of 270,000 soldiers between 2 Sam. xxiv, 9, and 1 Chron. xxi, 5. But my Christian friends must not let either common sense or such a slight inaccuracy as this stand between them and heaven. David, it seems, did wrong in numbering his people, though we are never told in the account given us of his life that he did wrong in robbing and murdering their neighbors, or in pillaging peaceable people. The king having done wrong, an all-merciful God brought a pestilence on the people and killed 70,000 of them for an offense which their ruler had committed and in which they had no share (2 Sam. xxiv, 15).

David at last grows old and weak, and his death hour comes. Oh! as the hart panteth for the water brooks, so panteth the Christian heart for the precious consolation of the dying words of the Psalmist. What pious instruction shall we not derive from the death-bed scene of him "who found favor before God" (Acts, vii, 45–46; "obtained a good report through faith" (Heb. xi, 32, 39), and was indorsed by Paul as having been a "man after God's own heart" (Acts, xiii, 22). Listen to the last words of Judah's expiring monarch. Let my Methodist friends who, in their pious zeal, regard an Infidel as "below the brute," and who hav heard their ministers retail the pious frauds and forgeries perpetrated with reference to the death-beds and dying words of the great, the generous, the witty Voltaire, who laughed superstition into fits; the manly, self-denying, incorruptible Thomas Paine, who regarded the world as his country, and whose religion was "to do good"—come with me to the death-couch of the special favorit of God. Bathsheba's son, Solomon, stands by his side. What does the dying David say? Does he talk of cherubs, angels, and heavenly choirs? Nay, none of these things pass his lips. Does he make a confession of his crime-stained life, and beg his son to be a better king, a truer man, a more honest citizen, a wiser father? Nay, not so. No word of sorrow, no sigh of regret, no expression of remorse, escapes his lips. What does the dying David say?—this red-handed robber, whose life has been extolled and guarded by "our father which art in heaven;" this perjured king, whose dying lips hav found favor in the sight of God, and who, when he dies, is safe for heaven. Does David repent? Nay, like the ravenous tiger or wolf, which, once tasting blood, is made more eager for the prey, he yearns for blood; he dies, and with his dying breath begs his son to bring the gray hairs of two old men—one of whom he had sworn not to kill—down to the grave with blood. Yet this is the life and death of God's anointed king, the chief of God's chosen people (1 Kings ii, 1, 10).

While David is spoken of by Deity as obeying all the statutes and keeping all the commandments of God, we are astonished to find that murder, theft, lying, licentiousness, treachery, and perjury are among the crimes that may be laid to his charge. David was a liar, God is a God of truth; David was cruel and merciless, God is merciful and long-suffering; David was a thief, God says "Thou shalt not steal;" David was a murderer, God says, "Thou shalt do no murder;" David accepted the person of Nabal's wife, God says, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife." Yet, notwithstanding all these things, the Bible assures us that David was "a man after God's own heart."

Had this saintly man any redeeming moral traits in his character? Was he a good citizen? If so, the Bible is silent about every action that would justly entitle him to such an appellation, and instead has given us the record of his attempted extortion in the case of Nabal, and has furnished us with a notice of his horde of followers—outlawed, discontented, and in debt. Was he even grateful to those who aided him in his hour of need? Nay; like the torpid serpent which, half frozen by the wayside, is warmed into new life in the traveler's bosom, and then treacherously stabs him with its poisoned fangs, so David robbed and murdered the friends and allies of the king of Gath, who had given him refuge from the pursuit of Saul. Does his patriotism outshine his many vices? Not even this. David was a heartless traitor, who volunteered to serve against his own countrymen, and would hav done so had not the Philistines rejected the traitor's aid. Was he a good king? His crimes brought a plague and pestilence on his subjects, and his reign is a continued succession of wars, revolts, assassinations, plots and counterplots, while his whole life is a dark blot on the page of human history.

While Christian apologists make no direct attempt to justify David's general conduct, because none can be made, they yet, in palliation of it, sometimes charge Infidels with putting an unfair interpretation and coloring on several of the scriptural passages relating to him. This charge is emphatically denied. It is the Christians themselvs whom necessity has driven to do this, in order to gloss over and hide in some small degree the odiously bad character of the sweet and pious singer of Israel. All that has been done in this article has only brought forward his robbing, murdering, lying, cruel, licentious, unpatriotic, and perjured traits of character as the Bible itself has painted them, and contrasted them with other statements of the same book respecting him and some of the leading principles of social morality—two classes of statements so utterly opposed to each other as to render it impossible for any truthful being to reconcile them. Consequently, to claim divine inspiration for the contradictory book which contains them is a gross libel on all truth and justice. All exalted and noble conceptions of right conduct unanimously swear that David was not a man after the heart of any just being, and that the book which asserts that he was a good man, as the Bible does, originated in barbarism, and has not even a civilized man for its author.

In this brief review of the life of the man after God's own heart, it has been shown that the New Testament indorses the statements of the Old regarding his holy character. Now it is a well known fact that in the great school of life, where all are scholars, Example has always been the great teacher of the unreasoning multitude which form the bulk of its students. In her commanding presence, rational precepts, however wise and good, stand neglected in the shade, unknown or forgotten. Scorning reason, she says to one, "Go," and he goeth; to another, "Come," and he cometh, and to her obedient servants, "Do these things," and they are done. Hence, when the borrowed deity of the Christians and the book which they devoutly believe was inspired by him, condescend to honor, praise, and magnify the character of a man like David as a life-long incarnation of every virtue pleasing to God (save in one instance), is it any wonder that so many church members are so woefully deficient in the practice of justice, mercy, and truth, and nearly every other virtue which adorns and ennobles human life? In this sad state of things, reason, honesty, truth, and charity are at a heavy discount, and blind faith and hypocrisy at a high premium in the stock market of the Christian church. Wherever she possesses a commanding influence, the religious bigot, animated with a holy fever of blind zeal for the glory of God, slams the door of every office of trust, honor, or emolument at his disposal in the face of men of known and acknowledged moral worth and intellectual ability, because they are honest enough to say that they hav ceased to believe in the inspiration and healthy moral influence of a book which sanctions with the highest praise the character of such a man as David, whose whole life, though crowned with faith, was pre-eminent in wickedness and worthy only of being held in everlasting shame and contempt. "From pulpit and press, from tongue and pen, still flows the venom of the church's enmity against all independence of thought and expression which do not coincide with her irrational creeds and dogmas." If she only had her former power she would compel the honest men who denounce her shams to wear the bandage of faith over their eyes, take a sectarian bit in their mouth, bow the abject knee in the superstitious dust of a by-gone age, let priestcraft mount their servil backs and drive them with the lash of starvation in this world, and threats of hell in the next, into some one or more of the popular churches of the day. Is it any wonder that patient merit in many instances is compelled to bear the kicks and spurns of holy ignorance and sanctified hypocrisy—that, reduced to rags and penury, it is often left uncared for to perish by the wayside, while the Christian priest and Levite, dressed in the finest clothing, and faring sumptuously every day, scornfully pass by on the other side?

Christianity has occupied the throne of power and influence for over eighteen hundred years, and the net results of her work in all these centuries is organized hypocrisy on one hand, and blind belief on the other. Is it any wonder, then, that ignorance and church bigotry, acting on the said Christian princi that "the end justifies the means," still lead men, Paul (Rom. iii, 7), to lie for the glory of God, a like him (God), be known by their "breach promis" among their neighbors (see Num. xiv, 34)? When we consider the evil and widespread influence of the bad examples of celebrated Bible saints such as Lot, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David—all eminent for faith and wickedness—we are no in the least surprised that so many believers grace our penitentiaries and prisons, or, according to their own dying confessions and their attending minister's assurance, swing from the gallows into that heavenly land of pure delight where it is alleged that sin and evil had their birth, and Bible saints immortal reign. For of such is the kingdom of heaven.

"To illustrate what Christianity teaches regarding the relativ value of good works and faith as factors in salvation, we will take the case of a man who is peaceable, law-abiding, a kind father, a good neighbor, and charitable to the poor and suffering, every way a good citizen in the community in which he livs. He endeavors in all his transactions to do justly and love mercy. But this individual is not a religious man in the church sense of the word. He has never experienced what it calls 'a change of heart,' possibly he is skeptical as to the inspiration of the Bible, or even a future life. During a dark night, on his way home, where a fond wife and prattling babes are eagerly watching for his coming, a brute, in the shape of a man, with bloodthirsty instincts, and for the sake of a few dollars, knocks him down with a club and leaves him on the highway a corpse. The villain is arrested, tried by a jury of twelve honest men, found guilty, and sentenced by the judge to forfeit his life. During the interval between his sentence and the day of his execution he is visited by the clergy, repents, accepts Christ as his savior, professes religion, receives the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, and declares himself accepted of God.

"He ascends the gallows steps with a firm tread, the New Testament in his hand, prays fervently, and just before the fatal drop falls assures the gaping crowd that he has found peace in Jesus, that his sins hav been forgiven, and that within a few moments he will be with his maker in heaven. According to strait-jacket Bible Christianity, the soul of the murdered man has gone to perdition, there to suffer the everlasting punishment declared against unbelief; the other man's soul to heaven, to spend eternity in praising the Lord of hosts and feasting his eyes on the never-ending miseries of the unfortunate victim of his crime. This revolting doctrin givs the premium of everlasting happiness to a man whose whole life, except the last few hours, was spent in infamy and crime, and punishes him whose whole life was a model of virtuous conduct in the endless torments of hell. Virtue passes for nothing, and vice, at last crowned with faith, gets the sugarplums. The Bible and the Christian call the God, whom they represent as acting in this manner, a just God; but he could not be called a just man who would undertake to follow his example. No wonder that there is so much wickedness in the Christian world, that believes in a God having such a character, and that it is his precept which commands them 'to be perfect even as their father in heaven is perfect' (Matt. v. 48)" (Common Sense).

And now one word in conclusion. The writer desires to be regarded as having no warfare with men, but only with principles which he believes to be pernicious. Hating rheumatism, he has nothing but sympathy for the unfortunate person who has it. He believes that the relation of people to each other is as men, and to everyone who is willing to allow others every liberty and right which he claims for himself the writer extends the hand of fellowship and good will. A. DILWORTH.

Cedar Hill, Tex.

The Sum of All Folly.

If we could get all our goods by wishing for them, would it not be better than by toiling and spending money? If foreign ships brought all kinds of manufactures here and gave them away, who would object? No sane person, surely. Now, because foreign ships come here and offer half their goods for nothing (or all of them so cheap that it amounts to the same thing), a certain few object, and put such a heavy fine or tax on their imported goods as to keep them from coming here. The same wicked selfishness that has upheld persecution, tyranny, slavery, war, despotism, now upholds the tax on trade and decries cheap imports. If slavery was "the sum of villainies," our tariff is the sum of all stupidities.

A sample of the execrable hypocrisy of protection is seen in the silk business. "American industry is not to be allowed to compete with foreign pauper labor." No! no! A heavy tariff is put on imported silk manufactures, so that a few thousand persons in silk factories, not over ten thousand in all, and mostly children and girls, may get big wages ostensibly, but in reality to favor a half-dozen employers. They are American laborers, and theirs is an industry par excellence. They must be protected, and more joy is made over their paltry product ten thousand times than over all the results of agriculture itself, whereas in fact the hens of any half-dozen counties surpass it. But the poor creatures who try to produce the raw silk here are left to compete with Chinese and Italians, in their foreign homes, who work for ten to twenty cents per day. Get into a factory and work up the raw material, and you become an industry and are to be protected; but go out and toil to create the wealth out of which the manufacture exists, and you are a nonentity, except for taxation.

There is something so unutterably foolish in the belief that wages are higher because employers make higher profit, that one knows not how to expose it. But, says a large manufacturer to me, we don't pretend to pay more wages because we make more profit. The point is just this—if you don't protect us we can't pay at all, or can only offer so little wages that our workmen will leave us and go at farming.

And that is just the truth. Your occupation is no business at all. It is beggary, alms, and extortion. Good heavens! To believe that a vast number of people can do prosperously what no one can do without ruin. One man can not neglect his proper business to make his own shoes, wagons, harness, etc. But several millions can despise the opportunities that are all around and under foot; can waste millions' worth of raw material, the product of their own hard toil or of countless ages of nature's storing, and can violently displace, pervert, or prevent the natural evolution of labor by vast numbers of their citizens—all to make a little silk and keep a dozen steel rail mills going, and a few hundred woollen factories and some thousand or two of other mills, foundries, etc.

The waste and neglect of raw material in the West and South is something stupendous, all because manufacturing is invited or forced into departments that are unnatural to our present development. Manufactures should develop naturally, just as the flour mill follows upon the thresher. Natural home demand is the parent of manufactures, not a demand forced by embargo on ports and a robber tax. Hostil states blockade each other's ports to ruin or distress the foe. A robber congress has put an embargo on our ports, and punishes the smuggler as the belligerent punishes the blockade runner. Were we of the West under another flag, how long would we tolerate a tariff by the nation owning the ports that compels our products—the exports—to pay it?

Although we are near sixty millions of people, we are not as great a nation as we were in 1860 with thirty millions. We are not so compactly settled as we were in 1850. Since 1865 the whole continent has been opened up by railways, and we are relativly a more dispersed, thinly-settled nation. In 1875 lands had fallen lower than for many years, owing to the countless millions of acres opened up by transcontinental railways and by the homestead laws. We were more crowded in 1860, and our manufactures had increased in less than ten years some eighteen thousand in number, and the investment one hundred per cent. From 1870 to 1880 we added less than eighteen hundred to the number, and only thirty-five per cent invested capital. From 1850 to 1860 was our free trade era. Then the agricultural implement business originated, created its own market by experiments in the fields, and grew to enormous proportions. In our then comparativly compact older settled conditions the word tramp was as unknown as the thing; the tramp was the creature, in England, of her corn laws, and filled her highways by armies in 1816–48

I hav stated solid facts. Abolish this tariff, and there will no more be heard of strikes, labor riots, Communism, Socialism, or tramps, until our lands are settled up, and some other bad laws are felt.

HOLT.

Freethought and Aristocracy.

It is well known that popular opinion sustaining capital against wages; aristocracy against the masses and the reforms they attempt; church policy with its ostracizing power in society; municipality and court against civil and moral justice, Freethought and free speech, and that this opinion is what sustains the demoralized democracy in favoring all these oppressions. Need it be plainer stated that this popularity is the executiv despotism of to-day? Then, how paradoxical the motiv, how fatal the effort to advance a counter movement by its standard of honor? Simply bowing to its authority, and laying our cause at its feet. Freethought allowed to all cannot affiliate with aristocracy, save on the hypothesis that the masses freely think out the condition, and chose the slavery of obedience to a clan of rulers. That state not anticipated, leaves the phrase, "Aristocracy of Freethought" a silly solecism, an ironical test of the people's logical ability. But the finest scholarship and best skill in using language cannot devise a form of sophistry and paint it to mystify the mockery, or puzzle an average reasoner. It is well that existing ideas find open airing and honest criticism, all without personal pique. Liberals who are sure that they know should in kindness say that flattering flourishes, as of triumphal pride, appear insincere in our case, are unadapted to present needs; and wasted time, energy or means, are suicidal in all applicable senses. Let us glance a moment at the plausible feature in the aristocratic proposition. Merit and service are qualifying tests. Deciding arbiters are implied—various minds will be authorized. Doubtless the author of the idea, with ability to prove his generosity and win good regards, will be considered soundly competent. S. Mitchell, with a life of meritorious labor and benign service in many reforms, will be named prince of the compact. Ezra and Angela Heywood, having shown what the deep, blighting wrongs and cruelties of this vicious age are, and what measures will abolish and regulate blessings equally—having well served the nation by defending themselvs through dire persecution, and in that defense spared others the pain of similar injustice—having thus merited public and personal thanks, will be by acclamation pronounced king and queen of the nobility. But they will decline the vain proffer, saying, Away with the signs of caste and coercion, we are citizens of a fraternal republic. No test can apply but the old one of inherited vampirism. Goodness and greatness love level plains where they can cheer the depressed and inspire the low; they abhor a gulf between them and the unfortunate. If by serving justice we ever merit and achieve a real republic, it seems likely that seekers for delectable positions will somewhere consort with the like-minded, and that those who hav severed the roots of the tyrannic upas till they hav freed a country, will accept the name radicals.

The secretary of the national department says, "Committees and papers, not conventions, are places to discuss secular affairs." Search in that plan for good features is haply successful. I educe this: Expensiv conventions are useless; each state will call a meeting when and only when seen useful, and for such purpose as can serve the cause. Auxiliaries will make corresponding secretaries, and these, in a state or section, will constitute a council to consult together by advice of their business committees, and see to activ efforts in that section. Ten thousand dollars can pay twenty supervising organizers for as many states. These will co-operate with councils. Papers will inform all states what each state is doing—if THE TRUTH SEEKER overflows, its counterpart, the Truth Teller, should be opened; for we, whose hearts are breaking in love for our ravished country, must speak. The warning of our veteran Pillsbury, is pertinent; implied duties appeal for attention. If this widely settled incubus be not changed to invigoration, not only pens of fire, but words of flame and hands of steel, will be the call. M. E. TILLOTSON.

Golden Comfort.

With the new generation the Christian church has not the influence that could be wished. One thing in our favor is that it is fashionable to go to church nowadays. All the very rich people in New York—the Astors, Vanderbilts, and Goulds—go to church regularly.—Rev. Dr. Haines.

Sauce for the Goose is Sauce for the Gander.

From John Swinton's Paper.

If the president is to be empowered to appoint trustees for the Mormon church, Senator Edmunds, how about trustees for other churches?

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
62 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 16, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of all the great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Persecuting the Mormons.

Mr. Powers, one of the federal judges of Utah, has begun the crusade against Mormonism. He refuses to naturalize a Mormon alien on the ground of his belief as a Mormon.

In answer to questions by Judge Powers, the applicant for naturalization papers stated that he was attached to the principles and laws of this country; that he proposed to obey these laws, those relating to polygamy and cohabitation included; that he believed it right for a man to hav living and undivorced more than one wife; and that this belief would prevent him from rendering a verdict of guilty in a polygamy case, if he was called as a juror in such a case, even if the proof should show the prisoner guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

Upon this last statement that he would not, as a juror, convict for polygamy, Judge Powers refused the alien his papers. The qualifications for naturalization are that it shall appear to the court that, "during the preceding five years, the applicant has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." It is not possible to stretch this language to cover belief. The United States district attorney prosecuting a man for polygamous living might object to such a juror as this alien, on the same ground that prosecuting attorneys now object to a juror who is opposed to capital punishment when trying a murder case, but a judge can not constitutionally refuse naturalization papers to such a man with any more justice than he could to the man opposed to capital punishment.

We think it would hav been well for Judge Powers to hav waited for Congress to authorize him to exclude a man from citizenship because of his belief, and not enter upon a little one-horse Christian crusade of his own. And we think that Congress will also do well to obey the first article of the amendments to the United States Constitution, which prohibits Congress from making an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

But this is not all, nor is it the worst. The Senate has passed the Edmunds bill to take the management of the temporal affairs of the Mormon church out of the hands of the church trustees and invest it in a board of trustees appointed by the president, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." The Mormon church is incorporated under territorial laws and its business is conducted by thirteen trustees. Senator Edmunds proposes to appoint fourteen additional trustees, presumably from the Christian church, certainly inimical to Mormonism. These fourteen trustees are to report every year to the Interior department. It will be seen that the government's trustees would control the organization by outvoting the church trustees on every question. The thirteen church trustees would of course hav no power by the side of the fourteen trustees representing the government at Washington. This is to be done because some of the members of the church hav violated a law of Congress concerning marriages, and because the church has sanctioned the marriages which are forbidden by law.

In the debate upon this bill some remarkable words of bigotry were spoken. Mr. Morgan addressed the Senate in support of an amendment offered by him providing for the disposal of the property of the Mormon church according to the rules and principles of the common law, as in the case of the dissolution of a corporation. He felt, he said, that we ought to strike the Mormon church organization out of existence. It was as a shrewd temporal organization that it had gained so much power. Its emigrant arrangements, its tithing capacity, its money power, and generally its organizing vigor had been the wonder of our time. Instead of appointing trustees for the management of these temporal matters, Congress should cut up the organization root and branch. Mr. Maxey supported the bill, he said, because he held that Mormonism was a mere cover for licentiousness. He thought the judiciary committee had discriminated with great skill between religious liberty and secular license. Mr. Edmunds said that the trustees appointed by the president were to see that the church money, which is enormous, should not be applied to the propagation of polygamy. But in the face of the words of the bill Mr. Edmunds's statement is dishonest. The sections of the bill applying are:

"Tenth—Authorizing fourteen trustees to be appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to take possession and control of the property and affairs of the corporation of the Mormon church and wind up its affairs.

"Eleventh—Authorizing the attorney-general to sue for and escheat to the government all property of the Mormon church corporation in excess of $50,000 of value in real property, except buildings used exclusivly for purposes of religious worship, and devoting the funds realized to common school purposes.

"Twelfth—Disincorporating the Mormon 'Perpetual Emigration Fund Society,' winding up its affairs and devoting its funds to common school purposes."

There was but little opposition to the bill. Mr. Call said he did not believe that Congress had the right to destroy the religious establishment of the Mormons. The practice of polygamy did not authorize us to violate the Constitution of the United States by legislating in regard to an establishment of religion or take private property for public use. Referring to Mr. Edmunds's point that it was not the religious but the temporal concerns of the church that were to be administered by the trustees provided by the bill, Mr. Call inquired what would be thought of Congress if it should undertake to administer, by trustees or otherwise, the property and temporal affairs of, for example, the Roman Catholic Church. He read from early Puritan laws to show that in the seventeenth century the Quakers were denominated a "damnable sect," and that all the persons who encouraged their entry in the colonies were subject to a fine of £100, as well as imprisonment. Mr. Teller said he was as anxious as any man to see polygamy extirpated but wanted to see it done under the form and under the color of law. Polygamy was a crime, but not a greater crime than murder, not a greater crime than rape. Mr. Teller was willing to "put the knife in," but wanted to do it in a manner authorized by our Constitution and laws. He believed the old law had enough authority in it to enable the government to complete the end in view in this matter, but for fifteen years the government had made practically no effort to enforce the old law. He regarded Joseph Smith as an arrant knave, and his system as an odious oligarchy and despotism that must be wiped out. But if we could justify the transgression of law in this instance we could in others. Mr. Call said we owed our liberties to fredom of speech and worship. We were departing from that ground when we passed such a bill as that under consideration. The Mormon has as much right to proclaim his faith as "the distinguished man who denies the divinity of Christ."

When the debate closed the bill passed by the following vote, and it now goes to the house for action thereon:

"YEAS.—Messrs. Allison (rep.), of Ia.; Beck (dem.), of Ky.; Berry (dem.), of Ark.; Chace (rep.), of R. I.; Cockrell (dem.), of Mo.; Coke (dem.), of Texas; Colquitt (dem.), of Ga.; Conger (rep.), of Mich.; Cullom (rep.), of Ill.; Dawes (rep.), of Mass.; Dolph (rep.), of Ore.; Edmunds (rep.), of Vt.; Eustis (dem.), of La.; Evarts (rep.), of N. Y.; Frye (rep.), of Me.; George (dem.), of Miss.; Harris (dem.), of Tenn.; Harrison (rep.), of Ind.; Hawley (rep.), of Conn.; Ingalls (rep.), of Kan.; Jackson (dem.), of Tenn.; Logan (rep.), of Ill.; McMillan (rep.), of Minn.; Manderson (rep.), of Neb.; Maxey (dem.), of Texas; Mitchell (rep.), of Pa.; Morrill (rep.), of Vt.; Palmer (rep.), of Mich.; Payne (dem.), of Ohio; Platt (rep.), of Conn.; Pugh (dem.), of Ala.; Sawyer (rep.), of Wis.; Sherman (rep.), of Ohio; Spooner (rep.), of Wis.; Van Wyck (rep.), of Neb.; Walthall (dem.), of Miss.; Wilson (rep.), of Ia., and Wilson (dem.), of Md. Republicans, 24; Democrats, 14. Total, 38.

NAYS.—Blair (rep.), of N. H.; Call (dem.), of Fla.; Gibson (dem.), of La.; Hampton (dem.), of S. C.; Hoar (rep.), of Mass.; Morgan (dem.), of Ala., and Vance (dem.), of N. C. Republicans, 2; Democrats, 5. Total, 7.

If the house shall concur in this measure and the president shall sign the bill, the United States government will be fully embarked in the religious business, with a church organization on its hands, and next we shall be having Congress passing laws as to what a man may believe. The Constitution is not of a straw's weight with the Christian bigots who see in the rival religion nothing but evil.

Mormonism is an imposition. There is no doubt about that. But so is Christianity and so are all other supernatural religions. A great many thousands of people, however, cherish Mormonism as sincerely, and believe in it as devoutly, as a great many thousands cherish and believe in Christianity. The Constitution of our country was framed to protect all alike, and throw the strong arm of the law around all beliefs, allowing everyone to exercise and support his own preferred religion, be it Christianity, Mormonism, or Mohammedanism. Congress has no more right to usurp the control of the Mormon property than it has to confiscate the Broadway building of the Methodist Book Concern.

Polygamy is immoral. That is unquestionable. But it ill becomes those Senators who keep mistresses to rave about immorality. There is a command in the book these Christians-for-votes-only profess to revere that the beam in thine own eye shall be removed before much fuss shall be made about the mote in the neighbor's. In New York fornication is no crime, and a man may hav forty practical wives if he can support them, and thirty-nine hav had no ceremony performed over them. Hundreds and thousands of the business men of this city—church-members, too—cohabit with more than one woman. Why not appoint trustees for the property of all the churches whose members are guilty of adultery, if that immorality is sufficient excuse for Congressional interference? Senator Edmunds's bill provides that "the lawful wife of a man charged with the crime of polygamy may be compelled to testify against her husband as to all matters except confidential communications made by him to her." Put the lawful wives of thousands of New York city's or Washington's solid men on the stand, compel them to testify to all they know except the confidential communications of their husbands, and a state of affairs would be revealed beside which the polygamous trials of Utah would be insignificant. Why should sexual promiscuity be a crime in Utah and not in New York?

As to the property question, there was not a word said in the senatorial debate about the danger to the country of allowing the Mormon hierarchy to continue to control their own revenues that will not apply with tenfold more force to the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and with equal force to the Methodist. The revenues of these two churches are simply enormous. They control millions upon millions of property, and thousands upon thousands of voters. Already they manage the temporal affairs of such communities as they hav a majority of voters in, precisely as the Mormon church influenced the affairs of Utah. Let Congress, if it shall determin to violate the Constitution, and set up gospel-shops, take hold of the enormous abuse of wealth and power perpetrated in every large city by Protestants and Roman Catholics alike. It is cowardly to pitch into only one sect just because it is not the prevailing sect, and is powerless before the mighty American nation.

Is He Owned by the Church?

Governor Hill, in his message to the New York legislature, devotes two paragraphs to "religious liberty:"

"I reiterate the recommendation contained in my previous annual message in favor of such wise and judicious legislation as may be necessary to effectually and impartially enforce that provision of the Constitution which declares that 'the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this state to all mankind.'

"The duty of the legislature to enforce this constitutional guarantee of religious liberty by appropriate legislation, whereby all just complaints which hav arisen in regard to its violation in some of the penal and charitable institutions of our state may be effectually remedied, is clear, and admits of no discussion. It is to be hoped that such proper action may be taken as, upon a thorough investigation of the subject, may seem to be justly demanded."

This is a recommendation in favor of the passage of the Freedom of Worship bill. Mr. Hill was the favored gubernatorial candidate of Tammany Hall. Tammany Hall is a thoroughly Roman Catholic institution. An interesting question is, Was Governor Hill's aid to pass this bill one of the conditions of Tammany's support.

What Americans May Expect.

M. Goblet, the minister of public instruction and ecclesiastical affairs of France, is in favor of the state voting stipends to the priests, because they then are public officials and can be disciplined. The advantage of this position was demonstrated recently.

During the late elections for members of the Chamber of Deputies, a horde of Roman Catholic priests dictated to their parishioners how they should vote. The matter coming to the notice of M. Goblet, the pay of thirty-nine priests was stopped. The bishop of Pamiers thereupon began a sharp correspondence with the minister. The bishop maintained the right of priests to interfere in politics, and said that the state was making systematic attacks upon the church which could not be submissivly received by the clergy. M. Goblet remained unmoved. The pope then protested to the French government against the action of M. Goblet, as an infringement of the provisions of the Concordat. December 15th the matter was brought before the Chamber of Deputies by M. Goblet, who stated that he would uphold the church, but he would exact from the clergy the same obedience that was exacted from other state-paid officials. M. Goblet's course was approved by a vote of 331 to 167. It was resolved thereupon that M. Goblet's speech and the result of the vote should be printed and placarded throughout the country.

The Evening Post of this city has obtained a copy of the catechism for the instruction of Roman Catholics in France, called, "The Voter's Duty," from which it translates the following:

"Q. Is it, then, a serious fault to vote wrong? A. Would you dare to think that it is not a fault to vote wrong? Without wrong voting at the elections should we hav witnessed the expulsion of the religious orders? Should we be under the yoke of compulsory and godless schools? Should we witness the subjection of the judges to the will of an impious government, of a ministry of Freemasons?

"Q. Is an elector, then, bound to confess his having voted wrong? A. Certainly, since it is a grave fault. He is bound to confess, to repent, to correct himself, and to repair as far as he can the sad consequences of his offense.

"Q. Some say that the priests go out of their province in speaking of the elections in their teaching. Is this true, and in accord with Catholic doctrin? A. Since it is a rigorous duty of conscience to vote right, a duty of which each elector owes an account to the supreme judge, the priests hav the right, and it is their duty, to recommend the voters to vote according to their conscience purified by religion, for candidates who giv guarantees that they will defend right principles, and not vote bad laws. The provincial council of Turin recommends the priests to instruct their parishioners on the obligation of voting and voting right."

In publishing this the Post says: "What this French experience illustrates and enforces is the danger of all connection between the church and the state—the danger, that is, of any state of things in which the clergy hav anything to hope or fear from legislation. As long as they hold anything either in the way of power, privilege, or emolument, which the legislature has bestowed or can take away, and are compelled to defend themselvs from attack with every weapon within their reach, the more pious and zealous they are, the more fiercely and bitterly they will fight."

We agree with the Post, rather than with M. Goblet. If by constitution and perpetual prohibition the church can never obtain a penny from the state, the motiv for interfering in politics will hav been removed. Dollars and cents and power are at the bottom of all ecclesiastical machinations.

A Word to Our Disputatious Correspondents.

The following from our esteemed friend, J. W. Truesdell, explains itself:

"SYRACUSE, Dec. 31, 1885.

"EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your issue of the 19th inst. Mr. Seward Mitchell, after thoroughly ventilating his own peculiar views on various subjects, and demanding the same rights for others, closes his strange letter as follows:

"'P.S.—Why were the inspired pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER soiled with the account of that trickster and fraud, Truesdell? I was disgusted with every word. A person who will pen and send to such a grand paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER such a villainous affair as that is no true friend of any good cause.'

"The above quotation calls for a reply from the editor, but as you hav thus far paid no attention to it, with your permission I will respond.

"I fully agree with Mr. Mitchell in his high estimation of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Its pages are indeed inspired, for the very reason, in my humble judgment, that the editor is liberal enough to giv the public all sides of all subjects, when they are presented to him in a clean and courteous manner; but when Mr. Mitchell declares that the inspired pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER are 'soiled' by the true statements referred to, or by any report emanating from the gifted pen of so refined a lady as Ella E. Gibson, his words betray more animosity than honest opinion.

"Mr. Mitchell has the undisputed right to believe, as he expresses himself in an autograph letter before me, that 'Spiritualism false is far better to humanity than Materialism true.' He has also the right to think that any person who does not subscribe to the above sentiment is a 'detestable fraud,' and that he is, himself, a true Liberal and a truth seeker (!).

"He has an undoubted right to think of Miss Gibson as he likes, but when he became rash enough to write her the following postal card, to say the least, he exhibited exceeding bad taste. Here is the card, verbatim ad literatim:

"'Not private. ELLA E. GIBSON: As I read your communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER about that detestable fraud, Truesdell, my whole being burnt with deep indignation. It is a shame to fill the grand inspired pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER with such abominable stuff. I would cut the accursed thing out if I could without spoiling the paper. I hav not one particle of faith in the honesty of Truesdell or the writers in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Indignantly, SEWARD MITCHELL.

"'NEWPORT, MAINE.'

"Æsop's wolf, as he washed his carcass in the brook that flowed from himself down to the lamb, appeared as harmless and innocent as a dove, but when he boldly charged the lamb with 'soiling' the water and making the stream unfit for his royal (!) use, the true character of the brute was at once revealed.

"Mr. Mitchell has the right to believe in absolute freedom for himself in all things, including 'Freelove;' he may even go so far as to think that a free parlor entertainment consisting of a few feats in legerdemain, and the explanation thereof, is a 'villainous affair,' and the reporter of the same 'is no true friend of any good cause,' but when he publicly expresses these strange and inconsistent views through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, it ill becomes him at the same time to charge any other person with 'soiling its inspired pages.' JOHN W. TRUESDELL."

We regret that we allowed Mr. Mitchell to use in these columns the words objected to by Mr. Truesdell. They are not true, and they are harsh and discourteous. The controversy between Materialists and Spiritualists has been gradually growing warmer and warmer, and we were scarcely aware of how really hot it had become until the limit was overstepped by Mr. Mitchell.

We hardly think it necessary to say that we believe in free discussion of all subjects, for we hav shown our faith by our works in printing the hundreds of conflicting communications that reach us every year. And we propose to continue the same course. We do not care to what conclusion a writer may arrive. The idea with which manuscripts sent to us are judged is, Has the writer something to say? does he know how to say it? and will it interest the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER? We never allow our own opinion of the truth or falsity of the argument to determin what shall be printed. This feeling induces us to allow the largest possible latitude to our correspondents, and in this case has caused us to do an injustice to two worthy individuals. To prevent a recurrence of this, we warn our disputatious friends to be in the future more careful of their language. Take pattern after our law-makers at Washington, who in their speeches manage to convey to the public the opinion that their opponents exist only because the sheriff has failed to perform his duty, but never transcend the usages of debate. As Speaker of a very large house, we shall send the sergeant-at-arms after the next debater who uses unparliamentary language.

A New Messiah.

Those who hav been earnestly looking for the coming of the messiah will be pleased to learn that he has arrived. Naturally enough, he has communicated with THE TRUTH SEEKER. His name is Lewis the Light, and this is his invitation. The perspicuity of it will be at once remarked:

"Oh, come to your savior, come,
Away from the bug he calls hum.
Behold, he stands, with outstretched hands—
Lumpty tum, tootlee tum tum."

Like his predecessors, Lewis has not been accepted by the religious world with that avidity which his divine mission, it would seem, should warrant. Wishing the editor of this paper a Merry Christmas, he writes:

"Dec. 22, 1885.

"EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I've just been crucified by the damned hypocrits at a Christmas festival, Calvary Presbyterian church—crucified by rejection, as Jesus prophesied I should on Calvary, and sealed the testimony with his blood to save me. Do you tumble?

"The end is not yet. Now, why in hell don't you fellows hurry up and fire Me as a red-hot shot into the churches and say, 'Take your damned messiah; we don't want Him?' And as I swear, 'Surely I come quickly,' so will I bounce the wolves, hirelings, and robbers, to whom I only said, 'Occupy till I come.' Now git! "LEWIS THE LIGHT,
"The 2-edged Sword."

Passing over the profanity of the above, with a shudder of several distinct shuds, we hav to confess to ignorance as to the present whereabouts of this new savior, as his letter givs no information on that subject. In this regard we resemble the wise men from the east. That Lewis recognizes the fact may be seen by his query, "Do you tumble?" It will be recalled that our prototypes desired to fall down and worship.

The gospel according to Lewis the Light comes in the form of a diminutiv pamphlet bearing the title, "Bible and Hymns," dedicated to the All in All that may gather together in One. The Hymns are rather inferior to the Bible. Here are a few lines of one of them, called, "Paradise Regained:"

"My love she livs that I feel and see,
Hark to the trumpet call!
She whispers that she will be true to me,
Over the garden wall!"

The "Bible and Hymns" is accompanied by this note:

"I send you My messianic Bible. Please review tenderly, for she is a sweet young thing. Don't frighten her with rough vulgarity. Nothing stronger than hades and whisky should be used in this pious era. THE BRIDEGROOM.

"N.B.—She is not copyrighted."

The career of our messiah, we learn, has not been altogether different from that of the Galilean, as he has been arrested. His antecedents are also similar, since his father was a Jew and carpenter, and he is a carpenter also. Let not Lewis be discouraged. Some 1886 years ago a man was born in Palestine who made claims similar to his own. He was abused then, but to-day he has a large and distinguished circle of admirers.

Editorial Notes.

E. C. WALKER has resumed the junior editorship of Lucifer. Mr. Walker is an interesting, and, on subjects where his premises are correct, a logical, writer.

THE Independent says: "If one week of prayer has not sufficiently humbled and quieted down our impatience," then "let the week go on indefinitly until we get news from heaven." It occurs to us that if our religious contemporary keeps the world on its knees till that time it ought to purchase an extraordinary number of very soft cushions.

THE World unkindly calls Mr. Jesup's argument against opening the museums on Sunday a labored essay, and retorts to his statement that if the museums are opened poor people will be compelled to work by ironically observing that if these poor people "are paid for their labor we presume that will be some consolation." The World is right. There are thousands upon thousands of people in this city who would be glad to work on Sunday if they could get paid for it.

Letters from Friends.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 31, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav looked over the last TRUTH SEEKER with pleasure. You hav made a great improvement. The new dress is beautiful, and the illustrations superb.

Yours ever, P. ECKLER.

FALL RIVER, MASS., Jan. 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER in its new dress and pictorial embellishments is admirable. Pictures convey many lessons that we learn by a glance, as it were. They often make a deeper impression than the printed word, and you hav made a great hit by introducing them into THE TRUTH SEEKER, for not only will they be of use to the grown reader, but children who cannot understand the thoughtful essays of older minds will readily grasp the meaning of "Liberty in Peril," "Apparition of the Virgin," and other representations, or these can be explained to the youthful observer, and thus great facts may be implanted upon the brain, never to be effaced. The greatest foe to American liberty is Roman Catholicism. The people, in their indifference, sleep above a powder magazine, liable to explode sooner or later, when Catholicism will show itself in all its hideous array. I trust they may awake before it will be everlastingly too late. I thank you for your friendliness to woman. All our Liberal papers, I believe, notably the Investigator, are favorable to woman's advancement. SUSAN H. WIXON.

AYER, MASS., Jan. 3, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me "Men, Women, and Gods," the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and "The Story Hour."

To the picture enterprise I donate $1. Your artist givs us very spirited pictures of the past, present, and prospectiv. It seems to be the problem of the present or not far distant future to decide which shall cover our national banner—the stripes, the symbol of the past, or the stars, the symbol of the future. In the past church and state gave stripes, heavy stripes, and not a single star of hope. Now our flag displays both. Which shall prevail? This is the question of the hour. How gladly would the church party hav the eagle—the ensign of liberty—fold its wings and like the owl perch upon the dead tree of freedom, prophetic of perpetual night; death to every aspiration that beats in the human breast. They would roll the world into the past again, and hedge about the path that leads to heaven. Don't forget the price of liberty. Yours ever for freedom, E. MYRICK.

NEW BRAUNFELS, TEX., Dec. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav the honor herewith to pay you $7. You may count $3 my further subscription for 1886, $1 my annual duty as member of the American Secular Union, and $3 from a new subscriber.

I like THE TRUTH SEEKER, because it has room for every honest opinion, and defends the truth as far as possible. Dr. York, now in Australia, givs in No. 47 a very clear and interesting declaration of his opinion about Spiritualism.

In regard to our government, I may ask, Is it not a shame that the government of the richest people on earth circulates a depreciated silver dollar? Is it not twice a shame that the same dare write on this swindle dollar, "In God we trust?" O ye proud Americans, how are ye nevertheless so despicable? Ye cheat yourselvs and others willingly, and permit your government to adore an official god of which your sworn Constitution knows nothing very explicit! Are your first officers, so doing, not counterfeiters and swindlers, or only fools and cranks? Away with them.

"Eid und Treue und Gewissen werden wie Papier zerrissen!" Yours truly, WM. HILLERT.

RICHBURG, N. Y., Dec. 29, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I see it is time for renewals, so I inclose money-order for myself and three new subscribers, which please send to the inclosed addresses. I hope you will receive support enough to warrant illustrating the paper. Please send me a copy of "Age of Reason and Examination of Prophecies," which, I think, stands without a peer as a missionary document. Wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER success, I remain

Yours, for universal mental liberty, R. P. BARTON.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Jan. 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: We are pleased ever so well with illustrations in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hope to hav plenty of them. They impress all who see them. People will look at a picture who will not take the trouble to read. The reading of the frontispiece of the last TRUTH SEEKER is emphatic. I hope we shall hav many such. I am telling all my correspondents to help about the pictures. ELMINA.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Dec. 21, E.M. 285.

"General Lew Wallace, author of 'Ben Hur,' then an unbeliever, was riding with Colonel Robert Ingersoll, the notorious Infidel. In course of the conversation, Ingersoll said to the general, 'If you want to hav no doubt as to the falseness of the Bible, take it and read it with care.' Acting upon this suggestion, he did so; the wonderful truths were all-convincing, and he was speedily converted to God and gave the world the book which has so stirred the students of literature of the day, 'Ben Hur.'"—The Living Church, Chicago, Dec. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Cannot the veriest simpleton read the Christian lie upon the face of this uninteresting tale? If Wallace was an unbeliever, why should his friend Ingersoll advise him to waste his time in poring over the filthy pages of the Bible in order to become one? Would he not hav known that his friend had read its contradictory and obscene passages before in order to hav become an unbeliever? And if Wallace had sense enough to write anything about "Ben Hur," Ben Bolt, or even Ben Butler, would he not hav become desperately enraged at this insult from Ingersoll? Alas for the champions of superstition! They must now resort to the foulest of falsehood in order to score a point.

"And even editors they hav been kenned,
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid at times to vend,
And nail't wi' scripture."

O shades of Paine, Washington, and Jefferson, look down with scorn and contempt upon these false friends of humanity, vampires of society, enemies of civilization, the editors of the Christian press!

Find inclosed twenty-five cents for "Bible Morals." If I had a dollar, I would hav six copies. I believe I could sell them here. NELSON HUNT.

MILWAUKEE, ORE., Dec. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed another greenback, which squares up arrearages to Jan. 4, 1886. By that time I probably may make a new discovery, and shall want to write again. My discovery this time, made within the last two years, is the true cause of that horrible disease, consumption. It is the poison from copper extracted by acids; so don't boil your cider in copper kettles, nor make your sauces therein. And another thing—the cure of small-pox. Take common unslaked lime, put a pailful of it into a half barrel; add to it two pails of water; stir it up, then let it settle till the water is clear. Let the patient use this lime water freely as a drink, also wash in it. By doing as this directs the patient will never pit nor be confined to his bed. The Castillion Indians knew this method of treatment, and used it, to my certain knowledge, fifty years ago. E. W. CRESSEY.

SOUTH LOWELL, ALA., Dec. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am a Spiritualist, and I take THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am glad you do the editorial work, for it suits me. I take your paper because I can read two sides of many questions—Materialism and Spiritualism, Prohibition and Non-Prohibition, Greenbackism and the banks in opposition, labor and its opposit, tariff and less tariff, etc., etc. And not the least is the light you giv on Romanism and its attempted control in this country.

But the principal reason why I take your paper is because you prove the great difference there is in the causes that improve man's condition between church and science, or belief and knowledge. While church and belief command and dictate, science and knowledge call and prove. The church makes faith the ultimate; science uses reason, both inductivly and deductivly, and knows as the ultimate.

We hav extremists in both classes, but in the class of science they are the surface students, who conclude before solving the problem. We should use the known in going near truth. We hav not made all the discoveries that can be known in any branch of science, and we should be tolerant of others' ideas and charitable to the surface student. The better we understand material science, the easier it will be to learn dynamic science. All truths must be connected. It should be our aim to keep the chain whole; then we can retrace our steps and not get lost.

I like J. D. Shaw's address in particular. Ingersoll is always good. Many others giv me much thought.

If laborers could be employed at good wages, and the evil habits among them banished, knowledge would increase. And this is what THE TRUTH SEEKER is trying to do. I hope to be of use to you in this work. DR. J. K. DEARTH.

URBANA, KAN., Dec. 28, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose that a great many of our Liberal friends think that the sunflower state of Kansas is asleep, or that the howl and clamor of Methodist revivals hav so enveloped her that our voices cannot be heard. Now, we are neither asleep nor Methodistically inclined. Although you hav seldom heard from us, we hav been at work with the little strength that we hav. A little over a year ago nine persons of this vicinity banded themselvs together for the purpose of carrying on the work of Liberal reform. That little band, the first Liberal League of Neosho county, now numbers twenty members. That number we hope to double before the year 286 has run its course. In this short time the League has done good work. It has checked the previously rapid spread of superstition which threatened to ingulf the minds of young and old. Its position now is such that it commands respect, and the name "Infidel" has lost its horrors. The League very much desires to hear from all Liberal organizations of Kansas as a matter of mutual development and co-operation for more effectiv work. You will hear more of us. Yours, for humanity, MAURICE D. LEAHY,
Sec. First Lib. League of Neosho Co.

UNION CITY, MICH., Dec. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: My subscription having nearly expired, and having come to the conclusion that I cannot yet afford to drop your paper, the best Liberal journal with which I am acquainted, and the best, perhaps, in the world, please find inclosed $1.50 to pay for it six months longer. For five years I hav been a constant and interested reader of your valuable paper, and can say that I heartily indorse the principles upon which it is conducted, also the doctrins and measures it advocates. Some five years ago I was led, through the instrumentality of lectures and your paper, up out of the mysticisms and absurdities of orthodoxy into the paths of light, truth, and reason, in which paths your noble paper has constantly encouraged, strengthened, and confirmed me, so that now I hav not the least desire or intention to return, like the sow, to wallow in the mire.

Within the last five or six years we hav been favored with several good lectures. Messrs. Underwood, Jamieson, Watts, Chainey, and Remsburg all hav held forth in this city, with good results.

And now may your grand paper cease not its effectiv blows until every vestige of the effects of priestcraft has been swept from the universe and all humanity possessed of mental freedom and Rationalism. M. BURLINGAME.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me a little space in your columns. I do not trouble you very often. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 28th your correspondent, in answering my question, takes a stand decidedly against woman suffrage, which places him in a very peculiar position. When he opened his speech at the Convention by saying, "The just right to govern comes from the consent of the governed," and afterward opposed a resolution favoring woman suffrage, I had hoped he only opposed it as a plank in the American Secular Union, but in his letter he informs us that he is opposed to it in toto. Now, a man sailing under that motto in his speech, who turns around and contradicts himself by expecting one-half of the population to be governed without their consent, ought to hav the mantle of charity to cover him for a few minutes at least. He overlooks his own inconsistent position by asking me or anyone else to giv a logical reason why that resolution should hav passed. Although that is not really the question at issue, I will giv my reason; and it is this: The American Secular Union believes in impartial justice to all, and in refusing justice to their wives and mothers and daughters of the land, would place itself in the same position as your correspondent, inconsistent with its aims and work. And if such intellects as Messrs. Ingersoll, Watts, Putnam, Palmer, Mrs. Krekel and others found it proper to hav this resolution adopted, I, for one, will not find fault with it, for we know in whom we hav put our trust.

We find ourselvs classed with Freelovers and Anarchists. But it is evident in your correspondent's case that prejudice commits a multitude of sins toward the woman suffragists. As far as I know them, they believe in the sacredness of home, and the love of one man and of one woman. We are also informed that your correspondent carries the pocket-book, although he givs the wife the perfect right to be mistress of the house. I hav always had the humble opinion that the one who carried the cash was in full possession. His wife, he says, has no desire toward the ballot-box—which shows good sense, having your correspondent for husband; she would perhaps be a duplicate in case she did vote. I hav often heard that opposing husbands hav wives that do not care for the ballot, but on interviewing the wives, we find a different conclusion if the husband is not present. He also says: "Your woman suffragists are always talking about the right to cast a ballot. Why not talk about carrying the musket, serving in the militia, or be in the police force?" In this question the gentleman givs us a view of his true inwardness, so to speak, namely, that he believes in physical force instead of intellectual, in club rule instead of the torch of reason on Mr. Wettstein's badge. We generally find the ignorant believe in a government based on the club, but the Liberal-minded, the intellectually strong, and the strong-minded women want to see reason enthroned.

And when the club is ushered out, and reason ushered in, the world will be fit to liv in. As Mr. Wakeman says in his "Scientific Gospel:" "As the era of wars, revolution, and conquest will hav passed away under the Republic of Man, every people will become industrial instead of military." That is where all Liberals should work for. Has he served in our late war, carried a musket, and been on the police force? Or did he not smell any more gunpowder than I did? And does he vote all the same? Has he ever seen prison-birds that left their striped suits behind them a few days before election march to the ballot-box and cast a vote for the rulers of his wife and mother? Has he ever imagined himself in our position on election-day, when these restored citizens, some of their hands stained with the blood of their victims, go to the ballot-box and vote for law-makers to govern women's property as well as men's, denying the law-abiding women of the nation a voice or an opportunity to call a halt? Is there a woman who does not feel the insult that all these law-breakers are exalted above them and say by their ballot who shall rule over them? In the state of New York over 130 of these men cast ballots at the last election. Can anyone see and hear all these things without feeling that a great injustice is done to the women of the land? Let us look at it with an unprejudiced mind, if possible, and we shall see no evil results in granting justice, but a great evil in refusing it, to law-abiding citizens.

We are always talking of the ballot, he says. That is true, because that unlocks the door to the inner chamber where all these unjust laws are made, and is the key to the science of government, in which all sensible beings should be interested, in order to remove the laws that exalt the murderer and thief above the true and loving wife and mother. Yes, I believe and talk about the ballot, and for good reasons. When we walk about in the world with our eyes open we cannot help seeing all these things. But then he says strong-minded girls generally die old maids. Has he ever met a strong-minded girl? I hope not—that they hav all been weak-minded.

What would become of the Liberal work if strong-minded girls should all marry? Suppose our Miss Susan Wixon had been swallowed (Jonah-like) by some individual, and become a duplicate, instead of this beautiful writer and intellectual woman, who takes such interest in other people's children, to write beautiful books for them, and conducts the Children's Corner in such an able manner. What a loss it would hav been to the Liberal cause! And that other unmarried angel (as Beecher calls them), Miss Ella Gibson, of Barre, who will ever regret that she spent her whole life in working for her fellow-beings, to lift up to a higher plane of usefulness the ignorant and wronged in this world of ours, who is is still engaged in that work of emancipating the intellect and making everyone do their own thinking, and work for better conditions and the universal brotherhood of man? Is, in your correspondent's mind, marriage the only calling of girls? Oh, what a mistake! when we look on those sisters who work out the salvation of so many who are not so fortunate as to hav the brains to do it with. How many are there living in double wretchedness who would choose single blessedness, if possible! Has the gentleman never heard of people being unequally yoked together? Or does he believe that only marriage is bliss? I think a strong-minded girl often meets a weak-minded man, and for that reason prefers to be single. If people talk carelessly and act without forethought upon this important and sacred question, it is an easy thing to marry in haste. But if they look upon it as for a lifetime, and the happiness of two beings included, and the well-being of their offspring considered, it takes a well-balanced mind to ponder over it, before rushing into wedlock. All will rise up and call them blessed, these workers in the field, Miss Gibson and Miss Wixon. Does any person call that an argument —"that strong-minded girls die old maids?"

I will close by wishing the American Secular Union a long life, also all unmarried angels, and THE TRUTH SEEKER and your correspondent especially.

Respectfully, MRS. HENRICA ILIOHAN.

PIKE, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1885.

DIED.—Thursday, Nov. 26th, at his residence in Eagle, Wyoming county, N. Y., Richard Slusser, aged 82 years and 26 days.

Another veteran from the ranks of truth—

Yet he battled for the right,
While he lived, with all his might,
And his mind went ever seeking after truth.
Many years before his death
He had breathed a freeman's breath,
After slaying all the doctrins of his youth.

The deceased had for many years been a subscriber to this paper. He was a deep thinker, and at the advanced age of eighty-two his mentality seemed unimpaired. He was a generous friend to the unfortunate, and in the community where he was known his word was considered as good as a bond. He raised a family of six children, three girls and three boys, all of whom are Liberals, and five of whom survive him.

A DAUGHTER.

WEIR CITY, KAN., Dec. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I first saw Mr. Remsburg at Bismarck Grove Convention in Kansas, in September, 1880. He was a quiet, unassuming man, and was selling his first book, on Thomas Paine. I was favorably impressed with his spirit and manhood. Hearing that he was to be at Weir City, nine miles from me, I induced four of my friends and neighbors to take a team and go over with me to hear Mr. Remsburg. For myself, I went, not so much to learn his thoughts on "Bible Morals"—that was the subject—as to compare his matter and manner with his organism. He has a good physical as well as mental organism; an organism solid, firm, persistent, of good, enduring, wearing material; good heart and lungs; good digestion, and which seems to hav been comparativly well used. His perception is immense; his store-house of facts and history capacious and full. His chain of logic and his conclusions and results are based upon facts, which he givs in great abundance and order, and are therefore irrefutable. In a quiet, unassuming manner he introduces his hearers at once to his subject, and givs them facts, history, and rational deductions therefrom. His voice and tones are pleasant, his enunciation and expression clear and distinct, his description easy and plain, his language precise and comprehensiv, and there is no redundancy of words, no flourish of manner or gesture for effect, and yet the effect is produced. When by his memory he caused the panorama of past history to pass before the mental vision of his hearers, and they saw in all their horrid reality the vices, the crimes, the tortures, the murders, and damnable deeds of both Protestant and Catholic persecution; when he with impressiv words held up to his hearers the millions of men and women writhing in the agonies of torture and death at the hands of their relentless Christian enemies, it was enough to arouse the humanity and moral indignation of everyone who had a spark of manhood and sympathy. Ah! thought I, how little do the great mass of both Protestant and Catholic dupes and devotees know of the past inhuman and infernal deeds of religious fanaticism, bigotry, and superstition, as the result of godism, priestcraft, and kingcraft!

I cannot too highly recommend Mr. Remsburg to the patronage and employment of the Liberal and humane public.

J. H. COOK.

JANESVILLE, WIS., Dec. 30, 285.

MR. EDITOR: In a late TRUTH SEEKER is a letter from Ella Gibson, in which she claims to hav been convinced through the trick performances of Mr. John Truesdell that the greater share, if not all, of spiritual manifestations are tricks of fraudulent mediums. Now, then, I hav no wish to discuss this question further than to ask these fraud-hunters to explain the phenomena frequently occurring in private families through the mediumship of children too young to understand the arts of conjurors or counterfeiters. In many intelligent families these child-mediums are found, of whom the public knows nothing, through whose organisms are given convincing tests of spirit identity.

For years I knew intimately a young girl who was the embodiment of simple, childlike honesty, and who was a medium from babyhood up to the time of her death, which occurred at the age of twenty-three. Scores of intelligent men and women, among them reverends or ex-reverends, as well as students and skeptics, were convinced of a future life by spirit tests given through this girl medium. I lived neighbor to her for several years, and was a frequent witness of the phenomena given through her mediumship. She was so perfect an instrument that, without a moment's preparation, in the midst of work or play, she would be controled by some power outside and beyond her own volition and intelligence. Fraud was out of the question in her case. What power, then, was it that acted upon or through this young girl? Will Truesdell & Co. please answer?

Foolish question to ask of those who are not truth seekers but fraud-hunters, and the sad part of it for themselvs is that so long as they act from that motiv they will find what they seek, upon the general principle that "like attracts like." The brightest and best things of this life are often counterfeited, whether they be material scrip and coin or the manifestations of spirit forces, which are the vitalizing forces of all that is genuin in human life and expression.

Yours for truth, MRS. ELVIRA WHEELOCK.

MT. VERNON, IND., Dec. 24, E.M., 285.

MR. EDITOR: Arthur C. Everett, late of the Labor Advocate, has just started a new form of his old paper in this city. It is now the Rights of Man. Nearly all of the Freethinkers of this county are weak. They hav never been organized, hav had no disciplin, and hav seen no service. Those most willing to make sacrifices for the cause are our poverty-stricken wage-workers. Mr. Everett is one of the most heroic and unflinching workers in our ranks. His labors hav been met with opposition, persecution, and threats. To-day I suggested to him to make his paper a little milder; to educate his home readers by easy stages up to his standard. He intimated that if they could not swallow full-fledged Infidelity, he would never serve them with a hybrid compromise. Said he: "If I hav to run a policy paper I will stop right where I am." His answer had the right ring. I respected him more than I did the instant before he uttered it. Thousands of Liberals may read these lines. I hope all of you who can will favor him with a yearly subscription. Do this much for the Rights of Man, for a cripple, and for humanity. His address is lock-drawer N, Mt. Vernon, Indiana.

CHAS. O. ROWE.

---

411 PINE ST., EAU CLAIRE, WIS., Dec. 14, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I much envy the faculty for saying much in a few words possessed by my courteous opponent, L. Joy, but fear I cannot emulate it, because more words are needed to giv reasons than to make assertions. Mr. Joy says that government should be credited with the good parts of civilization because, with few exceptions, it is in harmony with them. If this were true it would leave the question open, which was effect, and which cause? But I deny that it is true. One of the good parts of civilization is productiv industry. In Europe, at this moment, full three million men in the best part of their lives are kept by the government from productiv industry that they may collect taxes and kill each other. Surely, this is a pretty large exception. But to the soldiers you must add all whose labor is consumed by the army, all the lawyers, judges, policemen, excisemen, landlords, etc., in order to see how far the government is from being in harmony with this good part of civilization; which should be credited, not to it, but to the needs and intelligence of individuals. Peace is a good feature of civilization, but a very limited knowledge of history is enough to teach us that almost all wars (I should say all of them) spring from the ambition of kings and politicians, and not from any bad feeling between the populations who had to fight. Peace, therefore, so far as it prevails, is not to be credited to government, but to production and trade, on which, as above stated, the military or governing class hav always been a heavy drag. Freethought is a good feature of civilization, but all governments, our own included, support some system or systems of superstition; and all systems of superstition not persecuted by some other which happens to be more in favor, hav been most loyal champions of government. The freedom and equality of the female sex is a good feature of civilization. But though Mr. Joy doesn't see it, it seems absurd to repeat that the only way woman's freedom was ever promoted is by making her more free, and that the only way to make it complete is to make her free entirely. This is so bald a truism to me that if Mr. Joy thinks it a paradox, I should suggest that he devote a few paragraphs to explaining his theory of logic before he applies it any further. Mr. Joy says that those evils which exist in spite of law are not in harmony with government as a rule. Again I differ with him. Petty theft is one of those evils which law proposes to correct. But I suspect if law would stop encouraging big steals, small ones would stop themselvs. Adultery and prostitution are contrary to law, but the abolition of legal marriage would stop them both, and nothing else will. Murder is contrary to law, but to stop it effectually abolish law, and giv us the freedom of Wyoming or Arizona, where murder does not mean some expense and inconvenience, but the next tree. Sneaking out of debt is an evil the law proposes to prevent, but the only debts people always pay promptly are those which the law will not enable them to collect by suit. Mr. Joy says that the origin of law is in social usage, but he neglects to observe that social, like legal, tyranny is the work of a few officious, pragmatical individuals. He seems to feel keenly the despotism of Mrs. Grundy. Did it ever occur to him to ascertain who the local Mrs. Grundy is? As our statutes can be traced to scurvy politicians whose only talent was that of bamboozling people, so the edicts of that Vehme which ostracizes individuals in any town or village emanate from other individuals for whom no one has any personal respect, and whose power consists solely in a knack of insinuation. We need a wholesome spirit of rebellion against these self-constituted tyrants, for, like the ghosts one sees on a dark road at night, they are formidable only to fear and superstition, and will turn into harmless hitching-posts if one goes boldly up to them. I am sorry Mr. Joy should praise me for saying nothing about "legal robbers" or dynamite. Our bosses are legal robbers, and dynamite (judiciously used) is a very good "prescription" for the lawyers' itch.

C. L. JAMES.

New Publications.

The annual issuc of the "Amerikanischer Turner-Kalender" is out for 1886, printed in German as she is wrote. The Freidenker Publishing Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., are responsible for it.

Progress is a monthly Freethought magazine, published at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, Eng.; G. W. Foote, editor. Each number contains able articles on religious and scientific subjects. The subscription price is $1.50.

The Kansas Blade, the official paper of Cloud county, has issued an almanac for 1886 containing many illustrations of a miscellaneous nature, and advertisments telling the wayfarer where to go to get anything he wants that he doesn't see. Also a calendar and remarks on different subjects. It is given away, we believe, to subscribers for the Blade.

Charles A. Watts's "Agnostic Annual" for 1886 sustains the reputation for ability established by its predecessors. Particulars as to its contents and price may be obtained from the advertisment. We like to encourage the publication of Freethought annuals, and believe that the best encouragement is a good example which givs others a goal of excellence to strive for. That is one reason, among others, why the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL is published. Price 25 cents.

Farmer Isaac W. Griscom, of Woodbury, N. J., has embodied his "View of a Protectiv Tariff" in a substantial pamphlet of fifty pages which he sells for thirty-five cents. Although a farmer, he has thought about things, and knows how to express himself in plain English, but does not lay claim to ornateness of style. He is a free trader, and if there were not so many strong arguments on the other side his book would be a clincher. Send to Farmer Griscom for it.

Mr. Owen E. Longsdorf is one of those persons who in some way or another get into what Mr. Mantilini would term a "demd state." He calls it the Dim Region of Dreams, and says if there is any place in all the wide universe more delightful he knows it not. Mr. Longsdorf has evidently never attended a meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, but he should liv in hope. We are led to make these observations by the appearance of a book from this gentleman's pen entitled "Ziita Kii." He wrote it while in one of his states. Those having a curiosity to read "Ziita Kii" should send one dollar to the author, 12 Louisa st., Williamsport, Pa. The book looks well.

On the fly-leaf of a book entitled "The Spirit of the New Testament," dedicated "to my other soul, from whose immortal love the persecutions of earth hav failed to separate me," we find this inscription printed: "The Eternal Soul, 'In the beginning, God.'—The Emanation, 'The Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Deep.'—The Materialization, 'Man from the Dust of the Earth.'—The Unfoldment, 'The Kingdom of God is within you.'—The Perfect Conception, 'Behold, a Virgin shall conceive.'—The Revelation, 'The seed of the woman shall bruise the Serpent's Head.'—The Regeneration, 'The Two shall be One.'—The Sublimation, 'The last Enemy that shall be destroyed is Death.'" Boston Mass., Cupples, Upham & Co. Price $1.25.

AN elegant pamphlet is one entitled, "In Memoriam: William Wagner," being Judge R. B. Westbrook's memorial address at the opening of the spring course of lectures of the Wagner Free Institute of Science in Philadelphia, 1885. Professor Wagner was a liberal-minded German, a friend of Girard, and a man who by his religious views received the name of "Infidel." If there is a creator he could lay his hand to no better work than creating more Infidels like Professor Wagner. The Wagner Free Institute of Science was inaugurated May, 21, 1855, and dedicated to the advancement of Natural Science. The entire benefaction is estimated at half a million dollars. The founder provided that there should be no religious tests among those who were to share his bounty, and cautioned his trustees against the introduction of "religious brawlers" in its direction. He was a Deist. Judge Westbrook's Memorial Address does credit to himself and honor to his subject.

WE are always pleased to receive books for review from Messrs. Fowler & Wells, because they are usually accompanied by printed notices of themselvs more comprehensiv and impartial than we could write without first reading the book. The notice does not involve extra expense. The latest volume from that firm is entitled "A Lucky Waif: A Story for Mothers, of Home and School Life." Ellen E. Kenyon is the author. The review which accompanies it says: "This work, with its graphic pictures of home and school life, is full of suggestion for mothers and other home educators who feel the grave responsibility of their relation to the little people intrusted to their keeping. Written in the form of an attractiv story, it follows its principal actors from childhood to maturity; and as their budding characters develop under the pen of the author, we are led to observe the effects of good and bad culture upon minds of considerable natural diversity." Printed in the best style. Price $1.

"American Money" is the title of the latest effort of Mr. John George Hertwig, whose address is post-office box 706, Washington, D. C. It is a well-gotten-up pamphlet of 23 pages. Price, 15 cents. We cannot do better than to copy a portion of the notice of the book kindly furnished us by the author. He says: "The author is of the opinion that the United States notes should be redeemed by correct silver dollars and retired, but that for deposits, made with the government by the people of such correct silver dollars, silver certificates, and for deposits of gold coin, made with the government by the people, gold certificates should be issued by the government to the people, as a circulating medium in the denominations of the present United States notes, according to the option of the depositors of the gold and silver coin. He thinks that, for the purposes of saving and accumulation, the American people should hav in their possession as much gold coin and as many correct silver dollars as possible, and that, for the purposes of trade and commerce, they should hav an amply sufficient paper currency, consisting of gold and silver certificates, redeemable on demand in the respectiv coin, deposited for the same with the government."

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Children.

How shall I find the words to tell
The thoughts that in my mind are posing,
That poesy with its magic spell
Half hides, and yet is half disclosing?
They seem to come in troops as gay
As do the little lads and lasses,
When at the merriest hours of play
Joy-freighted every moment passes,
Whose sunny smiles are followed after
With frequent ring of merry laughter.

As poesy paints the charming scene
Of childlike innocence and beauty,
We pray that nought may intervene
To mar the claims of love and duty;
That children all may learn to know
Their true relations to each other—
That none there is too poor or low
But is some sister or a brother;
That foulest rags may be but hiding
The white souls underneath abiding.

Who seeks to warp the youthful mind
With superstitious, baleful teaching,
Obstructs the paths the soul should find
In its aspiring, upward reaching.
Who say our loved ones are depraved,
That God in his divine endeavor
Decreed who should be lost or saved,
To dwell in hell or heaven forever,
Prove they are dupes to a delusion,
Outwrought from errors in profusion.

Earth's little ones are pure and fair,
Needing our constant, careful training,
And yet our better angels are,
And ever thus through life remaining.
Their innocence and beauty keep
Our hearts aglow with pure emotion,
Teaching who sow true love shall reap
The harvest wealth of true devotion;
'Tis thus the children are our teachers,
And better far than credal preachers.

They are the source of untold joys
In nature's lavish, generous measure,
Proving all noble girls and boys
A mine of never-failing treasure;
These fill our cups of human bliss
And keep our wayward feet from straying,
Tempting with many a honeyed kiss,
That on their young, sweet lips are playing,
And through the clouds of life's repining
We find this cheery, silver lining.

So thus, dear children, you can see
The place you hold in love's dominion,
With what you are, and what may be
In every true soul's just opinion;
And as the passing years unfold
To each the duties that are waiting,
Keep warm the heart, bar out the cold
That falsehood brings through its misstating;
Then will your lives grow braver, better,
In truth, in spirit, and in letter.

Lockport, Ill., Nov. 17, 285. GEORGE LYNN.

A Sea-side Hermit.

His name was crab—H. Crab—and he lived in a snug little cabin at the foot of a big rock on the border of a bay; and the name of the rock was Jumbo. Mr. Crab was the funniest old hermit that ever you saw. He used to sit in front of his house, like any old man basking in the sunlight on his own doorstep, and there he would sit for hours watching for sea-spiders and little baby fishes that every day the rising and receding tide brought to his door for food.

"It is better to be born lucky than rich," he would probably think, if he thought at all, as he swallowed his dinner, and then with a whisk of the broom which was attached to to his body he would sweep the sand from his one-roomed house, and crawl inside for an afternoon nap.

He was such a curious-looking fellow, was H. Crab. When he was inside of his house you would never know he was there at all, and he would dodge inside as often as his quick eye detected anyone approaching. And when he went abroad his house went also.

It was so funny to see him traveling, and he could move quite rapidly on his six stout legs, and rattled along on the pebbly beach like a horse-car on Broadway. When, one day, Mr. Crab saw us, half a dozen girls and two boys, coming along innocently enough, what did he do but jump back into his mansion as quick as a wink, and bar the entrance with his biggest big claw? But Isabel Johnson had clapped her eyes upon him, and she exclaimed:

"Oh! Oh! Oh! Do look, look, look!" and snatching Mr. Crab, we all gathered around her to examin the newly-found specimen.

"What do you suppose made the thing creep into such an old shell as that?" said Johnny Skinner.

"Why, 'tis a hermit crab; don't you know anything, John Skinner?" and little Sally Downs assumed an air of importance because she knew something that some of the others did not.

"Come out here; we want to see you," said Tom Beers, poking at the crab with a stick.

"He never will come out that way, I can tell you. Sixty horses could not draw him out unless he had a mind to come of his own accord," declared Sally.

"Put him in a dish of water and he'll run out quickly enough," said Nina Marsden. "I've seen hermits like that before."

So they picked up an oyster-shell and put the queer little creature in it, and then dipped up some water, and Mr. Hermit Crab immediately began to swim about, he and his dwelling-house, but when one touched him, in he went instantly, barring the doorway with his claw.

"Now, you see," said Sally, "his long tail is very soft and delicate, and, without some protection, the young eels and minnows darting around here would snap off that dear little tail in no time. I suppose his mamma told him to get one of these cunning winkle-shells and liv in it, and then he would not get hurt, you know. There is something fixed on purpose on the end of his tail, by which he fastens himself to his shelly house, and when he grows too big for the shell he gets out of it and into another bigger one. It is because he livs in a shell house by himself that he is called a hermit."

The children carried their hermit home and placed him in the oyster-shell, well supplied with water, on the red seat on the piazza, and went off to pick berries. When they returned, what do you think?—there was Polly, the parrot, who had opened the door of her cage and walked out to view the new specimen, quietly engaged in chewing it up!

"Now, isn't that too bad?" they all exclaimed. "Polly, you're an old fraud!"

Polly laughed immoderately. "Ha, ha, ha! Mince pie good!—goody, goody, goody!" said she. "Polly wants pie—more pie! more pie!" and thus she went on laughing and chattering.

"I should call it crab pie," remarked Isabel, "and you've eaten it, Polly, house and all."

"She does not care anything about hermits, or, in fact, about any of the wonders of the sea or land, while to us it is all so entertaining and interesting. But never mind! perhaps we shall find another hermit by the sea some time." And Sally tried to appear patient and unconcerned, as they all walked off together down the plank walk that led to the village.

S. H. W.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—CHARADE.

Add a betrothal to a cup of tea;
'Twill giv you something quite too sweet for me.
I. A. POOL.

2.—ENIGMA.

In win, not in loose;
In plan, not in roose,
In go, not in come;
In wine, not in rum;
In rose, not in pink;
In skate, not in rink;
In old, not in new;
In lamb, not in ewe;
And all combined, plus final l,
A friend of mankind's name will spell.
A. GILE. W.

3.—PRIZE RHOMBOID.

Dedicated to Wm. J. Burns.

Read across.—1. A blanket.
2. A marine chætopod worm.
3. An article of dress.
4. A noted Roman theologian.
5. An animal.
6. A scraper.

Read down.—A letter, a prefix, a color, a name of certain plants, Spanish weights, each, a tract of land, to trend flax for use, having a cord-like appearance, a prefix, a letter.

"Puzzledom in a Nutshell" for first correct solution. H. E. JUERGENS.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

4.—JOHN BROWN'S TEN LITTLE INJUNS.—A NUMERICAL POSY.

Whoop! John Brown he had a little Injun!
One, two, three, four, five little Injuns,
Six, seven, eight, nine, ten little Injuns—
Ten little Injun boys!
The one, two, three, he said was the last;
With his four, five, six, he heard a blast;
By the five, six, seven, he held them fast;
Seven, eight, nine, little men, at last—
Ten little Injun boys!

Ten, one, two—just half a score;
Ten, eight, nine—but ten, no more;
Ten, four, two—ten as before;
Thus by tens we count them o'er—
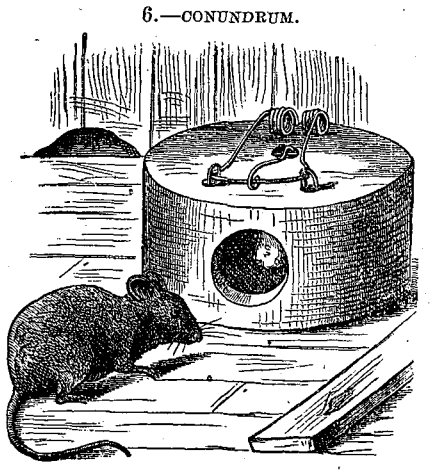
Ten little Injun boys!



Six, four, three, seven, eight, nine—these
Are the aborigines;
Now by each deed of kindness shown,
By every sign to friendship known,
Joining hands and circling round,
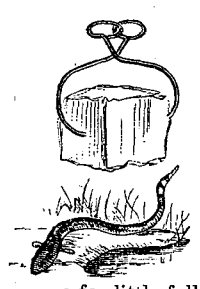
Ten dear men indeed are found.
Ten little Injun boys!

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

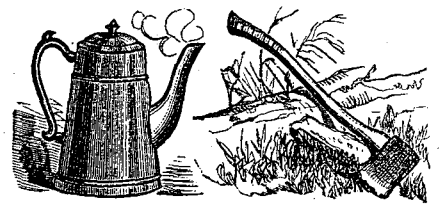
5.—A FLOCK OF BIRDS.

In the following sentences are concealed the names of thirteen birds: 1. Has Winifred started to town? 2. The widow rents the farm upon which she livs. 3. We aver this to be a fact. 4. What will you read, dear? O, "Bingen on the Rhine." 5. If you can use a scalpel I can. 6. Let him come before us and pipe right merrily. 7. He took the rope with him. 8. Caspar rowed him across the bay. 9. Years ago I saw her on the stage. 10. Sleep, love! rest peacefully. 11. News from the Merrimac, awful news. 12. He is still smarting under the lash. G. W. WILLIAMS.



6.—CONUNDRUM.

Why is this mouse like a storm that is at its hight?



7.—WORD SQUARE.

Easy one for little folks.

8.—CONUNDRUM.

Here's a well-known beverage,
And here's a well-known tool;
Each is prepared for human use
By following the same rule.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 2, 1886.

1.—70 hours. 2.—14,211. 4.—Children's Corner—Children Scorner. 5.—Dare to be true—nothing can need a lie; a fault which needs it most grows two thereby.

[PARKHURST, New York city. The "catch" you refer to represents Maiden Vane, and it is said nothing is made in vain. See?—SUE BRINEGAR. You will hav to try again as well as Ruth.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

CALISTOGA, CAL., Dec. 25, 285.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As you published my other letter, I'm encouraged to try again. I liv at the head of Napa Valley, at the foot of old Mt. St. Helena, which is 4,400 feet high. There is good evidence of its having been a volcano.

Our place is chiefly adapted to the growing of fruit. We hav almost every variety, from the apple to the fig.

We hav had little frost so far this winter. There are green tomatoes on the vines in the garden, the Madeira vine is still green, and the roses are still in bloom. You see by this that our winters are very mild. But, so far, this winter has been the wettest one we hav had since we hav been in California. My little brother Lewis has a rain-gage, and up to date we hav had 2 1-4 inches of rain.

The scenery here is very picturesque. I wish you could see the great blue mountains east of us and the green hills at the foot of them. The Petrified Forest is seven miles from here; the Great Geysers, twenty-six miles; and the Hot Sulphur Springs, two and one-half miles. I've been to the Forest and Springs, but never was to the Geysers.

I wish very much to hear Colonel Ingersoll lecture. He lectured at Napa City a year ago last November, but I could not go then. I'm sorry he does not come every year.

Miss Wixon, I want to offer a suggestion for your consideration relating to the Puzzle department. A prize is sometimes offered for the first solution of a puzzle that reaches you. Those near headquarters get their papers earlier than those at a distance, and being as apt at solutiou, perhaps, and so much nearer you, their answers can reach you first, even though they may hav been obtained later.

I think those at a distance hav less opportunity to compete for prizes on that account. I am not expert at solving problems, still, I hav noticed some prizes that I would hav been pleased to compete for, but for the fact that we get our paper so late, and then the answer would be much later reaching you.

Please do not consider this in the light of a complaint, but as a friendly suggestion.

I will close by wishing you a Happy New Year. Yours truly,

A. LILE WEYBRIGHT.

P.S.—I will send you two puzzles, one from my brother and one from myself.

A. W.

[Thanks for your interesting letter. We are always glad of suggestions, and should more prizes be offered in the Corner, we will see that ample time is allotted, that all may hav a chance of trying. The ferns you sent are suggestiv of green fields and a green climate. We thank you for them and for puzzles.—ED. C. C.]

MILFORD, MASS., Dec. 30, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER two years, and this is the first time I hav written to you. I am ten years of age, but many people say I am very small for ten years. I tell them if they had to make my dresses a half inch or an inch longer every month they would not think so.

I had ten Christmas presents, and gave only three. I gave mamma a nice pocketbook and a pincushion. Papa had a linen handkerchief.

I go to the Park Grammar School, in No. 3, which is next to the lowest room.

I think the answer to the conundrum is "hog's head." Your constant reader,

GRACIE FAIRBANKS.

P.S.—If you don't like the writing please tell me so if it is printed. G. A. F.

[Why, Gracie dear, the writing is very good for a girl of ten, and we would like to see it often.—ED. C. C.]

CALISTOGA, CAL., Dec. 25, 285.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am not a little girl, nor a big girl; in fact, I'm no girl at all—I'm a boy, and a big boy at that. Maybe I've no business in the Children's Corner, but having been a child, and being fond of children, and pleased when they are enjoying themselvs, I came in this evening to say "howdy" to all the TRUTH SEEKER children and yourself. I am glad they hav such a genial editor for their Corner, and also glad there are more children coming into it. I think if they become well acquainted with its contents they will be better prepared for a pleasant and useful life.

Good food for the mind is much like good food for the stomach, that is, it makes it strong, healthful, and useful.

Having said so much, I will bow myself out, with the hope that, if I'm not too big, you will let come in to see again.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I am, etc., UNCLE JOHN.

N.B.—Should these items be of use to you use them and welcome; otherwise allow them to ornament the waste basket. I do not want to intrude. J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

[No intrusion. We are all children together, big and little, and all are welcome in the Corner. Thanks for your interest and kind words. Come again.—ED. C. C.]

THE CANARY. A New and Remarkable Work on the Care of the Pet Canary. By mail, 50 cents. Contents table mailed free. Lady Agents Wanted. Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th Street, New York.
3t4

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $2.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

WOMAN,
In the Past, Present, and Future.

BY A. BEBEL.

Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.

"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 27 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.

"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.

LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Friendship Liberal League No. 257, of Philadelphia, will celebrate the 149th anniversary of the birth of the Author-hero,

THOMAS PAINE,

January 31st, 1886, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets, at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M., to consist of addresses, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. Entertainments free.

Supper at 5:30 P.M. Tickets for supper, 25 cents.

Liberals throughout the state invited.
3t2

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M D, LL.D.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
2tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

PRICE, $1.25.

THE STORY HOUR.

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

BY SUSAN H. WIXON.

Author of APPLES OF GOLD, ALL IN A LIFETIME, Etc.

WITH NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Between the dark and the daylight, when the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations that is known as the children's hour."

LONGFELLOW.

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED BY THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
22 CLINTON PLACE.

THE SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist" Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethough would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter. colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the BibleExposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE FOR $1200

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney. Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A MISSIONARY DOCUMENT IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By WILLIAM McDONNELL, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages, $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

Poetry.

Strong-Minded Girls.

They are brave and they're true, they're good as they're wise,
Their friendship is ever a joy and a prize;
For when the storms come, and adversity's near,
They stand bravely by without shadow of fear;
And all the way through life's noisiest whirls,
They're constant and kind—these strong-minded girls.

They "buy their own coal" and get their own living,
No one to them need be constantly giving;
Since they know how to work, to think, and to plan,
Equally as well as the "muscular man"
Who walks with a cane, and a gay mustach twirls;
These smart, energetic, strong-minded girls.

They teach by example, by precepts of grace,
How grandly to occupy each his own place;
While for weak-brained women and men of no sense,
They oft are a shield—a tower of defense.
Oh, their worth is far more than diamonds and pearls.
Our brave-hearted ones—our strong-minded girls!

Without them the world would a sorry place be.
Its slaves would hav never a thought to be free;
On the seas of life they would lazily float,
With no wish to act, to speak, or to "vote."
In this changing world, with its swift-rushing swirls,
They're the treasures of life—our strong-minded girls.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

The Lay of the Revivalist.

I'm the great revival preacher, every one has heard of me,
I'm the world-renowned exhorter from the wilds of Tennessee;
And whenever I am mentioned, giv my name the proper twist,
This is Reverend Giascutis, styled the Boy Revivalist.
True, I am a boy no longer, for my hair is turning gray,
But there's money in the notion, so don't giv the snap away.
I hav always been a Christian, and when I was but a lad,
Though I lied and stole and cheated, and did other things as bad,
I believed in God and Satan, serving both of them on shares,
Going regular to meeting, where I often rose for prayers;
And there's nothing so disgusting as an Infidel to me,
For, the fear of hell denied us, where would all the sinners be?
I'd a wife when I was younger, but I left her in the lurch,
For she was an unbeliever, and would never go to church.
"Be not yoked with unbelievers," is amongst the scripture's charms,
So I turned her from my doorway with a baby in her arms.
Now, they say, she sells her virtue—sins to buy my youngster bread;
And but for the love she bears him she were numbered with the dead.
Maybe it had better be so, but I pray she may be spared
To accept the blessed gospel and not perish unprepared.
Yes, it goes against the doctrin that we ministers profess,
Though 'twould prove to be quite common if the truth were known, I guess;
But I've dropped the marriage racket, finding this is better sense:
Take a wife where'er you tarry and you'll thus avoid offense.
Once, before I went to preaching, I had taught a Sunday-school,
Scattering saving grace around according to the gospel rule;
Soon my piety was noted, which no other's could surpass,
And they made me superintendent of the women's Bible class.
Everybody in the parish had in me such confidence,
That in taking up collection I would gather in the pence;
And the same I did sequestrate, and I almost blush to tell,
When I left that place the people missed the deacon's wife as well.
But I soon grew weary of her; rather, she got tired of me,
So she went back to the deacon, and 'tis said they both agree
That Christianity's a humbug, and they'll never more part
In the spreading of the gospel—may God grant them change of heart.
I am wheat and they are tares gone to swell the devil's grist,
I'm the Reverend Giascutis, styled the Boy Revivalist.
There is nothing hits me closer than a woman who's aggrieved
With the conduct of her husband, and who thinks she is deceived;
She is misery embodied, I am balm personified,
And my style of consolation never fails where it is tried.
But I wander from my subject, I am bound for realms of bliss,
There is but one way to get there, and that single way is this:
Who believes not, he shall perish; who has faith, he shall be saved;
Human hearts are desperate wicked, we are totally depraved.
Who can doubt that blessed doctrin? surely none with common sense,
Pleading at the court of conscience, here's myself in evidence.

DUFF.

Obituary.

At his residence, in Troy, N. Y., on Sunday, Dec. 27, 1885, died William H. Peck, aged sixty-eight years. The funeral occurred Wednesday, the 30th. At the request of Mr. Peck, no minister presided at the service. Daniel E. Ryan, of this city, one of Mr, Peck's closest friends, paid the last tribute to the dead. The following is a synopsis of what he said, and a short sketch of Mr. Peck's life:

"A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to all the world." These were the last words and this the splendid sentiment that inspired the pen of him around whose mortal remains we are assembled to pay his memory the tribute of our love and respect. With this kindly greeting to us all as a final adieu, to show us that his heart beat responsiv to our own in thoughtful love, he lay down to rest and passed as peacefully into eternal mortal sleep as ever blessed the happy innocence of childhood. His last message was also, as it proves, a signal to us that the end was near at hand, and to draw our hearts nearer to his own. It now becomes our duty in the presence of what we are taught is death, to sum up his life's work, and passing final judgment, place the verdict on his loving heart, now still forever.

To us who may fortunately be Liberals, dissolution, not death, may come as a calamity, as it does to other mortals; but never as a punishment from an angered God, and always as a visitation from nature, that demands the return of all that springs from her bosom, that in its proper harvest she may treasure the seeds for a new and more perfect life.

In casting the balance, has the life of our loved friend come to a ripened harvest?

These are the facts jotted down some years ago by his direction, when he realized that his illness would result fatally, and probably in the near future. On that occasion he said it was and would be his last wish that I should conduct his funeral services, and that no Christian minister was to be permitted to do so under any circumstances. It is my sad and yet my pleasant duty to now fulfil this obligation, feeling that there are many here who could render larger justice from longer acquaintance, but the sentiments I will utter spring from my heart in a spirit of genuin love for the man and faith in his superior manhood and principles.

We now pass to the facts of his life and their value to humanity:

William H. Peck was born at Salisbury, Conn., Sept. 15, 1817, and settled in Troy 1830; was reared in the orthodox church of belief, and his mind became interested early in religious matters. He became a convert to Universalism at the age of sixteen years, through reading a sermon by the Rev. Thos. Whittemore, of Boston, on the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. As a result of his study and interest, he was duly admitted a preacher by the Hudson River Association of Universalists and contributed a number of pages to their papers.

Mr. Peck was personally well acquainted with all the patriarchs of that belief from Clement Le Febere, Hosea Ballou, Thos. Whittemore, to E. H. Chapin, but felt constrained, and aimed for larger mental and religious liberty.

A copy of the Boston Investigator containing a critical notice on a book by the Rev. John Prince entitled, "A Lecture on the Bible," fell under his attention about this time and, becoming possessed of the book, he became an open Liberal, and ever since he has been activly identified with the Freethought movement. In that relation he numbered among his friends the leading men and women advocates known as Liberal editors, lecturers, and orators, and his activ sympathy was so well known and understood that he was, in a quiet and unobtrusiv way, known as a patriarch among the Liberals.

The late D. M. Bennett, proprietor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, sought him first of all on visiting New York with the idea of founding that great journal, and his sympathetic spirit no doubt fortified Mr. Bennett's aims and hopes to push ahead.

He became identified with the practice of medicin just previous to 1848 and was known in northeast and central New York and northwest Vermont as Dr. Peck. During 1848, in partnership with Dr. J. C. Kelly, he practiced medicin in Boston at 54 Tremont street.

About this time psychology assumed a generally absorbing interest to the public, and, leaving medicin, he took up with the idea and traveled extensivly as a lecturer and operator.

During this period an interesting episode was a discussion on psychology he held at Bristol, Vt., with the Rev. Elder Morgan, in the Baptist church of that town on a night when the temperature was twenty degrees below zero.

Plenty of people came from a distance of thirty miles in wagons to hear it, and excitement ran high on the subject. Subsequently at a lecture in Vergennes, Vt., he was interrogated as to the "Rochester Knockings," and expressed faith in their being facts, and in accord with nature. In 1852, at Troy, he called a meeting to discuss Spiritualism, which was held in the old Bethel church, Gen. Veile being chairman. The meetings excited general interest, and were continued for three weeks with much success.

Following this he went to New York and became activly connected with the public press as a writer, but finally went into the produce commission business permanently. While connected with the press he aided to form an anti-Sunday League and was one of its founders. Its object was to write up the matter through the papers, journals, etc., and to spread Liberal ideas through pamphlets. He furnished a series of articles thoroughly exhaustiv of the subject, addressed to the Rev. Dr. Spring, and published in the New York Sunday Despatch, and many other papers.

He was the last of nine kindred spirits who made a compact to successivly attend each others' funeral. The last one to depart previous to Mr. Peck was the Rev. C. Chauncy Burr, a famous Universalist preacher. They were life-long friends and congenial companions.

Having stated the facts as he gave them to me, it is for me to bear living witness to the good work of his life, and with you, his old time friends and relations, to lay our verdict of Nobly done! on his loving heart, and thus secure his life and the manner of his death from all possibility of Christian calumny or misstatement. To us Liberals or Infidels the treasures of such a man's life we must lay up here on this earth, for it is just the living of such a life that helps to broaden this world into a comparativ heaven. He was in all things an honest man. He did not believe or disbelieve in God; his loving nature prompted him to hope for a spiritual future, but he had no convictions on the matter. He had no faith in Christ except as a mythical personage, but said that if he existed as stated in scripture, he was a true reformer, and as a man met the fate that the church always metes out to those who attempt to fight its intolerance—martyrdom. In fact, he regarded Christ as the grandest Infidel that ever lived. He passed as truly to mortal death as he lived, a child of nature, believing to the last that natural laws only redeem everything.

Dear friends, these are the main facts of his life. If you think that in his humble sphere his work was of limited effect, you are mistaken. He, in his early days, with a few other noble men and women, was a pioneer in an almost limitless forest of bigotry, surrounded by the giant oaks of superstition, intolerance, persecution, and social ostracism. It is the work of the brave few like him that hav felled these monsters and left the "clearing" almost free for the multitudes like us, who hav felt little of the fray, and enjoy much of the blessings that bring us just within the bounds of perfect liberty.

The good life of such men as Mr. Peck shames Christians into the fear of being illiberal, and it turns the gaze of malice and the finger of scorn from the honest, upright Freethinker into the mirror of nature.

With this tribute I speak for wife, children, friends and acquaintances—for humanity and and myself.

Farewell, dear friend! Thine be an honored, eternal rest. We say with thee, as thou didst to us, "A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to all the world!"

At the grave Mr. Ryan said:

"O mighty spirit of the great universe! witness that we herewith consign lovingly to the bosom from which he sprang the mortal remains of our brother. He is thine—in the order of nature we return him to thee. I in the name of mother, of father, of brother, son, daughters, and friends return him to thy last embrace. Adieu, sweet-hearted friend, a last farewell."

Book Notices.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. Ingalls. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price $1.

This book is a work on political economy, and is really an inquiry into the causes of poverty and want, and into the defects of our social institutions which permit some men to accumulate such large fortunes from the labor of the lower classes.

One hundred years ago political economy was an unknown science. Since then, Adam Smith, followed by other writers, such as Say, Ricardo, Mill, hav laid the foundation of this science. But their work is not complete, for they hav failed to point out the remedy for the industrial diseases of society, so much so that their followers are all partisans of the "let alone" policy, and can offer nothing better than the trite comfort that the evil will work itself out in time. Such conclusions do not satisfy the more generous and sympathetic individuals who see so much misery, and cannot see any improvement as years pass by, and there has arisen a number of men who hav tried to diagnosticate the social diseases and to point out the proper remedy. Most of these men hav made no preparation for the work they hav undertaken, and hav no knowledge of the subject of which they propose to treat. Not so with Mr. Ingalls. His work shows all throughout a complete mastery of his subject, a clear perception of the necessity of an exact definition of words, and a careful and persistent thinking over of the many sides of this difficult subject.

While Mr. Ingalls passes in review all the social factors, and is opposed to profit, rent, and interest, he finds the greater social evil in unlimited land ownership, and favors leaving "occupancy and use" as the only title to land. He is too wise a man to urge it as a patent remedy, and especially does not dwell upon the many practical difficulties which such a system would create if put in effectiv force, no more than he tries to show where the incentiv to accumulation of the capital necessary for production would be found if rent, profit, and interest were abolished; but he mainly aims to educate, and there are many true hits at existing fallacies found all through his book. It is a book for thinkers, containing many truths which we had never seen stated in print before.

To ourselvs, who look upon all social institutions as a growth; who believe that justice and natural rights hav no hand in shaping the laws of men, but that they are shaped by the necessities of civilization; who believe that while rent, profit, and interest are really as unjust as Mr. Ingalls represents them, they are a necessity of progress and will endure as long as progress requires it, we see in this book another of the many signs of the times that unlimited land ownership has had its day and that, as civilization can be better advanced by a more equitable distribution of the soil, the public mind is being slowly prepared to a change in the system of land tenure.

We earnestly recommend "Social Wealth" to all persons interested in social problems. They will find therein the thoughts of a man whose opinions are worth having, and whether they agree with him or not, they will find that his arguments are entitled to respect, and that knowledge can be gathered from them.

We wish also to say a word of commendation for the typographical work on this book. We hav received many books published by the Truth Seeker Company, and their work has steadily improved, till now it is equal to any in the Union. It givs us much pleasure to see this leading Liberal house taking a stand which, we hope, will place them on an equal footing with the leading publishers of New York city. And we know of no way by which the Liberals can better help themselvs and help their cause than by subscribing to THE TRUTH SEEKER and buying liberally of their publications.—The Sociologist.

RELIGION OF HUMANITY.

FOUNDED BY AUGUSTE COMTE.

The Society of Humanity, in the name of M. Pierre Laffitte, the venerable successor of Auguste Comte, and the Positivists and workingmen of Paris, to the working people of New York city and vicinity,

Greeting:

All who are desirous of acquiring a knowledge of the philosophic and religious teachings of Auguste Comte are hereby invited without distinction of creed, nationality, color, or social condition to assist at a systematic reading of the

"GENERAL VIEW OF POSITIVISM."

The reading will commence next Sunday morning, 10 o'clock, at 97 Market st., and will be continued every Sunday until completed. No collection.

1t2 RICHARD K. FOSTER, Librarian.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SEND TO ELMINA FOR THEM.

DIANA.—A startling book! Original in theory, scientific in treatment, and unobjectionable in language. None should marry without reading "Diana." Sexual satisfaction through magnetic influence. Love rendered permanent and lasting. Third edition, enlarged, revised, and improved. Price, 25 cents.

SOCIOLOGY.—Consisting of essays, poems, short lives of Land Reformers and other reforma ory topics; worth $2; bound in cloth and sold for 50 cents. Written by Masquerier, a good old man who has spent a lifetime in trying to help humanity.

THE DARWINS.—By Elmina. Price, 50 cents. "I have read 'The Darwins,' and am pleased with it; and so are all to whom I have lent it. Were such works more plenty, Christians would be less numerous."—D. Nielson. Three books for $1 00, and Green's Freethought Directory, price, $2.00, sent also for $1.10 $2.10 for all four.

Address MRS. E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students c the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect. A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He Talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

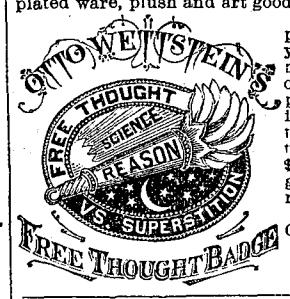
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.



BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

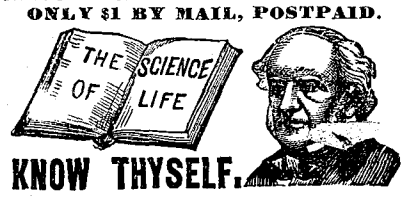
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3 50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.



OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK

For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN

ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Jackson, Mich.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

News of the Week.

THE usual daily report of arrests of Nihilists in Russia continues.

THE mayor of Des Moines, Iowa, has ordered the closing of every saloon in the place.

HYDROPHOBIA, with proposed remedies, prominent among which is the discovery of M. Pasteur, forms the talk of the hour.

IN Germany police measures for the repression of Socialists are approaching in severity and cruelty those of Russia against the Nihilists.

AT San Salvador, Bahama Islands, several hundred young girls are infected with an epidemic of religious hallucination, seeing holy visions, and falling in hysterics.

THE long-expected winter cold came on the 9th inst., accompanied by a storm that produced great damage throughout the country and wrecked many vessels on the coast, with great loss of life.

AFTER a close fight for the mayoralty of Toronto, Can., between the Prohibitionists and liquor-dealers' party, the candidate of the former has been elected. Many women electioneered for him.

A DISPATCH from Washington says: "The great mass of matter presented to Congress now comes from jobbers. Their claims and schemes hav just as much time accorded to them as honest measures of national importance."

PARNELL has gained strong support in the present Parliament, and, while once despised, insulted, and denounced, is now eagerly sought and propitiated. Home rule for Ireland, it is now conceded by all, will soon be obtained.

THE Gibbs Investigating Committee, an able body which has been for some time examining into the abuses of the New York city government, and devising remedies therefor, has prepared a number of radical reform bills to be submitted to the legislature.

So many of the "pillars" of the Presbyterian Brick church, on Fifth avenue, this city, derive their incomes from the liquor traffic that the pastor was obliged to address them on the subject on Sunday the 12th, urging them to abandon such business.

ANOTHER visitation of Providence. On the 11th ult., in New York city, Mr. James S. Noyes was killed by falling through an elevator shaft of the Park Bank building, while on his way to the fourth story to pay his subscription to the Christian at Work.

THE legislators of N. Y. state are now endeavoring to find some method of supplying work for convicts other than the old contract system. All recognize that the convicts cannot be kept idle without extravagant expense to the state, and cruelty to themselvs.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S indignant denunciation of newspaper lying is now learned to hav been occasioned by the circulation of a slander, absolutely baseless and invented, setting forth in detail the contents of two disgraceful letters claimed to hav passed between him and Mr. Jos. Keppler, of this city.

LAND-AGENTS advertising extensivly in Northern papers and making extravagant representations of the advantages of Florida land are denounced by recent writers in New York papers, who charge that they are swindlers, and their lands, both in Florida and throughout the South, barren and worthless.

THE Rev. Dr. Bristor, of Spring Valley, N. Y., is on trial for seducing sixteen-year-old Ida Downs. When she attempted to reveal it he beat her and threatened to hav her sent to jail. In reproaching him with the deed she said, "Dr. Bristor, God was watching you." "Yes," replied he, "that's all right."

ON Dec. 31st the engineers of the New York city Elevated Railroad Company presented to their superintendent a petition asking respectfully for a reduction of their hours of labor in accordance with a former promis. The superintendent promised to consider the matter, sent around a petition to the engineers for signatures of those "loyal" to the road, and securing none, on the 6th ult. closed the Second and Ninth avenue lines. The public were greatly incensed over the stoppage of these lines, Railroad Commissioner O'Donnell claiming that it violated the company's charter, and the alarmed corporation immediately reinstated the men and started their trains again.

THE MANEUVERS OF THE LAST HOUR.

"How the Old Thing Works" for the benefit of the church.

Odds and Ends.

CANON FARRAR came to this country for a rest, and took away twenty-five thousand dollars. He will take the rest on his next visit.

THERE may be sermons in stone, as Shakspere says, and there may not be, but judging from some big salaries paid some big preachers there is no doubt about there being "rock" in sermons.

AN eminent statistician has calculated that a man spends nine dollars per annum more than a woman. This may be accounted for on the ground that a man generally has to buy his wife's clothes as well as his own.

"JUST borrowed $900 on my note," said young Hardup, "and I feel like a great man's monument." "How's that?" said his friend, "'cause somebody else has to pay for it?" "Oh, no; not exactly that; but I've got such a good start on paper."

ONE of the stockholders in a New York brewing company asked the president: "Don't you think the advance in hops will hav some effect on our stock?" "Humbug! The little amount of hops we put in our beer is not going to affect the shares of stock."

"WHAT did you do the first time you got into a battle?" said a young lady to an old soldier. "Of course you didn't run!" "Oh, no, I didn't run, miss; not at all. But if I had been going for a doctor, and you had seen me, you would hav thought somebody was awful sick."

NICE young man (lecturing to a Sunday-school): "Now, is there any little boy or little girl, who would like to ask any questions? Well, little boy, I see your hand; you needn't snap your fingers. What question would you like to ask?" Small boy: "How much longer is this jawin' goin' to last?"—Chicago Rambler.

MR. AUGUR (to Miss Societe, as he calls her attention to a young lady near by): "There is evident enjoyment. Miss Couleur appears charmed with young Ultradude, does she not?" Miss Societe (smiling brightly): "Oh, one cannot tell anything by a woman's expression. She knows how to look amiable when she's being dreadfully bored."

No novelty to her.—"Here is a curious case, ma'am," said the superintendent of the insane asylum. "This man imagins he is the motiv power that runs the world. He's perfectly harmless, though, but he thinks the world wouldn't move without him. Very queer notion, isn't it?" "I don't know about that; my husband has got just the same notion in his head."

NO NEED OF IT.

The maid expects
Her beau to-night,
And fills the stove
With anthracite,
Because the air
Is raw and damp,
But quite forgets
To fill the lamp.

"YES," said Mrs. Bennington, "my son, George, is getting to be quite an artist." "Does he affect any particular school of art?" asked the visitor. "He paints religious pictures mostly, I think. Isn't it a Madonna that George is painting now, Mr. Bennington?" asked the old lady, turning to her husband. "Yes," said the old man, "it's a Madonna—a prima donna."

Now the maiden and the youth,
Love to sit and spoon, forsooth,
By the fireside where brightly burns the log, log, log.
While her father, raging wroth,
Thinks how soon a piece of cloth
Will be taken from his trousers by the dog, dog, dog.

MAMMA (reading): "And Daniel was cast into the the lions' den; but they did not harm him for——" Little Billy (bursting into tears): "Oh, ooo! I thought the lions were going to eat him." Mamma: "But the naughty lions did not eat good Daniel, my own tender-hearted little lamb." Little Billy (angrily): "But I wanted the lions to eat Daniel; I hate Daniel; besides, it would hav been more exciting."—Life.

MINISTER: "Johnny, your mother says that she gave you ten cents one day last week to buy candy with, and that you kept it until Sunday, and put it in the plate at church." Johnny: "Yes, sir." Minister: "You acted the part of a very good boy. Now, can you tell me what good thoughts prompted you to giv the money to the church, instead of buying candy with it?" Johnny: "Yes, sir; 'cause I couldn't spend it in candy, as it had a hole in it."

AT the revival; Preacher: "Young men should never go to a place where they would not take their sisters. Is there a Christian young man in the audience who thinks he may safely break this wise rule?" Young man under the gallery stands up. Preacher: "And what is the place, my young friend, which you think yourself justified in visiting, and yet to which you would not think of taking your sister?" Young man: "The barber-shop, sir."

"YES, sir," said the druggist, "this Sunday law is one that cannot be too strictly enforced. It is a blot on the fair fame of American institutions that drinks should be sold indiscriminately on the Sabbath, and that saloon-keepers should be allowed to keep open their doors. John, I think it will be your turn to tend store next Sunday. Put the soda-water sign out as prominently as you can. We wouldn't do enough business on Sunday to pay expenses, if it wasn't for that soda-fountain."

ONE of Brown's little nieces' holiday books is a scripture picture-book. Her mamma was explaining to her an engraving, representing the three Eastern monarchs bowing down before the manger at which two long-eared beasts of burden were quietly feeding. "Good draw, wasn't it?" said Brown. "Good draw? What do you mean?" said his indignant sister-in-law. "Why, yes," replied the unconscious innocent, "three kings to a pair of jacks; pretty good, I call it." And he walked away, humming softly.

Gems of Thought.

I PRAY thee, then, wear not one mood alone,
That what thou sayst is right, and nought but that,
For he who thinks that he alone is wise,
His mind and speech above what others boast,
Such men when searched are mostly empty found;
But for a man to learn, though he be wise,
Yea, to learn much and know the time to yield,
Brings no disgrace.
—Plumptre's Sophocles's Antigones.

FOR law, alike as a profession and an instrument of mental disciplin, Burke had always the profound respect that it so amply deserves, though he saw that it was not without drawbacks of its own. "The law," he said, in his fine description of George Granville, in words that all who think about schemes of education ought to ponder, "is, in my opinion, one of the first and noblest of human sciences; a science which does more to quicken and invigorate the understanding than all the other kinds of learning put together; but it is not apt, except in persons very happily born, to open and liberate the mind exactly in the same proportion.—John Morley's Burke.

EVER remember that thou art human, not merely a natural production; ever remember that all others are human also, and, with all individual differences, the same as thou, having the same needs and the same claims as thyself. This is the sum and substance of morality.—Strauss.

To expect that twelve men, taken by lot out of a promiscuous multitude, should agree in their opinion upon points confessedly dubious, and upon which oftentimes the wisest judgments might be holden in suspense; or to suppose that any real unanimity or change of opinion in the dissenting jurors could be procured by confining them until they all consented to the same verdict, bespeaks more of the conceit of a barbarous age than of the policy which could dictate such an institution as that of juries.—Paley's Moral and Political Philosophy.

IN every point of view in which those things called "miracles" can be placed and considered, the reality of them is improbable, and their existence unnecessary. They would not answer any useful purposes, even if they were true, for it is more difficult to obtain belief in a miracle than in a principle evidently moral without any miracle. Moral principle speaks universally for itself. Miracles could be but a thing of the moment, and seen by but a few. After this it requires a transfer of faith from God to man to believe a miracle upon man's report. Instead, therefore, of admitting the recitals of miracles as evidence of any system of religion being true, they ought to be considered as symptoms of its being fabulous. It is necessary to the full and upright character of truth that it reject the crutch, and it is consistent with the character of fable to seek the aid that truth rejects.—Paine's Age of Reason.

I NEVER could discern in Shelley any more than two fixed principles. The first was a strong, irrepressible love of liberty; of liberty in the abstract, and somewhat after the pattern of the ancient republics, without reference to the English constitution, respecting which he knew little, heeding it not at all. The second was an equally ardent love of toleration for all opinions, but more especially of religious opinions; or toleration complete, entire, universal, and unlimited, and as a deduction and corollary from which latter principle he felt an intense abhorrence of persecution of every kind, public or private.—Hogg's Life of Shelley.

No matter to what end the soul may exist after death, exist it must, because it cannot die. Man's body is material, extended, and composit—susceptible in consequence of dissolution and destruction. But the soul is immaterial and simple—exempt, therefore, from dissolution and death. This was the ancient pyschology, already exploded by Kant. All these alleged properties of the soul, whence its immortality is deduced, are most arbitrarily attributed to it. We hav learned from closer observations in the domain of physiology and psychology that the body and soul, even if we continue to distinguish between them as two separate essences, are nevertheless so nearly united, the so-called soul so entirely conditioned by the nature and circumstances of its material organ, the brain, that its continuance is unimaginable without it. The so-called spiritual functions develop, grow, and gain strength along with the body, especially with their distinctiv organ, the brain; decline in sympathy with it in old age, and suffer corresponding disorders in case of cerebral affections—in such wise, moreover, that the derangement of certain mental functions corresponds to that of certain parts of the brain. But a thing so clearly and completely bound to a physical organism can as little exist after the latter's destruction as the center of a circle after the dissolution of the circumference.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

THE study of theology, as it stands in Christian churches, is the study of nothing; it is founded on nothing; it rests on no principle; it proceeds by no authorities, it has no data; it can demonstrate nothing; and it admits no conclusion. Not anything can be studied as a scheme without our being in possession of the principles upon which it is founded, and as this is not the case with Christian theology, it is simply the study of nothing.—Paine's Age of Reason.

IF observation, experience, and history teach anything clearly and unmistakably, it is that the strongest and most intense faith in religious dogmas may coexist with the grossest immorality. We see it exemplified in the lives of men to-day. It has been so in the past. "A wager might be laid," says Mommsen in his "History of Rome," "that the more base any woman was, the more piously she worshiped Isis." The Corinth of antiquity was as full of religion as of vice. The Byzantine empire under Christianity existed nearly eleven centuries. Faith abounded and Materialism was unknown. Yet of that empire Lecky says: "The universal verdict of history is that it constitutes, without a single exception, the most thoroughly base and despicable form that civilization has yet assumed."—Underwood's Essays and Lectures.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 4. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, January 2[illegible], 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The Methodist Foreign Mission has collected and spent over $19,000,000 in sixty-six years.—Rev. J. M. Buckley.

Eight hundred starving paupers found within the limits of four blocks in an east side street in New York.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. Mr. Jardine, of Kansas City, Mo., having been exposed as a man of most corrupt morals, committed suicide last week by taking chloroform.

AMERICANS are sending money to Ireland, and Ireland sends it to the pope. It would be worth something to know which takes the most money out of Ireland, the landlords or the church.

IT is reported that the editor of the new edition of Webster's Dictionary, President Porter of Yale, has decided to admit "bulldozing," "boycott," and "dude" into its precincts, but is hesitating about "mugwump."

THIS is not a religious century, says Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost, but it certainly is a philanthropic one. After that utterance his further statement that philanthropy is the soul of religion fell rather flat upon the congregation.

"WHAT do they do when they install a minister?" inquired a small boy. "Do they put him in a stall and feed him?" "Not a bit," said the father, "they harness him to the church and expect him to draw it alone."—St. Paul Globe.

NOSTRADMUS, the French astrologer, prophesied that the world would come to an end whenever the feast of St. George should fall on Good Friday, the Feast of Mark on Easter, and Corpus Christi day on St. John's day. Such is the case this year. Those who are in arrears, and who do not relish the thought of going to heaven in debt, should waste no time in settling up.

"HAV you ever seen Mr. Sullivan on the stage?" asked a Boston lady of Young Knickerbocker. "No, I hav not," he replied, "I never admired a slugging exhibition." Slugging exhibition!" exclaimed the Boston girl. "Mr. Sullivan is posing as a Greek god."

THE editor of the Fargo, Dak., Argus says: "We can accommodate ten thousand girls with husbands in Dakota on ninety days' notice. We hav published two thousand letters from as many young women, and made as many matches." Young woman, go West.

DR. BRISTOR, the Spring Valley, N. J., pastor who is under bail charged with assaulting a young girl, did not preach last Sunday. His church has failed to take advantage of the immense service his notoriety would enable him to do the cause of religion, and has suspended him.

To the list of funny typographical errors is just added the announcement of the Brooklyn Union that "at Worcester, Mass., a creation society has just been organized, with a list of officers whose names are significant of wealth and intelligence." The Union meant to say "cremation."

WE should judge by this that the Industrial Appeal, of Ottumwa, Ia., is not getting its full share of financial support: "After this number of the Appeal there will be no issue for two weeks. We will remain in our office during the holidays, ready to receive money due on subscription. Anyone paying us a dollar or more during the next two weeks will, if he dies before the editor of the Appeal, be entitled to, and receive, at least half a column obituary notice. Those who are ambitious for posthumous fame will take notice of this. Now, all those that hav confidence in our abilities as a eulogist, or our accomplishments as an ingenious or unscrupulous romancer, will come in and pay up."

THE Daily News, of Danville, Ill., reports that four people in Blount township hav lost their reason through the effects of a revival and subsequent assiduous reading of the Bible. If this case is reported to the United States Senate perhaps that august body will appoint trustees for the Blount township church.

"WE hav seen of late years," says the Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, of New York, "an entire change of front in the army of unbelief. The point now attacked is not so much any one of the doctrins of revelation, as whether there is any revealer; not so much any one of the difficulties connected with the administration of God, as whether God, in any personal sense, exists at all."

PROF. J. D. DANA, the geologist of Yale, is delivering lectures on evolution and Genesis in the Peabody museum at New Haven, Conn. In his first lecture he claimed that the story of creation told in Genesis was all the information we hav on the subject, and that that story was true because it was inspired; otherwise it would not be found in the Bible, which he holds in the "word of God!"

"IN six days," said Deacon Buerag, addressing the Sunday-school, "God made the earth. Now, dear children, what did he do the seventh day?" No answer. "I will ask you, Johnny Sharpe," continued the deacon, pleasantly. "After working six days of the week, what do people do on Sunday?" "Pleathe, thir, replied Johnny Sharpe, promptly, "they mostly lay street railroath.'

THE Lancet hopes against hope that boys who smoke will draw a lesson from the case of a twelve-year-old lad in London, who died in consequence of smoking a pennyworth of double twist. "We may at least," says the venerable editor, "advise every sensible boy to regard tobacco as a poison."

THE Norristown Herald has noticed that "the clergy are much more forcibly reminded of the 'uncertainty of life' when a millionaire dies suddenly than when a poor man drops dead." To which it may be added that according to the same clergy the Christian virtues shine much more conspicuously in the career of him who has donated the most liberally toward their support.

ABOUT as tall a story as imaginativ newspaper reporters usually start upon its rounds is the one from Wake county, North Carolina. The story runs that John B. Sturdivant, a sixteen-year-old youth, has been called to preach the gospel. The boy is subject to fits. His father says that one night, while four strong men were endeavoring to hold him, he shook them off, sat down at the organ, and played sweetly, something he never did before. At the close of the tune he made a profession of religion. A week ago the boy announced that God had deprived him of sight in order to convince the people of his divine mission. He would, he said, hav his vision restored on Friday. This, according to the dispatch to the Herald, was done. The boy now has hundreds of believers. This is certainly a very able piece of work on the part of the reporters, and their great foresight in locating the occurrence in an inacessible portion of North Carolina stamps them as men of genius.

Communications.

Letters to a Catholic Friend.

I.

FRIEND D. C.: Some months ago, when my Aztec articles appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER, you wrote me claiming that all my authorities were either garbled or false; that I had gone out of my way to insult your religion, and also intimated charges which our early friendship should never hav allowed you to entertain. On its receipt, I wrote taking exception to your position, and accepting your invitation to a discussion through the public press, knowing that, as a representativ Catholic, you would express the views of the intelligent laity, and the only condition I made was that we should agree "that a belief never changes a fact." After over four months of correspondence you suddenly, and without any satisfactory reason, changed front and declined the controversy, on the ground that you could not persuade any Catholic paper to publish it, and you did not care to hav your name appear in an Infidel sheet. Your very Christian objection, when crystallized, means that an Infidel would be honored by seeing his name appear in a Catholic paper, and a Catholic would be disgraced by writing for an Infidel paper, even if in so doing he were defending his religion. I will not take exception to this position, but really I was in hopes that a controversy on these subjects would be of more service to the readers of your papers than the latest news from Ireland, boycottings, murders, etc., with which they are usually filled. Neither is it my purpose to ask what is the real reason for this change of base, but I will content myself with intimating that the mildness of your last letter, in contradistinction to the violence of the first, might suggest a slight attack of fear, for it is hardly presumable that you hav allowed your ghostly adviser to deter you from defending in public what you advocate in private.

I regret also that all those authorities whom you proposed to quote should remain hidden and unknown to fame in the recesses of your library, and that the series of "undisputed facts" you said you would present should not be given to your co-religionists, and thus strengthen them where they are so lamentably weak.

I hardly know, my friend, what your clique will do now that you, their champion, hav taken water; but, as this is not a personal quarrel, and I recognize the power behind the throne, by permission of Brother Macdonald I will answer you through his columns. See that those interested with you receive a copy, and lest your good name should suffer, only use your initials.

One of my remarks to which you take exception is "that, surrounded by the mists and myths of Christianity, there is not a scintilla of historical evidence to prove that Jesus Christ ever lived," and you proposed quoting the testimony of the early writers, which you claim should be satisfactory to any reasonable man. If I had had the power to force you into a position, this would hav been the one, for it was by reading these worthies that I first had my eyes opened to the true status of your church. Yours is the course always taken by theologians, because they think that no one will take the trouble to wade through the interminable arguments and vapid reasonings of these early saints.

When the question, "What is the source of faith?" was put to the assembled wisdom at Trent, the answer, "Scripture and tradition," met with almost unanimous approval, and your historians even go further, and rely almost entirely on tradition.

"Tradition is the foundation of the scriptures," says Cardinal Baronius, "and surpasses them in this, to wit: that the scriptures cannot subsist unless fortified by tradition, whereas tradition has sufficient force without scripture." "We shall endeavor to prove," says Bellarmine, "that the scriptures without the traditions are neither sufficient nor simply necessary." Coster remarks that "the excellence of the non-written word far surpasses that of the scriptures;" and Lindanus goes still further, for he says: "Scripture is a nose of wax, a dead letter, and that kills; a very husk without a kernel; a leaden rule; a school for heretics; a forest that serves as a refuge for robbers."

So, as far as Catholic authority is concerned, you are abundantly fortified in your position; therefore, without further parley, let us examin the teachings and personal experiences of these early writers whom you value more than those inspired ones selected by your God in person. As you are a lawyer, I lay down as a proposition that we can hav no surer guide than the law of our country, and quote the decision of Judge Wallace, of the United States Circuit Court, in the Bell Telephone case. In reviewing the testimony of Drawbaugh, the judge says: "Where a witness falsifies a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to be mistaken, courts are bound upon principles of law, morality, and justice to apply the maxim, falsus in uno falsus in omnibus."

Therefore, when a man advocates what is manifestly false, the presumed sanctity of his character does not prevent his being considered unreliable; and if it would not be fair to apply the above rule, on the ground that he may in perfect honesty advance as a fact that which appeals to him as such, and yet be mistaken, it would be equally unfair to claim that if, in a number of facts attested to by him and his witnesses, common sense and a knowledge of natural laws should decide he was mistaken in the great majority, he is of necessity correct in the small balance, simply because it is impossible for him to be mistaken in every statement.

I deny that the crudeness of the age and ignorance of the writers are sufficient excuse for the uttering of a palpable falsehood, as your commentators claim; for the attestation of a fact requires no learning; simply ordinary comprehension joined to a love of truth. Therefore, I hold that the truthfulness of a writer's assertions concerning a marvelous occurrence depends on the evidence adduced, both in regard to the probability of its having happened and the credibility of the attesting witnesses; and that the credulity of the acceptor guarantees neither the probability of the occurrence nor the truthfulness of the writer and his witnesses.

The first testimony is from Clement, called your second pope. He represents himself as a Roman citizen seriously perplexed by pondering on the mysteries of life. He heard of some one in Judea preaching of the kingdom of God, and set out to make his acquaintance. Adverse winds drove him to Cesarea, where he met Peter, who was about to hold a controversy with Simon Magus, which resulted in the conversion of ten thousand, but particularly of two, called Niceta and Aquila. Then Clement confided his private history to Peter. In his youth his mother, being warned in a vision (he does not say of what, or how he became acquainted with it), sailed away from Rome without acquainting anybody with her reason, taking his infant twin brothers with her. His father went in search of them, and he (Clement) had never heard from any of them since that day. Shortly afterwards he and Peter visited an island, where they found a beggar woman, who proved to be his mother, and, wonderful to relate, Niceta and Aquila turn up as the long-lost infant twins. One day, while walking on the sea-shore, they met another old beggar, who turned out to be the father. The family became Christians, and after Peter was hung up by the heels, Clement became pope. This gentleman claimed that "Judaism and Christianity are substantially the same;" that it was immaterial whether one received Moses or Christ; that the prophet was twice born—first as Adam, and then as Jesus; but "that he only revealed himself to holy men and inspired them."

A few years ago there was a discussion in regard to your first pope, Peter, and it was held that he had never been in Rome, and that the story of his martyrdom was a pious fraud. As your pope claims to be his direct descendant, the Jesuits were instructed to defend the papal claims. It was shown that tradition placed his death in A.D. 66. According to the Acts, he was either in Jerusalem, Cesarea, or Antioch, till 52. Paul, writing to the Romans in 57, does not mention him, though he salutes by name twenty-seven members of that church. In 62 Paul wrote to the churches of Philippi, Ephesus, and Colosse, and although entering into details, he does not mention Peter; and in 66, the year of his martyrdom, in writing to Timothy from Rome, he speaks of his peculiar position, sufferings, etc., and says all men forsook me, except Onesiphorus—not one word of Peter.

The Jesuits were so completely cornered, they were obliged to confess that their mainstay was the "Recognitions," by Clement, and argued that if they could prove that Peter had been in Rome only one day, the apostolic succession would be assured. I became so disgusted with the fall from a pontificate of twenty-five years to a few hours that the discussion had no further charms, and I ceased following it.

St. Ignatius was arrested in Syria, and sent to Rome to be cast to the wild beasts "on account of his testimony to Christ; and being carried through Asia, under a most rigid custody, he fortified the different churches in the cities where he tarried. He exhorted them to adhere firmly to the traditions of the apostles, which, for the sake of greater security, he deemed it necessary to attest by committing it to writing." The "Acts of Martyrdom" credit him with having suffered Dec. 20, A.D. 116, and that, when a child, Jesus held him in his arms. His three epistles are in high repute in your church, but I question their authenticity on the following ground: That an old man of ninety years, carried through Asia under the most rigid custody, would hav neither time, ability, nor disposition to write them.

St. Polycarp was an early martyr. Only one of his epistles is extant, and though he testifies to having heard parties say that they had heard other parties say they had seen Jesus, yet his testimony is inadmissible from a Catholic standpoint, as he states, "By grace we are saved, not by works." While making him a saint, you repudiate his teaching, and if the papal anathema be retroactiv, it is very questionable if this early martyr be in the company of the blessed. Papias was a disciple of Polycarp. He says that Matthew made a collection of Christ's sayings and doings in the Hebrew, and everyone translated it as he was able. He gave it as the direct teaching of Polycarp, received from St. John himself, that Jesus did not die till he was over fifty years old. All the fathers who came after him, except Irenæus, claim he forged this testimony; that, being hard-pressed by the Valentinians, who asserted the ministry of Jesus to hav lasted only one year, he had manufactured it, and given St. John as his authority. Even Eusebius admits that he was "a weak and silly man, whose writings consist of strange parables and doctrins and fabulous stories." Most people will agree with Eusebius when they read of the number of dead restored to life, and how the saints could drink poison without harm. Your church calls his epistle a "treasure held in earthen vessels."

Next comes Justin Martyr, the great apologist. He claimed for himself "the gift of expounding the scriptures, granted by special grace of God." There seems to be no evidence other than his simple word to prove this assertion, for, feeling bound to accept it as true, your commentators are exercised over his many arguments, but particularly that on the "Mystery of the Cross." In his expoundings he derives Satan from Sata, an apostate, and nas, a serpent, but his admirers say that, as he never claimed to be a philologist, his mistake is thus accounted for. Martyr taught that when God created the world, he committed it to the care of angels, who fell in love with the daughters of earth, and by them had children called Demons. In regard to the Septuagint version of the Bible, he says that seventy men were shut up in separate cells by King Ptolemy, and were obliged to translate the book without having access to one another. These seventy translations, when finished, agreed verbatim et literatim. He avers that he saw the cells in which the men were confined, and, after calling God as witness to the truth of his story, adds the following piece of historical information: That it was Herod, king of the Jews, who sent these seventy men to Ptolemy. As Ptolemy had died three hundred years before Herod was born, your theologians always skip that passage. Martyr was also the foundation of what is known as the "devil theory." He gravely assures us that the devil, having gained an imperfect knowledge of the prophecies in regard to the advent of the messiah, contrived an exact resemblance between the myths, Bacchus, Hercules, and Esculapius and Jesus, so that when Jesus did come, the people refused to accept him.

"Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed," are the words of a celebrated Catholic commentator, addressed to the critics of the early fathers, when they came to the writings of Irenæus. "He is the terminus a quo of theological controversies," adds another. "In his writings he makes it clear that he stood in immediate relations to the apostles," remarks a third. "The preciousness of his writings bears no proportion to their bulk." "Behold the light of the Western world!" Well, allow me to giv you a quotation from this terminus a quo. In describing the origin of God, he says: "First of all the First-Father was united in conjunction with his Thought; then the only Begotten, that is, Intelligence, with Truth; then word with life, and man with church. These Eons being sent forth for the glory of the father, and desiring of their own accord to honor the father, sent forth emissions by conjunction. Word and life, beside man and church, sent forth ten other Eons, whose names are: The Deep and Mingling, the Undecaying and Union, the Self-existent and Pleasure, the Immovable and Blending, the Only-Begotten and Happiness." I hav no comment to make, but the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will await explanations. His prophecies are more understandable, but just as correct as his theology. He says: "The day of the Lord is as a thousand years, and in six days created things were finished; it is evident, therefore, that the world will come to an end in six thousand years." He then describes the millennium, giving as his authority St. John and "special revelation:" "The days will come in which there will grow vinyards, each having ten thousand vine stocks, each stock having ten thousand branches, each branch ten thousand shoots, each shoot ten thousand bunches, each bunch ten thousand grapes, and each grape squeezed shall yield twenty-five measures of wine; and when any of the saints go to pluck a bunch another bunch shall cry out, 'I am better; take me and bless the Lord through me.'" And thus he speaks of every vegetable, grain, and fruit. He also avers to the truth of the Septuagint story, advocates several books since decided apocryphal by your church, and repeats the legend of the angels mixing with the daughters of men. His style of reasoning "Why animals were divided into clean and unclean;" "Why the gospels should be four, no more, no less," and on the "Law of Moses," would not commend itself to one of our schoolboys, and is a sad commentary on the sanity of the writers of "the purest age of the world." His veracity as an eye-witness may be very reasonably called into question when we read in his description of the martyrdom of Polycarp that the flames refused to burn him and formed an arch over his head, and the executioner then thrust a sword into his side, whereupon a dove flew out of his body, and so much blood came that the fire was extinguished and the air was filled with sweet-scented perfumes. In speaking of this romancer, one of your commentators says: "One firm abutment rests upon the apostle John, the other, as secure, rests upon the well-known Irenæus." Can't you do better in abutments than this?

Tertullian was an outspoken advocate of your theory, and his attestation of miracles is commented on as "simply an excess of zeal." He states that God appeared to a certain sister and gave her the exact length and width of the veil she should wear, and from the frequency of the visits of God to various saints in Africa, one would imagin that the Godhead was on very intimate and social terms with all the African tribes. His argument "Why the number of the apostles was exactly twelve," shows that the mantle of the earlier writers fell on worthy shoulders. His testimony in regard to the existence of Jesus will, no doubt, commend itself to your intelligence. "I find no other means to prove myself to be impudent with success, and happily a fool," says he, "than by my contempt of shame; as, for instance, I maintain that the son of God was born. Why am I not ashamed of maintaining such a thing? Why! but because it is itself a shameful thing? I maintain that the son of God died. Well, that is wholly credible, because it is monstrously absurd. I maintain that, after having been buried, he rose again, and that I take to be absolutely true, because it is manifestly impossible." His idea of the trinity differs somewhat from yours, for in his article against Praxeas he says: "They are three, not in condition but in degree; not in substance but in form; not in power but in aspect." This enthusiastic African is frequently quoted by your theologians, and Neander says of him: "Tertullian's mind had acuteness, depth, and dialectic dexterity." In after life he became a follower of Montanus, and loudly proclaimed that this gentleman was the Holy Ghost. He thus just escaped being read into your list of saints and martyrs.

(TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

The Revised Bible.

From the Boston Herald.

That the ecclesiastical committees in Europe and America, who hav for a number of years past been employed in producing a revised edition of the Old and New Testaments, embody a large amount of trained intellectual force cannot be denied. They are doubtless naturally good and strong men, whose minds hav been warped by bad training.

Supposing there exists in or behind the universe a supreme personal intelligence, by whom these testaments were originally given as a revelation of his rights and our duties to him and other persons, the revision at this late day was not only a waste of energy and precious time, but a presumptuous, if not blasphemous, folly. It intimated that the divine author undertook what he was incompetent to perform, that the book, as a revelation, was a failure. It only revealed the maker quarreling with his own work. It belittled the infinit.

Supposing the Bible simply a human production, like the Iliad of Homer or the plays of Shakspere, manifestly it needs revision more than either of those works—weeding out much that is tedious, pueril, immoral, and unreasonable from what is wise, good, and beautiful. And especially it needs so revising that no statement of any important fact in one place shall be flatly contradicted in another; as, for example, the statement in the 24th chapter of Exodus, 9tb and 10th verses, that Moses, Aaron, Nahab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel saw the God of Israel—feet and all—is flatly contradicted in the first chapter of St. John's gospel, 18th verse; and the immorality of St. Paul is flatly contradicted by the author of the book of Ecclesiastes.

But hardly a word of correction in this respect has been made; no light has been added; no absurdity has been retracted; no example or justification of tyranny or cruelty has been expunged. "Hell" has been changed to "sheol" or "hades" in many places, but in at least two it is left as it was. Its locality, whether geographical, geological, or astronomical, is as doubtful as ever. In the revised text men still liv more than nine hundred years before they die. Noah, at the age of six hundred, embarks in a three-story barn, 450 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 45 feet high, and takes with him his wife (who must hav been at least one hundred years old), his three sons and their wives, a pair of every species of unclean beasts on earth and seven pairs of the clean, to say nothing of fowls and creeping things—six healthy persons, besides the old folks, to take care of a menagerie many times larger than Barnum's for a rather tempestuous voyage of more than forty days and forty nights. What a time they must hav had of it, especially with the creeping things! Shade of Munchausen, what a credulity it must take to swallow it—even as an allegory! The interpreters feel obliged to resort to the miraculous to help it out. It would seem to common sense that Jehovah would hav glorified himself more by saving his friend Noah and his family, with the lions, tigers, and hyenas, from drowning by a whole-cloth miracle, than by obliging the old man to commit such a blunder in the art of navigation! The "New Church" insists that the whole thing has a "spiritual sense." It surely has no other.

As the book of Genesis was not canonized, and probably not written, till after the Jews "hanged their harps on the willows" of Babylon, the remnants of the ark had perished before they could be looked for, so that theology is destitute of that sort of evidence which geology is able to present. Nevertheless, the revisers, taking it for either credible history, or useful, pertinent, and intelligible allegory, may well leave the story of Jonah unrevised. They make the poor fellow, who rebelliously declined to prophesy against Nineveh, pray out of the fish's belly in good Hebrew poetry, which they translate thus:

> I called by reason of my affliction unto the Lord,
> And he answered me;
> Out of the belly of hell cried I,
> And thou heardest my voice.

This is the plainest scriptural localization of the much-dreaded place, and it is to be feared that many unfortunate mariners and some less worthy European tourists hav gone thither—not long to stay, I trust.

As to the text, Exodus xxii, 18, which did duty in Salem, Mass, less than two hundred years ago, the revisers hav expended energy enough on that to make it read: "Thou shalt not suffer a sorceress to liv." This is possibly a slight improvement, for the English word sorceress seems to include the vice of gambling along with that of pretending intercourse with evil spirits. But why should the death sentence be leveled only at females, while male gamblers are so much more abundant? The revision is out of date, any way, for sorceresses, if anyone knows who they are, almost the world over, are not now put to death. Since the death of Rev. Cotton Mather and the discontinuance of the holy Inquisition, the plan of reforming this world and peopling the next, based on this text, has fallen much into decay. Those higher authorities hav dwindled into personalities no larger than Anthony Comstock, and, if possible, the still smaller one, a Methodist minister who became secretary of the United States interior department. If the God who gave this commandment, so revised and enlarged, shall get into the Constitution, the question will arise with these pious servants of his, whether there is any reason in the holy scriptures why they should not, at the public expense, kill all the members of the stock exchanges?

The revision of the Bible, so as to giv it the exact sense of its various discordant writers, if it could possibly be done, was not worth doing. It required more than human inspiration to do it, and intelligent men hav ceased to believe in inspiration, human or divine. We Americans know nothing against the linguistic abilities of the American scholars headed by Drs. Schaff and Day, but cannot believe them specially inspired by anything like supreme intelligence, or, indeed, by any such degree of intelligence as would be competent to rule that very small speck of the universe which lies within the vision of ordinary mortals, and still less do we believe in such inspiration for the revising board which met in Jerusalem chambers, Westminster Abbey. The American company for the revision of the Old Testament has shown its superiority to the British by appending to the work of the latter fourteen pages suggesting more than five hundred readings which it prefers to theirs, and some of them in better taste. A work worthy to be called a revision has not been done, nor attempted.

The new book is but the confession of the fact. The changes are trivial. It is better so. For, notwithstanding the fact that many parts of the book are not fit to be read in schools or public assemblies, it is worth having in libraries, just as it has been ever since the days of pious King James. It is one of a series of writings reaching back almost to the invention of alphabets, which, though by no means strictly historical, illustrates early history, and the way in which traditions, crude, magnified, and distorted, were made to answer some of the purposes of history. They show us perhaps more vividly than real history, had it been possible to write it, could hav done, how the human race outgrew its cannibalism and made paradises out of the dismalest jungles, showing that it can and will yet make a heaven upon earth preferable to what the canonized prophets described in their new Jerusalem.

And then for the Bible poetry, it is still more precious and valuable, for some of it is among the grandest ever produced, because in the upward struggle in the human mind the imagination always goes foremost. The bad morals and senseless miracles, though sandwiched in a barbarous fashion among the best maxims, apothegms, and proverbs of all ages, unless made a part of juvenil education as so much divine instruction, need not corrupt the young. The barbarous origin of the book being known, the wisdom it contains will be prized by force of contrast.

Its worst faults are condoned by the most religiously orthodox, because they assume that the creator of the universe was its author—assume it in spite of his setting in that book the worst possible example for moral beings to follow. If Judge Harlan had applied to many books of the Bible the criticism which he did to the "Leaves of Grass," he would hav purified his department from every officer who had subscribed to a Bible society or taught in a Sunday-school. He consigned to poverty and the peril of starvation a man of genius whom he acknowledged to be a competent and honest officer, for writing a book which makes the creator a kind father to all his children instead of a merciless tyrant to most of them. He violated, in the most flagrant possible manner, that clause of our national Constitution which distinguishes us from all the considerable nations of the earth, and the worst of it is that in doing it he had the approbation and support—not of any such person as Jesus Christ, I gratefully concede—but of the so-called Christian churches of the United States.

As a purely human book the revisers hav left the Bible almost precisely as they found it. It is not damaged by making it appear better than it was, except in a very few matters of literary taste. About all they hav ventured to do is to remove from the text—and in one case out of five or six they hav left it in the margin—an expression abhorrent to the taste of that fastidious lady, Mrs. Grundy, in fact, a word generally considered vulgar, though still retained in Webster unabridged, and in two places (2 Kings xviii, 27, and Isa. xxxvi, 12) they hav substituted for it a word which does not convey the sense, while leaving in the same verse another word equally vulgar, and, under the circumstances, more disgusting.

I appeal to all thinking men and women, and especially to the consciences of the revisers themselvs, whether, considering the pressing wants of mankind for more knowledge of the nature of things, more justice, more kindness, and less strife of classes, this is not a waste of mental energy, scholarship, and inventiv faculty. Would not the invention of an improved soap or a better washing-machine do more for the happiness of the average family than the whole of this Bible revision will ever do—seeing that its chief improvement is the substitution of the phrase "man child" for that by which the Hebrews distinguished between the sexes—unless, forsooth, the revision is to result in exploding the Bible theology?

We are asked by those whose palpable interest it is to check the progress of Freethought, and keep mankind the dupes of an absurd religious theory, "If you set aside the Bible and its divine inspiration, what will you put in its place?" This question, addressed to the unthinking, is by far their strongest plea. It comes too late. The Bible, as an authoritativ and infallible guide of human conduct—and in no other sense is it proposed to displace it—has already been set aside. Science, witty inventions, and better books, to say nothing of the dissensions of its advocates and interpreters, practically did it more than fifty years ago. Salvation armies cannot replace it. Millions of money may restore the sight of it—the outside of the volume—in every hotel, rail-car, steamer, and log cabin, but not much awe of it. There is in its place more knowledge of the universe, more reverence for its order, movements, and laws, more worship of the infinit beauty of its endless revolving and progressiv life, than the Bible ever revealed or produced, and better rules for the conduct of human beings than were ever condensed into commandments by the imaginary God who ordered Abraham to make burnt sacrifice of Isaac, and Moses to kill the worshipers of the golden calf.

There is beginning and perceptibly advancing in this life a better salvation than that invented for the unknowable next, by the ingenious and fanatical Paul, out of the costly ritual of the Jewish priesthood, and the mythical sufferings and resurrection of the man of Nazareth. Were this not so no revision of King James's text would hav been attempted. It indicates the expiring throes of priesthoods as governing powers in this world. The time has come for every sane human being to be his or her own priest—the time for all priests to make themselvs as useful as possible to other people—the time for humanity to take the place of religion, and all the religions to accord, what Protestant Christians never did, the right of private judgment—for men to be never enemies, but brothers. Freethought, free trade, self-government, universal co-operation—working inversely as the square of the distance, to be sure—justice, and human kindness, are the destiny of the future, and, instead of destroying social organization and introducing universal brigandage, will finally make the cosmopolitan state itself better without a church than the Christian or any other church has ever been.

September, 1885. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This is Not the Way Christ Dealt with Money Changers

A little while ago the Episcopalians were tackling the wicked men of Wall street, and now the Methodists hav set up a "mission" for the conversion of the same moneyed sinners. Dr. Pentecost, the ring-master of the circus, uses the meetings to "refute the arguments of Infidels against the Bible." We sympathize with the business men of Wall street.

The Liberal Club.

It was with more than usually bright anticipations of pleasure that the man with a badge-pin took his way toward 220 East Fifteenth street, where was to be held the 395th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. Some little time had elapsed since he had last attended, but all the old familiar forms were there, large as life, and several degrees more natural. Treasurer Morris greeted him cordially as he assimilated the visitor's bright and shining quarter. Mr. Putnam was writing his name on the back of some tickets to the approaching Paine celebration, and said he was glad the man with the decoration had come, because the lecture would be a fine one. The lady secretary made everyone buy a TRUTH SEEKER or a ticket to either the Sunday night dance for the benefit of the workingman's free library, at 141 Eighth street, or the Paine Festival. Only a few escaped this levy.

President Wakeman read the usual notices of meetings to be held elsewhere, and passed such remarks about them as he deemed appropriate. Among other things, the intelligence was given out that Professor George Vaughan, of Virginia, would lecture somewhere or other on "Practical Communism by a Practical Communist." It would undoubtedly be comparativly a treat to those who failed to hear it. N.B.—Mr. Wakeman did not say this. It is thrown in by the writer. It is understood that the remarks about Professor Vaughan which hav appeared in these reports are the cause of his absenting himself from the Club; from which it is to be seen that the humblest writer may not exercise his pen in vain.

An audience was present that filled all the seats except one beside a nice-looking young lady, and the reporter appropriated this one without delay. But he shortly wished himself out of it, for his neighbor watched him so closely as he made his pothooks that it broke him up, and at this writing he finds it difficult to read his notes. The responsibility for any inadvertence will therefore be readily adjusted.

Professor Gunning, of Cambridge, was introduced as the lecturer of the evening. Mr. Gunning is a typical scientist, and resembles Professor Tyndall in appearance. His voice is full and pleasing, and he is as familiar with his subject, seemingly, as it could be possible for a lecturer to become with anything so complex as "The Origin of Man as Disclosed by Science." A black cloth was arranged upon a frame attached to the piano, and the speaker began by drawing on this an outline of a primitiv brain, and adding to it until it represented the brain of man. Then the professor made a picture of a manlike ape and introduced him to the audience. This creature was found on the west coast of Africa. The next step higher was illustrated in the nativs of the south coast of Africa. The one was almost a physical duplicate of the other. The ape lacked the power of speech, but the "glick-gluck" of the gorrilla was the root of the language of the Hottentot. The opponents of evolution had contested the relationship of the man and ape, and had abandoned one point of defense after another, until finally the hippocampus in the brain of the human became their last resort. Professor Huxley had discovered this characteristic in the head of a monkey, and the last ground for disputing the kinship had vanished.

The speaker alluded to the muscles lying near the surface of the bodies of animals by which they could twitch their skin to drive away flies. Human beings hav vestiges of these muscles beneath their skin, but they hav gone out of use because the body is protected by clothing. They are still functional in the unclothed face. Everyone has employed them to scare flies off his forehead. We also hav dormant muscles once used to move the ears; but when manlike animals became lords of the forest and had no further need to turn their ears to detect the approach of an enemy, fearing none, these muscles became useless. A link between the bird and the fish is the nictitating or winking curtain which the shark draws over his eye, not being able to close that organ otherwise. Birds hav this nictitating curtain, or thin film-like web. So has the opossum. The next order above the opossum is the half ape, then the higher ape, then the manlike ape. In these latter the curtain gradually disappears, until, in the corner of the human eye, only a vestige of it is discernible. The man-like ape will imitate nearly all the acts of man. It will smoke like him, be sick after the first trial; and, like him, it will get drunk, but shows its superiority by not delivering a temperance lecture the next day. In some of the wild races of men the pliable prehensil foot is still retained; also the "climbing muscle," both relics of arborial life. It is not claimed that man is the offspring of the ape; only that man and the manlike ape spring from one ancestral body.

Professor Gunning dwelt at some length on the unity and similar characteristics of all organic things, and said, as an illustration, that an anesthetic produced the same slumber in the simple protoplasm or yeast bleb that it did in the brain of a human being. The lecturer closed with the expression of some tentativ views on the soul, in the present and future existence of which he is a believer. The president then said the floor was open, and admonished those present to let not the time run to waste.

Mr. Putnam improved the opening to suggest a remuneration for the speaker, and fifteen dollars was the result of the collection immediately instituted.

Dr. Atkinson followed. He complimented the performance of Mr. Gunning, and then passed to some general remarks. The reporter watched attentivly to catch the central thought, but failed to grasp it before the doctor made his obeisance and sat down.

Mr. Rosenbourgh arose to discuss the problem of the human soul. If man had a soul, so had the manlike ape. Otherwise it was a thing with which man had invested himself. To this latter view Mr. Rosenbourgh strongly inclined. He believed it was invented by priests and rulers to gain control over their subjects by threatening or alluring them with future punishments and rewards.

Dr. Gunn was solicited to speak, but he declined on the ground that at the next meeting he was going to talk all the evening.

Vice-president Dr. Foote, Jr., addressed himself to the question of rudimentary organs, drawing an outline sketch of the appendix vermiformis, which is a small sack opening out of the large intestin. In this sack some hard substance was liable to lodge and produce peritonitis. The object or utility of the appendix vermiformis had never been made clear by the researches of science. The doctor showed further that the ear-moving muscles were still functional in some cases. He presented his left ear to the audience and flapped it slightly without apparent fatigue.

Dr. P. P. Field, the apostle of the Delsarte philosophy of expression, spoke of the necessity of physical culture. The difference between man and brute lay in the fact that man had a straight and upright spine, which no beast possessed. Speaking of the long arms of apes, the doctor closed his hands and touched his clenched fists to the floor without bending the knees. This came from suppleness of the muscles of the back, which should be cultivated.

Mrs. Emertz here arose to inquire whether the doctors were to hav a monopoly of that platform. "Dese chendlemans forgots somedings," said the lady in a charming dialect, and with a clear and comprehensiv misunderstanding of the subject; "off dot corilla hass vunst broduzed a man, vy don'd he him agen braduze vunst more, aind it?"

Madam Delescluze supported the position of the previous speaker. She renounced all relationship with the gentleman whose likeness Professor Gunning had drawn on the chart. The descent of man from the ape was not yet proved, and she demanded the benefit of the doubt. Hoping for better things, we should cling to that hope with desperation.

Mrs. Leonard was not ashamed to acknowledge kinship with her grandfather. "I like to watch the monkeys in the Park," she said; "and I discover characteristics in them which I hav myself." About the soul, Mrs. Leonard continued, we should trouble ourselvs but little, but the body should be cultivated. Humanity, she believed, was capable of rising to great achievements, even to the overcoming of death.

Mr. Wakeman, at the request of Professor Gunning, closed the discussion. He held that the conclusions of the lecturer were indisputable. We were just beginning to realize the possibilities of humanity and to work in the direction of a heaven on earth. It should be remembered that the soul had been spoken of and dealt with by Mr. Gunning only tentativly, not scientifically. The hope that must be clung to with desperation could not tell a very flattering tale. Science must giv the final verdict.

Madam Delescluze: "You forget that science deals with the material, not with the essence."

Mr. Wakeman: "Produce the essence and science will deal with it."

The Masonic society which holds meetings in the hall over that occupied by the club here began, apparently, the initiation of a member, the noise created by the goat making further discussion impracticable, and as the hour was late the audience were dismissed.

Lectures at the club for the rest of the month will be as follows: Jan. 22d, "The Truth about Alcohol Out of and In the Human System," by R. A. Gunn, M.D. January 29th, the Paine celebration takes place, and an elaborate program has been prepared for the occasion.

Profitable Charity.

Verily the church hath a long head. The constitution of New York State having ruled out any special appropriations to sectarian institutions, the Catholic Protectory and Juvenil Asylum (Protestant) arranges with the liberal dispenser of the public funds to take care of unfortunate children at the rate of $110 per year, and according to THE TRUTH SEEKER list of apportionments for charitable institutions, the Protectory will make provision for 2,200 and require an appropriation of $242,000. It would be interesting to know how much actual profit there is in this "charitable" business. We may arrive at some idea of this from the thirty-third annual report of the Children's Aid Society, from which we learn that that society has cared for over 13,000 children at an average of only $37.90. If the children of the various lodging houses of the Aid Society cost only about $40 per year, either they must be kept on very short rations, or in order to spend $110 on the children of the Protectory the latter must liv high and be fed on the fat of the land. It is, however, more probable that this is a profitable business which is being worked for all it is worth in the name of charity, sweet charity. Of the $242,000 given the Catholic Protectory, it may be assumed, or at least inferred, that one-half is clear profit, the actual disposition of which it would be difficult to discover, and the same is to be said of the $104,000 allotted to the New York Juvenil Asylum—a Protestant institution and business competitor of the Protectory.

E. B. FOOTE, JR.

Cost the Limit of Price (?).

While generally approving the views of Mr. Lloyd in a late TRUTH SEEKER, I protest, if you allow, against mixing up with Anarchism this equalitarian and arbitrary ruling, incompatible with the free range of personal contracts. The proper sphere of cost limitation is the protectiv union store, where it is provided for by the joint stock partnership of the associated customers. There it is definitly based upon the cost of purchased goods, and substitutes a definit salary for the speculativ profits of the merchant, no longer an intermediary owner. Warren, without the support of a stockholding company, illustrated the feasibility of this method, whose success at Rochdale has given it a great run in England and also on the continent of Europe. No doubt sensible Anarchists may adopt this commercial method, and may develop from it the feature of a labor and produce exchange currency independent of specie or government money. For this it is only necessary that the stock company should embrace a sufficient number and variety of producers to substitute exchange for importation and reduce outside purchases to an insignificant figure, or else export as well as import. Between such organization of the cost limit in commerce, and its affirmation as an ethical principle in all contracts for mutual service, there is an important difference. Anarchism cannot take for granted that Anarchists will choose to forego natural advantages of faculty, strength, skill, and judgment, and adopt in exchange of services the time table level of hour for hour. Whether from a generous carelessness, or from religious principle, some persons of superior faculty may be satisfied with their recognition by honors, without profits, and the spontaneous evolution of this type of character will be more frequent in proportion as the means of livelihood are facilitated by the abolition of monopoly and extortion. Also in proportion as wealth is socialized by architecture, public gardens, galleries of art, libraries, games, music, and the drama, the motivs for private advantage in the exercise of talents are lessened.. Anarchists may contemplate such equalitarian tendencies with complacency, but Anarchism does not prescribe them.

Anarchism opposes arbitrary government, class privilege, the monopolies of the means of subsistence by use of the soil and of machinery. These iniquities abated, we remain in presence of very unequal faculties directed toward the acquisition of property, and whose more liberal education concerns the future of society.

Let us scrutinize the economic value of the cost measure in exchange of services or products. It assumes that labor is the basic factor, but this labor cost is a highly variable element of price. Skill lessens it, and judgment in the use of faculties, as well as invention, may in great measure obviate the cost of labor. Now, as skill and judgment are always most desired, and as from their comparativ rarity they are less subject to reductiv competition than simple labor, they may please to demand and obtain more than compliments and honors. Skill is judgment in the details of execution giving either a greater quantity or a better quality of product with the same or less labor cost at the time. This skill may be either a natural endowment or the result of previous persevering and laborious disciplin. Persons equally skilled in presence of a given work are very unequal then in the labor cost antecedent.

Strength is analogous to skill, and its differences between men baffle all attempts to appreciate cost by effort in the most ordinary physical labors. What is hard to one is easy to another, and averages must be arbitrary in their bearings on the individual. Price results from the comparison of desires between the bargainers, as is sensible in transactions by barter. The basis of price is demand. Demand proceeds from the purchaser; it is constituted by his desire for an object, modified by his means of payment. But as, with the same demand and means, there may be choice among offers of service, their competition reduces price. We trace this back to the producer's desire for other values which he may acquire with the price received. When these are necessaries, his offer of labor-cost is limited only by life, and the cheapest-liver will be employed. This is the Chinese and "contract labor" issue.

Marx, although not speculating upon the continuance of the wage labor system under capitalism, yet seems to hav written under its influence when he calculates the hour rates of payment in divers occupations by the relativ averages of life in each. But is it to be supposed that with free access to the soil and wholesome farm work, workmen would be found enlisting for consumption by breathing steel dust, or for paralysis and colica pictonum by working in white lead?

What will Rothschild's quicksilver mines be worth to him without the privileged monopoly that he derives from government, and the other monopolies that push labor into his hades? Such industries must either be abandoned, or hygienic methods devised.

For the services of science and art, compensation by the hour is simply absurd, and as intellectual labor is favorable to longevity, so upon this plan the Humboldts, Agassizes, and Darwins ought to be rated lower than the average mechanic.

It is felt that such systems are only viable in little corners, and that a country adopting them would soon be deserted by its talent and enterprise. They bear the stamp of petty despotism, and if feasible in exchanges of factory labor, this is because of a disciplin like the equality of drilled soldiers, which, though congenial with state Socialist ideas, is antipodal to Anarchism. The system of exchanges by equal hours of work supposes a continual preoccupation with bookkeeping, as well as conscientiousness and reliance on the conscientiousness of others—an industrial world going by clock-work, the apotheosis of mediocrity over the grave of ambition; speculation of closet philosophy which the passions will explode.

EDGEWORTH.

The Chicago Union.

The Chicago Liberal League met on Friday evening, January 8th, and reorganized under the name of Secular Union. Although it had adopted the name of Secular Union since the last Convention held at Cleveland, it had never until now been organized under that name. A new election of officers took place, the following persons being elected: Mr. Chas. Orchardson, president; Mrs. A. M. Freeman. first vice-president; Mr. L. H. Sawyer, second vice-president; Mr. C. A. Fraenkle, third vice-president; Mrs. Ella LePage, secretary; Mr. A. M. Freeman, financial secretary; Mr. E. A. Stevens, treasurer. The Union here is upon a much better basis than ever before. The attendance at our meetings is increasing, and in time we expect to be recognized among the best in the land. Last Sunday evening we had a lecture from Mrs. A. M. Freeman on, "Things I Can't Understand," which was a very able and eloquent appeal to the judgment and common sense of those present How any man or woman can listen to the absurd stories of the Bible as shown up by the lecturer, and go away unconvinced of the absurdities of their religion, is more than I can understand. The attendance at Mrs. Freeman's lecture was large, considering the very cold weather, as it was the coldest night we hav had this winter.

On Paine's anniversary, we are to hav an entertainment and dance. The oration of the evening is to be delivered by Mrs. A. M. Freeman, and we hav some very fine talent selected for our music and recitations. We are working hard to make this a grand success, and all indications are that we will do so.

ELLA LE PAGE, Secretary.

Chicago, Jan. 12, 1886.

A Reminiscence of Elizur Wright.

In 1846 a few of the old Liberty party refused to "fuse" with the Free Soilers and Barn-Burners, and met in national convention at Buffalo in June of that year. Our leaders were Gerrit Smith, Elizur Wright, George Bradburn, Beriah Green, William Goodell, and Frederick Douglass. We not only adhered to Abolitionism, but went in for free trade, land reform, woman suffrage, etc., etc.

By the way, this was the first convention, so far as I am aware, to put forth in its platform (penned by Gerrit Smith) the doctrin of woman suffrage. This it did in terms square, bold, and unequivocal. And in that little band of stern radicals there was not a dissenting voice. The "Woman's Convention," which has had the honor of being the first to announce woman suffrage, met the same year, but not till several weeks later.

We nominated Gerrit Smith for president. After the nomination Elizur Wright gave us the following impromptu:

Smiths hav wrought since time began,
Sometimes forging chains for man;
Ours who now the anvil smites,
Cuts the chains from human rights.
We will blow for him to strike,
For he treats all chains alike;
Severed by his trusty hand,
Fall they both from limb and land.

FRANCIS BARRY.

Kent, Ohio.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$1,796.57
Dallas (Texas) Secular Society (charter fee, per George Cretien)	5.00
Jas. Wardwell	1.00
Louisa A. Tourley	1.00
C. F. De Mott	1.00
Mrs. C. F. De Mott	1.00
Henry H. Geer	1.00
Joseph Carman	1.00
Mrs. Joseph Carman	1.00
Total	$1,808.57

Grand Paine Celebration,

Friday evening, Jan. 29th,
At German Masonic Hall, No. 220 East 15th street.
Address by T. B. WAKEMAN:
"THE POLITICAL AND SOCIAL DREAMS OF THOMAS PAINE."
To be followed by a
Brilliant Musical and Dramatic Entertainment, in which the following will take part, already well known in Liberal circles:

Joseph Frankel, Gustave Frankel, Mrs. L. McCune, Mrs. Fannie Cummings, Frank Fitch, the Krahmer brothers, Miss Annie Lenont, Madam Delescluze, Prof. P. P. Field, and others.

The admission will be 25 cents. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the American Secular Union. Every New York Liberal should take special interest in this celebration, both to honor the memory of and raise funds for the carrying on the work of the Union, especially to enable it to push the movement for the opening of the museums on Sunday, which is gaining great force, and will no doubt result in a noble triumph for Secular principles. So it is earnestly requested not only that every Liberal man and woman come, but make an effort to hav others come, so that a large number may be present and a great impulse received for the work of Liberalism.

THOMAS PAINE

All friends will be interested in the following news from Nova Scotia, from one of the members of the Union who on the frontier line keeps the battle going. He shows how much is yet to be done, and what great promis there is for the future:

NEW GLASGOW, N. S., Jan. 5, 1886.

DEAR FRIEND PUTNAM: Your letter of Dec. 3d was received in due time. I cannot say that Freethought is making much progress in this vicinity. This portion of Nova Scotia is very orthodox, and there are but few Liberals. I know of only two or three outspoken ones in all Eastern Nova Scotia, and I am well acquainted in every part of it. I know quite a number who are secretly with us, but who, owing to the state of society, hav not the courage to say so. I am often surprised, when I am talking to persons who are thought to be good Cristians, to hav them tell me that they hav their doubts, and that they cannot believe that God did the dreadful things charged against him in the Bible. I think if we can only make Liberalism fashionable, that we shall be surprised at the number who are with us.

I attended the Congress at Cleveland, and listened to a number of addresses and Colonel Ingersoll's lecture. I think he is one of the grandest men living. I hav read all his published works. Long may he liv to champion the noble cause! I think Mr. Shaw's address was splendid, and think it should be published in pamphlet form and widely distributed. I should like a quantity of them to distribute. If you hav anything that I can do to help along the good work, don't hesitate to command me, for, remember, I am not afraid. I would send some cash for literature to distribute, but I am a subscriber to the Boston Investigator and I circulate a good many back numbers of that paper, and that takes all the cash I hav to spare just now. I feel much interested in your present work of getting the museums, etc., open on Sunday, and wish you success. They certainly can't keep it off much longer. I hav many a battle with the Christians here, and yet I can't trace the loss of a cent in my business or a single social slight to my advocacy of Freethought. I may be exceptionally fortunate, but such is my experience, and my views are well known to all with whom I come in contact. I get THE TRUTH SEEKER regularly. Wishing you and yours a happy and prosperous New Year, and success to Liberalism,

Yours very truly, F. M. BORDEN.

Friend Reynolds, in Utah, also sends messages from another field of progress. Evidently the western branch of Liberalism has plenty of life in spite of all the difficulties that surround it—perhaps because of those very difficulties which exist in a new country it has more of the spirit of go-ahead. I hope the tremendous fervor of the West will pulse through and break up into new forms the too much stratified life of the East.

Charles F. Blackburn, of Kaysville, Utah, writes:

A few days ago I took one hundred copies of Investigator and THE TRUTH SEEKER and distributed them to quite a number of the "Saints." It remains to be seen whether the "Holy Ghost" or the papers will beat in the case. I hav strong faith in the papers.

Geo. C. Viele, of Fillmore, Utah, writes:

FRIEND REYNOLDS: I called a business meeting of the Union here for the purpose of laying before it the matter of Mr. Putnam's tour. We came to this conclusion, that there are not more than four or five of us to do anything; therefore, we cannot pledge any money, but would see that Mr. Putnam was received at R. R. terminus and conveyed here and lodged free of charge while among us; and further we would find a hall for him in which to speak, and see that his coming was advertised properly. Beyond this we will do all we can, and we would like to hav Mr. Putnam with us. But little may seem to be accomplished at the time, still that little may make a ripple on the water that will touch some distant shore, or rouse some drowsy sentinel. There never was, in my estimation, a time when there was such urgent need of light in these valleys as just now; and a judicious outlay would undoubtedly bring a rich reward. I think we could make Utah one of the most Liberal places in the Union. The Nine Demands do not interfere with any man's religious rights. They proclaim equal liberty to all; special privileges to none. It givs one a chance to form any theory he please, so he does not practice that which infringes the liberty of his neighbor.

There are many hundreds of places like Fillmore where there are a few Liberals who would like to hear a lecture from those who represent the Freethought of the country, but who cannot pledge anything above expenses for such a lecture. It is to such places that the secretary desires mainly to go in order to unfold the material so that a larger work may come in the future. For this purpose we hav the campaign fund so that by a combination of all the Liberals of the land these weak places may be built up to strength and progress. Where Liberals are sufficiently prosperous to guarantee a fair remuneration to lecturer, they can secure the services of such lecturers as Remsburg, Reynolds, Burnham, Bell, Jamieson, Watts, Prof. Gunning, Helen H. Gardener, and Mrs. Krekle, who must, in almost every case, receive something above the expenses. When this cannot be done with justice to all, let the few but earnest Liberals who are willing to do what they can apply to the secretary of the Union, who will do all in his power to traverse these pioneer fields through the opportunity offered by national co-operation.

A. Larsen, of Deweyville, writes:

I had almost hoped that Mr. Putnam might be with us this month in order that we might hold our Convention on the 29th, the anniversary of the birthday of the noble hero, Thomas Paine. But we will not stop agitating, and sometime during the winter we must hold the meeting.

W. O. Williams, of Taache City, writes:

I hav called on some Liberals, and spoken to them about organization. I hav promises from two Liberals to aid in the matter. I am told that there are other Liberals in the neighborhood, and I will hunt them up. We may be able to organize here this year, for I find the interest in Liberalism increasing.

R. Clawson, of Ephraim, writes:

FRIEND REYNOLDS: Your letter of the 31st is before me. I must say that it givs me renewed hope and determination to strike for freedom when I read your letters in connection with encouraging words from other friends. I hav been doing what little I can to spread Liberal ideas, and circulate Freethought papers and pamphlets. I hav gained some ground, and some good and true friends, and a host of fanatical enemies. However, the prospect for the future is bright. There are a good many Freethinkers in this county. What is wanted is some interesting speaker to stir us to activity. I hope that Mr. Putnam will come. I want him to deliver lectures all through this county. He will be appreciated by the majority of the people.

Robert Wilson writes from Ogden:

Liberal friends here will make arrangements for Mr. Putnam's lecture. We must giv it as large an advertisment as possible, so that its influence may be felt. Yes, we need organization in this territory, but to accomplish that we must hav assistance, and a united force.

With such calls as these, and a wide field, the secretary must go to Utah, and this he will do as soon as he has delivered his ammunition to the directors of the museums and the legislature at Albany. Then for the boundless West with all its glorious possibilities. The world is a-making there, and we must put in the element that shall constitute it the grandest cosmos in the history of the world.

The Hornellsville Secular Society has organized with the following officers: Louis Bieger, pres.; Chas. J. Patten, 1st vice-pres.; Carl S. Hendershott, 2d vice-pres.; Chas. Couderman, sec.; Stephen Caston, assist.-sec; Geo. Couderman, treas. Charles Couderman writes that the organization is progressing finely.

The Dallas Secular Society has organized with the following officers: President, J. C. Hart; vice-president, R. Edmonds; sec. and treas., George Critien; executiv committee, J. Jackson, R. R. Herned, R. Edmonds.

The secretary writes: "We meet every Sunday at 3 P.M. The majority of those who attend the meetings are quite interested in the movement."

So far this year there are 100 annual members, 10 new life members, and 3 new societies. This shows that success is bound to come, and the record for this year will no doubt be better than that of any previous year. The world moves, and the American Secular Union moves with it.

Prof. W. D. Gunning lectured last Friday evening before the Liberal Club to a large and delighted audience. He is one of the most interesting and best-equipped speakers on the Liberal platform. He is a thorough-going radical thinker, one of the foremost scientific students in the country. His language is felicitous and full of meaning. He givs light and color to dry scientific data. Every Liberal organization in the country should secure his services upon the platform, both for their own benefit and for the noble presentation of truth, as we understand it, to the general public.

I lectured on Sunday evening before the New York Spiritualist Association on "The Demands of Humanity." Dr. Gunn and Burnham Wardwell followed with interesting addresses, in which the wants and social needs of man to-day were eloquently emphasized.

The Central Labor Union, backed by 50,000 working people of the city, hav forwarded to the American Secular Union a series of resolutions to be presented to the directors for the opening of the museums on Sunday. The working people realize where truth and justice are, and will be our allies to the end.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Communications.

The Religion of Humanity.

The first New York celebration of the "Festival of Humanity" was held under the auspices of the Society of Humanists on Friday evening, Jan. 1, 1886, at the establishment of M. Van den Nyden, 102 West Eleventh street, New York city. The dining room was most artistically decorated. Between seventy and eighty persons sat down to a substantial repast, and when the cloth was removed, toasts were responded to by Mr. Claude Rodd, Edward King, and others. The president, Hugh McGregor, in response to the toast of the London Positivist Society, read the following address written specially for the occasion by Mr. Frederic Harrison:

NEWTON HALL, LONDON, ENGLAND,
Newton, year 97, Dec. 16, 1885.

I.

It was with no small pleasure that the Positivist Society of London heard of the intention of their Positivist brothers in New York to meet at the opening of a new year, that they might commemorate the onward march of humanity, confirm their hopes and their belief, and kindle anew the sense of sympathy and brotherhood. A faith in the power and destinies of our common humanity would be a truly ridiculous affectation if it were consciously confined to one corner of the civilized world, or to one country, or race, or class of men. It is not so with us. The living spirit of humanity kindles in all to whom it comes a natural and instinctiv feeling of our human brotherhood, in the glow of which all kinds of divisions, limitations, exclusions, antipathies, fade away. Humanity creates a brotherhood purer, deeper, and stronger than ever was yet dreamed in any religion, in any patriotism, in any community. For, alone of all the harmonizing forces, humanity repudiates all kinds of exclusion, of race, of country, of class, of sect. The theologies, and Christendoms, and Godhoods of old time hav taught men many good things, and hav inspired many noble deeds; so too hav patriotism and Socialism, and many another form of generous fraternity and equality. But they hav all taught men as well to hate and attack all those who refused to stand within their fold. Christians burn with hostility to the Infidel; Deists despise the heathen; patriots curse the enemies of their country; Socialists preach the extermination of the rich; and the brotherhood of man in the mouths of Anarchists too often means the slaughter of their own fathers' sons. Even the republic, that name of the activ commonwealth sacred in the eyes of all Positivists after humanity itself, too often requires a rooted hostility to other types of society. Humanity alone is able to embrace all human good or force, to unite all men, and to fuse all classes, all sects, and all peoples. Humanity is far more than the brotherhood of man, for it reminds us of all the human races in the past, as well as in the future. It is coextensiv with the planet itself, and coeval with civilization in the sum.

Hence it is a comfort and an inspiration to all of us who seek to renew our lives by the light of trust in humanity to feel that in so many countries and cities there are gatherings of men and women, meeting on the same day, with so many languages, and with past history so different, but all converging to one idea, and filled by the same hopes. In London we meet at several places; in Manchester, in Liverpool, in Birmingham, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, in Leicester, and in many other spots; so too in France—in Paris, in Hâvre, in Rouen, in Bordeaux, in Lyons, in Marseilles; in Holland; also in Denmark, in Sweden, in Hungary. So, too, in Russia our devoted friend, Mr. Frey, is carrying on his courageous teaching. Across the Atlantic, in the Eastern and in the far Western states and territories, and in Canada, the same spirit is at work; and in sundry places in India, in China, and in Japan.

We meet to fill our minds with the immensity of humanity amongst living men, and also with the permanence of humanity, since the days of the rude men—men who lived in caves and fought bears and mammoths; and with the boundless future of humanity, when all these miserable distinctions of church, sect, class, nationality, association, and party shall be enlarged into the supreme brotherhood of Humanity; when the color of the skin, or the function in the public work of industry, or the dross of gold or land-wealth, or the language spoken, or the area of our city or state, or the faith that we acknowledge, shall no longer separate man from man, but all men shall be equally children of our mother Humanity, and classed only by the value of their service given to Humanity.

II.

In the accounts we hav received in London of the formation of the Positivist group in New York, nothing has given us greater satisfaction than to see that it is entirely spontaneous, free, and self-formed. In our eyes all healthy Positivism is essentially spontaneous and free. It is the only really spontaneous religion now extant. It is not and cannot be a faith or superstitious dogma, imposed by authority from without, and accepted or submitted to in blind trust that good will come out of obedient discipleship. All modern religions are so taught and propagated. And most modern systems of political or social regeneration are imposed from without by eager and powerful natures acting on weaker ones, in blind trust, or with, at best, belief in a doctrin that is very simple and easily grasped, right or wrong.

Positivism, by its nature, is nothing of the kind. It means the acceptance, upon conviction, of positiv truths, all at any time capable of demonstration. "Positivism" is a French word meaning the "habit of trusting to what has been and can be proved." Positivism, to translate it freely, means "the scientific faith; the habit of resting our lives and our beliefs on solid, provable certainties that we can understand and teach to others." Hence it excludes all blind trust in authority, and all cut-and-dried formulas. No man can be a real Positivist unless he is convinced of certain scientific truths; and as these truths are numerous and lie in many different spheres, partly intellectual, partly moral, partly practical, and belong to philosophy, to politics, and to personal duty and conduct, no man can be a convinced Positivist all of a sudden by such an inspiration or emotion as what is called "conversion" in religious communities, and sometimes in Socialist communities. Positivism does not jump down a man's throat or flash into his brain in a minute. It is a habit of mind, a frame of heart, a type of character, slowly formed by reflection, practice, and experience. The Christian missionary is fond of converting a whole meeting in a sermon or two. The converted believer cries out (often in a state of mere excitement), "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief!" and he would find it very difficult to put in rational words what he believed, or what he ought to do in consequence of his belief. The whole thing is a rather hysterical spasm, and thus it is that after a few loud sermons and some louder and noisier hymns, and often drums, whole crowds of people, bad, good, and indifferent, are said to be converted in a week. Some of the political and Socialist propagandists act in a similarly spasmodic way. Now, Positivism, being in its terms "scientific conviction," and practical purpose of living a definit life to a given end, does not seek to convert in this way. Conviction must ripen slowly, and character, to be efficient, must be formed by effort and practice. And a humane heart and spirit must come by a long habit of humane sympathy in act, word, and thought. A true Positivist would rather say: "Humanity, I believe, after examination; and what I do not understand I do not believe, but I will try to understand by further inquiry, and in the mean time I will try to act up to what I do understand." That seems to me more the key-note of a Positivist prayer, meaning by prayer, "The inward resolution to act outwardly up to our highest ideal of right."

We never seek to hasten a Positivist conviction. It would not be conviction if we did. Most of our most zealous brothers hav deliberately occupied themselvs for years in reflection and in satisfying their minds. Nor do we care if we only number here and, there a few hundreds. Those few hundreds, if they hav conviction and energy, will impress their belief on others by thousands and thousands. We are not in a hurry, and wish to avoid all pressure on others. We do not seek to disturb any man's sincere religious belief if he is comfortable in it, and it enables him to liv a right life. We do not think that those who are not Positivists are going to hell, or are in a bad way, or are not doing their duty to humanity in honest ways as useful citizens. All honest men are servants to humanity, all are children of humanity, and all are promoting the ultimate triumph of humanity, whether they know it or not, and whether they cling to one of the old beliefs or not. After all, the simple spirit of the gospel is a part of the Religion of Humanity, and so is the sympathetic spirit of Socialism. Both Evangelicals and Socialists would be better and stronger men, I think, if they gave up the cruder and narrower dogmas that separate them from their fellows, and if they could recognize the larger truths and inspirations of humanity. But in the mean time, though they cling to a narrower platform, we can recognize the good in them. Positivism, in fact, is the most free, the most sure, the most spontaneous, and most humane form of all belief, because its true dominant ideas are scientific certainty and humanity as a whole, and these two ideas exclude all superstition, coercion, dogmatism on the one side, and all sectarianism and sectional prejudice on the other.

III.

But, when we speak of conviction and scientific certainty, we assuredly do not mean that Positivism can only admit learned persons, or that it is merely a new kind of philosophy. On the contrary it is essentially a moral and social regeneration, based on philosophical certainties, and leading to political and practical reforms. But the philosophy is merely in its doctrinal basis, and the political reforms are in its future hopes and ideals. On the one hand, it does not mean that all Positivists must be philosophers, nor that all regeneration must lie in political reforms. The center and essence of Positivism lies in a humane life of sympathy and practical duty—in the spirit of its cardinal precept, "Life for others." "Liv for others" is the core of the Religion of Humanity, and everyone with a good heart and manly character can act up to this without being a philosopher, without being learned, or rich, or powerful. The most hardly-worked toiler, the most ignorant. the most unhappy, can act up to this, do their duty, and feel happier and nobler by doing it. We, most of us, however hard or lonely be our lot, hav homes, family, friends, comrades. We hav parents, sisters, brothers, wives, children, companions, fellow-citizens. We can, most of us, help our own family, do our duty in our own homes, improve our own knowledge, bring up our own offspring, influence our own neighbors, animate our fellows, work for a great cause, and feel the nobler for a great ideal by trying to know humanity better, to liv more vividly the lives of servants of humanity, and by sustaining our purposes by the hope of humanity. If we do this honestly, unflinchingly, and intelligently, then we are good Positivists, and none can be better.

But, although Positivism has a central essential precept, Liv for others, and a central dominant ideal, Humanity, it is not to be supposed that this is all, and that it stops there. This is enough for those whose lot is at present so hemmed about by hard necessity that they can get at no more. But it is only enough, whilst others are working to get at more, and to make Positivism a reality as a whole. Positivism is not to be reduced, like the gospel of Christ, or the Sermon on the Mount, to a simple precept such as "Love and fear God, and do unto your neighbor as you would be done by." Positivism in saying, "Liv for others," has expanded all this into a set of solid and practical precepts adapted to our life at home, in public, in industry, in education, in politics—showing what we ought to do and why we ought to do it, in our conduct toward our parents, wives and husbands, children, friends, and the public. It has shown what we ought to learn, wherein and how to learn it, how and in what spirit we ought to work, what the state ought to do for us, and what we ought to do for the state. Altogether, it has offered a complete practical sketch of the best type of home, of education, of work-shop, of farm, of school, of church, of health, of republic, of club, of government, of senate and representation, of municipality and city. It givs a type of the way in which citizens may liv a healthy, moral, industrious, useful, religious, social, and patriotic life. All this is not imposed by authority of any pope, priest, king, or dictator, but a free scheme of life to be accepted on conviction, resting on evidence, argument, and proof. No man is asked to adopt it, unless or until it satisfies his reason and his sympathies. Nor is it contended, as we contend in Newton Hall, that all this mass of educational, social, political, and moral precept has to be formally acknowledged as binding before any man can be reckoned a real Positivist. That is not how we read Auguste Comte, or teach his reading to others. We say, here are the types of life he recommends, and here are the reasons on which he recommends them. You can adopt them as far as you are honestly persuaded, or can follow his reasoning. If that reasoning does not convince you, do not pretend that it does. But the scheme holds together all of a piece, that you cannot pick out here and there bits that you like, that it all rests on a mass of ideas in history, science, and philosophy to which you probably never gave a thought in your life. Wait, ponder, inquire, and compare, mindful always that a regeneration of human life and thought was not designed by Auguste Comte exactly according to the point of view of American citizens in the year 1886; that there were tens of thousands of years of human life before 1886, and millions and millions of keen, earnest, brave souls who lived neither in America nor in Europe.

We do not ask a convinced Positivist to acccept all that may be found in the mass of Comte's writings. That we think would be treason against Positivism and scientific proof. It will be enough if a convinced Positivist intelligently accepts the great Positivist precepts with all that they imply. In the moral and essential sphere, "Liv for others," liv in activ employment of your social faculties and instincts. In the intellectual world, rest in "Order and progress;" that is, rest in demonstrativ knowledge and in view of human improvement. In the political and social sphere, "Liv without concealment;" i. e., make your life a pattern to your neighbor, and seek to guide him through his reason, and never to effect a good end by secrecy, fraud, or conspiracy.

In behalf of our London Society of Newton Hall, I offer you a brotherly welcome in your young movement, and wish you a good work of it in the name of Humanity. FREDERIC HARRISON,
President Positivist Com. of London.

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is sent free to any address upon application.

The Bruno Statue.

The opening of the year is the proper time for a further report in regard to the Bruno statue at Rome. The subscriptions received will be found below, amounting to a total of $251.88 on the second instalment, which, with the first instalment of $200 (forwarded), makes $451.88. This leaves $548.12 to be subscribed before the $1,000 promised from America is made up.

As to the nature and progress of the undertaking at Rome, an accident has enabled me to lay before the public very satisfactory information. The accident was the loss of a letter to me from the committee at Rome. This led me, about two months ago, to write to our fellow-citizen, Daniel G. Thompson, Esq., well-known in our city as a lawyer, and to our scholars as the author of a very able work on Psychology, and other books, and who was then at Florence on his way to Rome. I requested him to make thorough inquiry as to this whole undertaking, and particularly as to the four points which are covered by his report. We could not hav had a more competent or a more devoted inquirer. He was afforded every facility by Judge Stallo, our minister to Italy; by many well-known citizens of Rome, and especially by the committee itself, and he writes as follows:

ROME, Dec. 20, 1885.

I met with Dr. Giovanni Amici, the secretary, and about a dozen other members of the working committee, with whom I had a very pleasant interview. They showed me the books, with the amount you sent credited, and informed me that a letter had been sent to you acknowledging the receipt, and answering your inquiries. I gather the following as the results of my attention to the subject:

1. The local members of the International Honorary Committee are men of high character and position. The list includes some of the very best men in Rome. How far they are giving personal attention to the scheme I do not know. The work is mainly done by the Committee Universal Central, consisting of students. These young men I met and was much pleased with their appearance. I presume they consult with the members of the Honorary Committee, and act under the advice of the latter. Of course these students hav their careers yet before them, but they are all men of respectable standing.

2. No application has been made to the authorities for permission to erect the monument. The explanation of this which was given to us by the committee is that they hav no apprehension of a refusal, but they desire to wait until enough is subscribed to substantially insure the success of the enterprise before applying for the requsit leave. Already they hav on their books about 9,000 francs, and they expect to need from 25,000 to 30,000. It is the opinion here that no difficulty whatever will be experienced in getting the consent of the municipality to the use of the Campo de Fiori for this purpose.

3. The time of commencement and completion is thus as yet left indefinit. It will depend upon the success of the subscription. This insured, there is little doubt of the work being pressed by the committee, whose members seem very enthusiastic.

4. The Campo de Fiori is for Rome a more than usually large public square entirely inclosed with building. It is in a very good part of one of the poorer quarters of the town. There are some fine buildings not far off, but none immediately upon the square. It might perhaps be compared to Tompkins Square in New York, although there is no park and the square is much smaller; but I mean as to relativ character of the surroundings. There is one line of omnibuses passing, though no tramways, but many other vehicles of all sorts constantly. It is used for a vegetable market on one side. There is a fountain near the center, but no other embellishment. The Bruno monument will look well there. The square is large enough to giv a good effect.

I believe this covers the points respecting which you wished for information. I see no reason for abating any effort you may be putting forth, or for doubting that the scheme will go through.

I encouraged the committee all I could by words and also by a small subscription. Judge Stallo, too, said he thought he should send them something.

The address of the committee seems to hav been changed to No. 119 Governo Vecchio. They hav a room at the latter place.

I leave Rome in a day or two, but if I can serve you further in this or anything else, I am always yours to command.

Sincerely yours, DANIEL G. THOMPSON.

T. B. Wakeman, Esq.

The letter of the committee referred to by Mr. Thompson was received by me a few days before his came to hand. The information it givs is so similar to his report that it is only proper to add a few additional items:

1. They assure us that the municipality has been thoroughly sounded on the subject, and that there is no doubt that the site for the statue will be formally granted just as soon as the fund collected is large enough to insure its erection. When this grant is made, the statue passes under the protection and guarantee of the city, and its safety and permanence are secured ever after. The plan of having a corporate society to own the site and statue is not practicable under Italian law.

2. The idea that the papacy could at any time or in any way prevent the erection of this statue, or cause the removal, is scouted as absurd. (Such a result, it seems, might occur in America, but not now in Rome.)

3. The work has been laid out and the design much improved by the artist, owing largely to the enlarged contribution promised from America, for which the committee express their warmest gratitude.

4. The time of the erection depends upon the increase of the subscription. They still hope to lay the corner-stone this winter, and to hav the inauguration on the anniversary of Bruno's execution, Feb. 16, 1887, at which event they hope and expect America to take part.

So much for Italy. In this country we hav made but little progress with the subscription during the last three months. The amounts should be increased much more rapidly. They will be at once deposited so as to be perfectly safe, and will be reported at Rome so as to count as a part of the subscription on the strength of which the grant of the site is to be obtained. As soon as the grant is made the amount will be forwarded. The money will in this way at once urge on and secure the purpose for which it is given, without being beyond control, until the grant of the site is actually secured.

Two events remain to be mentioned: the sudden death of Hon. Elizur Wright, who was a member of our committee, one of our most liberal contributors, and one of the most earnest promoters of our undertaking. Even the busy world stopped a moment to add its tribute of respect to the works and memory of this good and glorious old man. But to those who had become accustomed for years to look to him for help and cheer in every word and work for liberty, at home or abroad, the loss is irreparable. He had been so long with us that we had forgotten to expect his death. He had already joined the immortals by his deeds before death came to make his immortality secure. His spirit will liv with and work for us in our efforts to make liberty a reality by reversing the sentence of Bruno and placing his statue in the Eternal City!

We hope that Mr. Walter C. Wright, in every sense the son of his father, will take his place on our committee.

The other untoward event we hav to note is the unfortunate illness which has prevented Col. R. G. Ingersoll from giving his lecture upon Bruno and from using his voice in public lectures at all of late. That this disability is temporary all friends of liberty will rejoice to hear. But we cannot ask him to lecture on Bruno, as he has promised to do, when he is unable to keep his own engagements.

Prof. Thomas Davidson has engaged to lecture for the fund in Brooklyn, and may in Boston and elsewhere if sufficient results are assured. He may be addressed at Orange, N. J., and his lecture on Bruno will be an event never to be forgotten in the life of anyone who is privileged to hear it.

The result is this: If we wish the Bruno monument erected over the place of his execution we must go right on putting up the money, and it will be done! The friends of liberty in Europe and America must do it. Let those who hav contributed, or hav not, lay the matter before their friends and send forward their subscriptions to me as early as possible. They will be reported at Rome so as to obtain the grant of the site, and be forwarded as soon as the grant is made.

T. B. WAKEMAN,
Authorized Agent, 93 Nassau st., New York.

New York, Jan. 4, 1886, Era of Man 286.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.

S. R. Urbino	$5.00
W. H. Kouther	1.00
Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Swan	1.00
S. P. Putnam	2.00
Owen T. Davies	1.00
W. H. Blow	1.00
Hussels & Brown	1.00
L. Lamb	2.00
R. Rowland	1.00
J. Guger	1.00
E. Puvene	1.00
J. Guilley	1.00
G. Rammelhaup	1.00
C. Brown	1.00
C. Thompson	1.00
M. Davis	1.00
R. Williams	1.00
W. Stevens	2.00
W. Roberts	2.00
	27.00
Previously acknowledged in THE TRUTH SEEKER	28.45
John P. Roe, of Cleveland,	5.00
Heretofore acknowledged on second instalment	191.43
Total	$251.88

The Great First Cause.

A friend says, "Why not call the first great cause, God?" To this query there are many objections. First, there is no single cause that is first or last. Where there is no beginning there can be no first; matter, being eternal "with all its powers and potency, cannot possibly hav any first, middle, or end."

The whole universe of matter, of suns, stars, and planets, seems to be composed of the same elements. And every atom of matter is instinct with life and energy.

Behind the atoms there is no one "great first cause," because there is no behind to that which has no beginning. We all hav a desire to know the beginning and the end. The science of teleology, of final causes, has a charm for the thinker, but it is impossible to search out what has no existence, and therefore the first cause and last cause are names that hav no meaning (as regards the vast whole). They are also almost meaningless when used in connection with single identities; for causes are so linked and combined that no one cause ever acts alone. No energy is created or lost; it is only transmuted or changed. All is conserved, and so, where nothing is created or lost, there is no need for a God.

The word god has millions of meanings. A friend was looking over my album one day and saw the photograph of an old man. He suddenly exclaimed, "That picture represents God as I always see him in my mind—even to his very dress."

Nearly all who believe in a God make him anthropomorphic, and indeed it is impossible to think of a "Superior Being" and hav him aught but human. All gods that are not beings are baseless shadows of nothingness.

To love and worship we need a being, and one of feelings like our own. Each man's god is only a superior image of his own best self.

This is why I want the very name erased from existence, and only matter left as the cause of all that is.

We do not want the "Unknowable," the "All-Being," the "Omnipresent Power," "The Deity," "The Infinit Person," or any other "Intelligent Designer." These are all mere names of some "being" that we repudiate. We want only matter and its evolutions.

We want what is, and not what dreamers fancy may be. It takes no God behind each atom or life-cell to form living organized existences.

The living energy and life in matter is all-sufficient for everything that is or will be. On our little earth progress seems to be the rule, and day by day human nature is improving—growing more kind, intelligent, tender, and humane.

As the love of cruelty dies out, wars and punishment will cease, and love and fraternity will grow and increase till men and women will be better than any God ever conceived of by the grandest mind yet evolved from the elements. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Watch Them.

Several years ago, some time in 1865 or thereabout, all books and small packages were carried by express companies. The companies reaped millions, and exacted without limit or conscience. They charged for carrying a Missouri Report, one volume, from St. Louis to this village three dollars. This was the last straw that broke the ass's back. Consequence was row, newspaper controversy. Express agent from Iowa came down to see Missouri man whose hog and hominy rations had made him dyspeptic and quarrelsome. Perhaps also he was not "trooly loil." Anyhow, agent assured man 'twas "all right, charges regular and customary." Man "cussed." Agent laughed at him. That laughter suggested an idea, and the man told the agent his "company should suffer for it." This put agent into such ecstasy that he returned to Iowa roaring and laughing all the way, first having requested man to inform him when "the sufferings would begin."

It happened the man had a few friends in Congress. Among others was his good old friend, Daniel S. Norton, senator for Minnesota, and a true man of the people. He wrote to Mr. Norton and asked him to get up a bill to permit the people to send books, packages, etc., of a few pounds weight, by mail. Mr. Norton pushed through a bill, just as Congress adjourned, to allow several pounds to pass through the mail far a sum ridiculously low. The result was, the mails were burdened, and express companies lost millions. Man wrote to agent and asked if the company's "sufferings had begun." Postmaster Cresswell was besieged by the express companies to hav bill repealed. He used all his efforts to hav it done, but instead of repeal it was modified. The people had a taste of this great blessing. For this one act the memory of the Hon. Daniel S. Norton deserves to be held in sacred remembrance by all people. Let it never be forgotten. But now, to-day, the express companies, through one of their hired agents in high place, are working to deprive us of this great blessing. He has asked Congress to repeal a beneficent act because it does not pay as yet. It don't pay because not one in a hundred knows of the privilege. If anything, the rate should be lowered.

The express companies which rob the railways of their legitimate business would deprive the people of this great privilege of sending packages of books and merchandise, etc., by mail.

It does not look well for our Democratic party that no sooner is it in power than one of its highest officials abuses his trust to plead in the interest of one of the most grasping, heartless of corporations. Not a word has he for the welfare of the people under the act. "It don't pay." No! It don't pay the express companies.

Now, Mr. Editor, and you, ye grand old audience of truth seekers—many tens of thousands ye are—I appeal to you. Watch this game! Write to your Congressmen and Senators. You can do as much as "any other man!" That is what your Senators and representativs are there for. Unless you do so, be sure the privilege will be taken from you. Already a disposition is shown in Congress to table and swamp every motion for the benefit of the poor women and children of our country, for those who are by four-fifths majority the masses. HOLT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 23, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of all the great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Trinity Church's Pest Holes.

The Constitution Club met on the evening of January 6th to hear the report of a committee appointed last November to "examin into the condition of the tenement houses of New York city." Dr. R. A. Gunn is chairman of the committee. He had, he said, made some notes of his explorations, which he would read:

"I hav been practicing," he said, "in this city for over ten years, and hav become thoroughly acquainted with the tenement house question. What I am going to tell you now is not, however, what I hav seen in past years, but what has come under my eyes in the past four weeks. In the first place, the law requiring the name of the owner or agent of the property to be posted in the hallway of each tenement house is, so far as I hav seen, never complied with. For this reason it is generally very difficult to find who is responsible for the terrible state of many buildings.

"I hav learned, however, that Trinity church is the owner of the worst tenement houses in the city. Trinity church has the universal reputation, I find, among the wretched people who are forced to liv in such places, of being the hardest and the meanest landlord in New York. The policy of the Trinity church corporation is to never make repairs on a tenement house they own, but to let it actually fall to pieces, until no one, however wretched, can liv in it. Then the corporation tears it down and builds a store or warehouse or a comparativly expensiv flat house. But it never spends its money to improve the condition of the poor. I may seem to be making sweeping accusations, but I know whereof I speak. Let anyone who wishes to verify my statements go, for example, to the building No. 34 Laight street, which is owned by Trinity church. The building runs through to Vestry street, and is inhabited by two hundred people. On the ground floor, on the Laight street side, is a liquor store, although Trinity church professes never to rent it to liquor-dealers. The building is in the most terrible condition imaginable. The floors of the halls are covered with filth from overflowed sinks and closets. The halls are so dark that it is almost impossible to see one's hand before one's face. The stairways are broken. The skylights on the top floor are kept fastened, and how any human being can liv in such a den it is difficult to imagin.

"No. 63 Watts street is another tenement house owned by Trinity, and rented to its occupants directly from Trinity's office. My attention was called to it by an outbreak of scarlet fever some months ago. The father of the sick children went to Trinity's office and complained of the defectiv plumbing. He was told that if he didn't like it he could get out. The cellar, gentlemen, was filled a foot deep with sewage that had leaked from the broken sewer pipes. The floors of the halls were so covered with filth from the same source that it deadened the sound of one's footsteps. The board of health was notified and was forced to order Trinity to make some repairs, as scarlet fever was a contagious disease.

"It has, however, been my experience," contiuued the doctor parenthetically, "that the board of health is an expensiv and useless institution. Time after time I hav notified them of glaring nuisances, and in almost every case my complaints hav been treated with supreme indifference. The great majority of my colleagues throughout the city will agree with me that this has also been their experience as far as the board of health is concerned. But to return to the tenement house question. On King street, between Varick and Hudson, is a whole row of wretched tenements owned by Trinity church. They are in the most deplorable condition, and their wretched occupants said that it would do no good to ask that anything be done, for they had asked in vain over and over again. At No. 522 Washington street is another specimen tenement which Trinity owns. Its condition is almost as bad as the rest of which I hav spoken."

Trinity church, it will be remembered, is the corporation which holds some $15,000,000 worth of property, $9,000,000 of which pays no taxes. The corporation derives an income of some $400,000 per annum from its holdings, most of which is paid by the tenement houses. The policy of the directors is to receive all and giv nothing. A few years ago about all of the houses owned by Trinity were let for gin-mills and infamous houses, but of late years the corporation has claimed that none of its property was occupied by other than reputable people. The investigations of Dr. Gunn—who, by the way, has for many years been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER—conclusivly prove that in making this claim the secretary of the corporation has been wilfully mistaken.

A friend givs us the further information that during the recent cold snap in this city a tenant of one of these wretched Trinity church dens was ejected for non-payment of thirty dollars rent, and his family and his few household goods placed upon the sidewalk. This was done under the personal inspection of one of the directors of the corporation. In another house owned by Trinity, the stairways were in such a rotten condition that a woman fell through, bruising her leg and causing an abscess to form upon her thigh. Since then, our friend, a member of the Constitution Club, says the corporation has expended a few dollars in repairing the stairway. How many more of such cases will come to the light through the investigations of the club is, of course, not known, but it is believed there will be many.

The barbarity of this Christian association controling such an immense amount of property is revolting. The Constitution Club will hav earned the heartiest thanks of all decent people if it can force these followers of the "meek and lowly Jesus" to pay some attention to the commonest requirements of civilization.

Bradlaugh in Parliament.

A despatch from London, dated the 13th inst., describes the swearing in of members of the new English Parliament. We clip that portion relating to the taking of the oath by Charles Bradlaugh:

"There was a crush of members offering themselvs to take the oath on the meeting of the House of Commons to-day. They were sworn in in batches. Among the crowd was Mr. Bradlaugh, who cordially shook hands with the speaker. Mr. Peel, before the swearing in of members began, said it was his duty to inform the house that he had received a letter from Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, chancellor of the exchequer and Conservativ leader of the House of Commons, regarding Mr. Bradlaugh, and giving a historical retrospect of the latter's case, which, Mr. Peel said, need not be read. The latter also said that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach thought that Mr. Bradlaugh should not be allowed to take the oath without the house being afforded a chance of expressing an opinion on the subject. He believed that the house, when fully constituted, would decline to sanction the administering of the oath to Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. Peel said that he was unable to recognize anything done by a previous Parliament in regard to the case of Mr. Bradlaugh, and he (the speaker) was powerless to prevent him from taking the oath. He could take the oath and take the risks of the law if any were involved. Mr. Bradlaugh stalked the floor of the house in a defiant manner, kissed the Bible unctuously, shook hands with the speaker smilingly, and drove away directly after being sworn in. He was heartily cheered as he departed from the building by a large crowd of his supporters who were gathered outside. There is a growing desire among the Conservativs not to exclude Mr. Bradlaugh from the House of Commons. It is believed that the government will not insist upon excluding him unless urged to do so."

In a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Bradlaugh says: "I hav always believed the Parliamentary oath to be fully, completely, and unreservedly binding upon my conscience."

As a lawyer winning his case we must congratulate Mr. Bradlaugh upon his success. From the standpoint of a Freethinker we do not precisely understand his position in this last statement.

The Museums Again.

The Christian papers and preachers of this city hav suddenly awakened to an intense interest in the workingman. They all want him to hav a Saturday half-holiday, so he can visit the museums and feast his eyes on the treasures contained therein. This interest is commendable, but suspicious. The suspicious part is that every time they urge the Saturday half-holiday they denounce the movement for the Sunday opening of the museums.

The latest examples of this suspicious interest in the horny-handed laborer are the Christian Advocate and the Independent—both able journals in their way, but monstrously unfair toward opponents. Three ways of opposing the Sunday opening of the museums hav been developed during the past two months. The first is to abuse the American Secular Union. The second is to quote from English authorities that workingmen do not want the museums opened. The third is to say that as the museums are partially supported by private donations, the donors should be allowed to control the museums.

The Christian Advocate dwells upon the first two of these so-called arguments. Mr. Buckley opposes the Sunday opening because Mr. Samuel P. Putnam is urging it. He dislikes Mr. Putnam because back of him is the American Secular Union, with Robert G. Ingersoll as president, and back of the Union are the Infidels of the country.

To this, of course, there is but one reply. It is true. But if the Infidels are the only advocates of a public benefit, so much the better for the Infidels, and so much the worse for the Christians. It is, however, history repeating itself.

The Advocate's second point, quoted from Mr. Jesup's pamphlet, that the English people do not open their museums on Sundays, is entirely irrelevant, and scarcely worth noticing. In England church and state are directly united, and the church largely controls the will of the people. To say the English people do not want the museums opened on Sundays is to say that the church does not want them. We in this country do not want, and do not care for, the opinions of the English clergy. But that Mr. Jesup may be entirely wrong, and that the English people really do desire to hav the museums opened, is not impossible. We copy this from the London Truth:

"The Manchester Art Gallery was last Sunday thrown open to the public free of charge, and over twelve thousand artisans availed themselvs of the opportunity of visiting it. These numbers speak for themselvs, and prove strongly that the working classes are only too glad to improve their minds when the chance is given them on a day on which they hav a few hours to call their own. And here is another proof that the privilege was not in any way abused. All the catalogs which were lent were returned at the door with one single exception, and that was sent back by post on the next day."

The Independent bears down upon the dollars and cents side of the question. Taking Mr. Jesup's pamphlet as authority, it thus states the case:

"The collections on exhibition in both the Metropolitan Museum and the Museum of Natural History hav been made by private gentlemen, at their own expense. By agreement with the city, and for the benefit of the city, the city provides a place for their exhibition—good buildings and good location. The city also appropriates fifteen thousand dollars a year, exactly, to the support of the museums. This is used in part for salaries, and in part to keep the buildings in repair. Less than half the expense of equipping the museums is paid by the city. Thus the Museum of Natural History has received during its existence, omitting value of public land on which it stands and building, a total sum of $430,838.18. Of this $110,722.99, or a little more than one-quarter, has come from the city. The rest has come from generous private patrons. It costs twenty-five thousand dollars a year for the current expenses of this museum, and of this ten thousand dollars has to be paid by members and trustees.

. The city has not organized the museums, has not provided the objects on exhibition, and pays but three-fifths of the expense of keeping them open."

A more misleading, not to say dishonest, statement could scarcely be made. The most protuberant evasion of the truth is the little parenthetical sentence, "omitting value of the public land on which it stands and building," and the more decided insinuation that both museums cost the city but $30,000 per year.

In the first place, the buildings for the museums hav cost the city an enormous sum. New York is now paying interest on $958,000.00 worth of bonds, representing money given to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the American Museum of Natural History. We do not know precisely how this has been divided between the two, but as the Metropolitan Museum received one year $162,500.00 for enlarging the building, it is presumable that the Natural History Museum has received that much less than the Metropolitan. Taking the $162,500.00 from the $958,000.00 given to both leaves $795,500.00 divided between them—if the division has been fair. This would giv Mr. Jesup's institution $397,750.00. Add to this the $110,722.99 which he acknowledges having received from the city up to January 1, 1885, and we hav $508,472.99 against $320,115.19 received from all other sources. It will be seen, therefore, that instead of the city having paid but a little more than one-quarter of the expense of Mr. Jesup's museum it has paid nearly two-thirds of the total expense of building and running the museum.

The other point in the Independent's editorial is that it costs $25,000 per year each to run the museums, of which the city pays only $15,000 to each. Again is the statement misleading. Allowing that it costs $50,000 per year to maintain both institutions, we affirm that the city spends more than four times as much upon the museums as do the "generous private patrons." The trustees and the "generous private patrons" contribute about $20,000 annually to the support of the institutions. The same institutions cost the municipality of New York $84,530.00 annually. The stock of these institutions is in three issues, as follows:

	Principal.	Interest.
At 4 per cent,.....	$2,000.00	$80.00
" 5 " "	291,000.00	14,550.00
" 6 " "	665,000.00	39,900.00
Total, ...	$958,000.00	$54,530.00

Add to the interest on the stock of these museums the $30,000 given to them annually, and we hav $84,530.00 as the annual cost to the city of the institutions which, according to the Christian president of the American Museum of Natural History, and his Christian echoes in the city, are chiefly provided for by "generous private patrons." O Humbug, what a snug nestling-place thou findest in the church!

And now, in addition, comes Mr. Jesup asking for $200,000.00 more for his museum. We are afraid this straw will break the camel's back. Already the museums cost the tax-payers $84,530.00 per year, and they get no good from them, because the doors are locked on the only day the most workers can spare the time to visit Central Park, but Mr. Jesup modestly asks them to take on the extra burden of $12,000.00, annual interest on another issue of stock of $200,000.00! But before recommending this grant we recommend our Board of Estimate and Apportionment to carefully read these resolutions from the Boycotter, a journal representing the Central Labor Union, an organization numbering from thirty to forty thousand workingmen:

"WHEREAS, Expenditures for the use of museums, libraries, and other institutions which are not open on Sunday, are not for the benefit of the working people, inasmuch as they cannot enjoy these institutions unless they are open to the public on that day:

"Resolved, That we protest against the granting of any more sums of money from the public treasury for the support of the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art while they are closed on Sunday, and taxpayers are deprived of the benefit of the funds thus appropriated.

"Resolved, That, as workingmen, we especially protest against the appropriation of $200,000 for the enlargement of the American Museum of Matural History, except on the condition that it is open on Sunday.

"Resolved, That these resolutions be sent to the board of estimate and apportionment as a protest against such expenditures, where the rights and enjoyments of the working people, who bear the greater part of the burden of taxation, are not considered."

We recommend, also, that the arrogant officials of the museums pay a little more heed to the expressed wishes of the people of this city, or what the city is now doing for the institutions under their management may be undone. If the trustees do not grant the secretary of the American Secular Union a hearing upon the petitions now in his hands, or if they point-blank refuse to open the museums, it seems to us that public sentiment will compel the politicians to refuse any further aid from the city. If the present movement shall hav no beneficent fruition, another and another will be organized. When the people thoroughly understand their wrongs, they are very apt to see them righted.

Editorial Notes.

THE editor of the Journalist, in "giving valuable space to what the Ministerial Union, a Philadelphia coterie of evangelical imbecils, has lately voted to remark about Sunday newspapers," observes: "The truth in a nutshell is, that the world moves. Its news must be gathered and printed at least once, sometimes twice, and occasionally three or four times, a day. Prejudice and theological batteries cannot unlimber the press, truth's mightiest engin. Doctors of divinity well know, but hate to confess, that the progressiv American editor is a more influential teacher to-day than any of the surpliced cranks who disgrace the pulpit and mire religion by hypocritical acts and words. Striving against the inevitable, they blindly aim to prevent Freethought, and would dictate to men and women of culture what brain nourishment is required, and when it ought to be taken. Out upon such cant and Phariseeism! The accepted and acceptable newspaper of this era is a daily. Its has no vacations. Its calendar is an unbroken year. Holidays it ignores (save to report their haps and mishaps), and the Sabbath is only one day of seven in a week of events which the people expect to hav published. As the Ministerial Union is lagging so far behind the age, I summarily jerk it before the bar of public opinion." We are afraid Mr. Forman will injure the sensibilities of some of the clergy by these rather frank remarks.

LAST summer several murders were committed in Texas in a very mysterious manner. This winter two other crimes of of the same nature hav followed. The authorities hav been unable to trace the murderers, whose work was performed in a peculiarly cruel way. One woman had a sharp instrument driven into her ear, penetrating the brain. A servant-girl was brained with a hatchet. Others were put to death in various fiendish ways. Last week, the authorities of Austin were convinced, they found the murderer in the person of a Mexican who is crazed by religion. He is, he says, controled by the Almighty, who moves him and directs his actions, and one of the directions is to go out at night and draw blood. Probably he has been a Roman Catholic, and believing that the ancient bloody work of this church was the Lord's doings, is trying to emulate the pious examples of numerous churchmen.

THE Whitminster Secular School, founded by Mr. Glegg Bullock, a wealthy English gentleman, and under the supervision of the editor of the Secular Review, is in a very flourishing condition. T. Evan-Jacob, the principal, writes to the Review that the merits of the school are being widely recognized, Professor Huxley being among those commending the institution. "We are," says Mr. Evan-Jacob, "a godless, prayerless crew," but every day's work of the school is commenced with this exhortation: "Be good, be honorable, be true, and let your speech be pure." If the boys follow out this exhortation, there can be no fear for their future. They will be of much greater worth to the world than the goody-goody young hypocrits graduated from theological seminaries.

THE publishers of the Popular Science Monthly hav notified us that General John Newton, chief of engineers, United States army, originator of the plan and director of the work, has prepared a complete account of the operations for the removal of the obstructions at Hell Gate, from their beginning to the explosion of Flood Rock, in October last, which will appear with full and new illustrations as the leading article in the February number of the Popular Science Monthly.

THE Denison, Tex., Sunday Gazetteer acknowledges having received from this office a "valuable little work entitled 'Social Wealth,' written by J. K. Ingalls." The editor has read it and "finds it brimful of information," and proposes to review it extensivly in his subsequent issue. As the Sunday Gazetteer is edited by men whose good opinion is worth having, this will encourage Mr. Ingalls.

THE government of Russia is very loyal to Greek Catholicism, and forbids dissenters to print within the realm any books upholding their religious ideas. But, not practicing the precept of Jesus to turn the other cheek when smitten on one, the dissenters hav established a large printing-house in Roumania, from which vantage-point they are flooding Russia with pamphlets.

A CLERGYMAN in Massachusetts is said to hav unexpectedly become heir to half a million of dollars. The Independent hopes that he will keep right on preaching the gospel of Christ, and doing all he can to save sinners, but THE TRUTH SEEKER will wager ducats that he won't. Clergymen care very little for sinners when their own bread and butter is secure.

THE Christian at Work thinks that the Christian who asked for the enforcement of the old Maryland statute that punishes by boring with a red-hot iron a hole through the tongue of the blasphemer, when Colonel Ingersoll first lectured in Washington, was "over-zealous." A trifle, we should say!

THE last allocution of Mr. Joachim, otherwise professional pope Leo XIII., meets with disfavor at the German capital. The German rulers think that the deference shown Mr. Joachim in asking him to arbitrate in the dispute over the Caroline Islands has puffed him up with vain conceit.

THE Congregational clergymen of Connecticut are endeavoring to suppress Sunday newspapers. So far they hav met with no success. But suppose the Sunday newspapers should set out to suppress the Congregational clergymen? It wouldn't take long for them to do it.

A RELIGIOUS journal broadly insinuates that in their missionary efforts the various denominations care more for denominational triumphs than for spreading the gospel—"more for the sect than for the sinner." No doubt, no doubt; 'tis human nature.

THE Rev. A. T. Pierson estimates the cost of each convert to Christianity in "heathen" countries at $80, "while the average cost of each convert in Christian lands exceeds $560." We think he has put the price of the heathen too low.

THE Rev. Mr. Downs's latest aphorism is that "The moment a man becomes a Christian he is exposed to fire." Let's see: Mr. Downs began to be fired at when he committed adultery.

FOR the first time since the Reformation Scotland has returned a Catholic to Parliament. It is believed that John Knox turned over in his grave when he heard of it.

THE death of Vanderbilt, says John Swinton, will not materially lessen the price of members of the legislature in open market at Albany.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL gave four lectures at Atlanta, Illinois, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th inst., and another of five lectures at Minier on the 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 24th. Letters will reach him addressed to 302 State street, Chicago, Ill., care of F. F. Follet.

OWING to the severe blizzard which swept the Missouri valley during the first days of January, E. C. Walker was delayed in opening the midwinter campaign, but finally got off on the 11th inst., and is now at work in central Kansas, and is ready to fill lecture engagements anywhere in the state. Address him at Valley Falls, Kansas.

J. E. REMSBURG is still at work in Kansas. His program for January is as follows: Republic City, 9th, 10th, and 11th; Lincoln Center, 13th, 14th, and 15th; Minneapolis, 16th, 17th, and 18th; Niles, (Sunday afternoon) 17th; Delphos, 19th and 20th; Enterprise, 21st; Newton, 22d; Halstead, 23d and 24th; Council Grove, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th. Mr. Remsburg will come East again about the first of February. His engagements extend up to April, and he can accept no more calls at present.

THE Liberals of Linesville, Pa., and vicinity will hold a four days' meeting in that place, beginning Saturday evening Jan. 23d. The object of this convention is to advance Freethought and present the Nine Demands to the people. The convention will close on Tuesday night the 26th with a ball and supper. Among the speakers will be Chas. Watts, W. F. Peck (speaker and singer), Harry Hoover, Rev. J. B. Frost (Unitarian), O. P. Kellogg, and others. The Linesville Liberal League extend a cordial invitation to Liberals everywhere to be present and help giv the meeting emphasis. People from abroad will be entertained free as far as possible.

W. F. JAMIESON abandons his Texas trip in expectation of a debate at Omaha, Nebraska, and to giv the Minnesota Adventists their fill of debate. He proposes twelve nights' debate with Elder Hill, if the Adventists and Freethinkers can arrange the preliminaries. Jamieson has just closed his lecture engagement in Dexter City, Mo., and says he found a royal band of Liberals there. The bitterly cold weather militated, however, against a large attendance. Seven lectures were given instead of the five as announced. He will remain another month in Missouri, and invites Liberals of Kansas, Missouri, and Nebraska who want lectures to write him at once at Joplin, Mo.

R. B. BUTLAND, of Toronto, writes: "Charles Watts has been handling the Irish question, home rule, etc., to the great satisfaction of the Toronto public as expressed in the daily press, and since he cannot induce the Christian preachers to come forth from their hiding-places in the cowards' castles, the pulpits, and meet him face to face on the public platform, he has taken occasion to answer the sermon of a popular divine in the Temperance Hall to a large audience, and with crushing effect. On Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 25th and 26th, Mr. Watts speaks at Linesville, Pa.; Sundays, Jan. 31st and Feb. 7th, at Pittsburgh; Sundays, 14th and 21st, at Chicago. Friends in the West requiring Mr. Watts's services should send applications at once to his permanent address, 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, or to the TRUTH SEEKER office.

Mr. Parton and the Sabbath Question.

James Parton thus commends Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking:"

"Excellent, bold, direct, unanswerable. I mean this compact little book upon 'Sabbath-Breaking.' Break, break, break!—oh, break it all to pieces!

"I feel more and more, as I hav felt for forty years, that our evangelical Sabbatarian religion is the most pernicious influence human nature was ever subjected to since its evolution. It is a blighting curse upon men, women, children, and nations. It bars our road to true greatness as it has Holland's and England's. He is the true patriot who wars upon it."

Letters from Friends.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Friday, the 8th, at 11 P.M., I left New York for Troy. In this case it was a cold night when New York was left. The air was full of grit that came sweeping down the street like a sand-blast, polishing the sidewalks and pavements, and filtering assiduously into the ears of the pedestrians. I was going to Troy to help Mr. Reynolds run his stereopticon, and having got a check put on the big trunk marked "C. B. Reynolds, Illuminated Paintings," I climbed into a car. It was a sleeping car prepared to be occupied in that capacity. On account of the size of the berth I removed my shoes before entering it. A young woman came along and popped hastily into the berth opposit mine and some two and a half feet distant. Soon I hear sounds of a struggle. Is it the blizzard toying with the roofs of houses and tops of chimneys? It is not. It is the young woman trying to get out of her clothes in preparation for sleep. The struggle continues till far toward morning. It is no small athletic feat for a man to shed his duds in one of these railroad berths; what it must be for a woman is more a matter of speculation than of certainty.

Arriving at Troy Saturday morning, I expected to meet Mr. Reynolds at the depot. He was not there, but the storm was, and the snow blew through the long building as though the structure were the nozzle of a big bellows filled with flour. I waited in the depot for an hour, amusing myself by looking out upon the scene of desolation which the streets of Troy presented. At the end of that time I chartered a vehicle on runners, navigated by a somewhat mercenary Trojan, and drawn by a pair of Trojan horses that would hav caused the priest Laokoon considerable deeper misgivings than those he experienced at the sight of their great prototype. This vehicle took me to where Robert Wade livs on Tenth street; then it took Mr. Wade and myself to where Professor Nelke was shoveling snow off the sidewalk. The professor explained that he was fond of shoveling snow, and as it did not come in the summer he took advantage of the winter months to gratify his desire for that kind of recreation. Professor Nelke told us that Mr. Reynolds was boarding with the estimable Mrs. Simmons, who keeps an establishment for hungry people on Fulton street. We repaired to Fulton street. A nymph from the Emerald Isle said Mr. Reynolds had gone to the depot, and there we cornered him. He was accompanied by his son Clinton, a strapping youth of seventeen. The ex-reverend expressed no contrition for not having been at the train two hours before. I fear that his fifteen years in the ministry had the effect to indurate him.

All through that day the storm raged. We got our paraphernalia conveyed to the Spiritual Parlors on Broadway—a hall occupied by the Liberals and Spiritualists; spread our screen, and trimmed the stereopticon to bear on it, manufactured the gas necessary for the illumination, and then, when evening came, we waited for the crowd to rush in. I may say here that the crowd failed to rush our way. Mr. Reynolds had expended about twenty dollars in advertising the exhibition, and all the papers had given him good notices. He had also distributed a few free tickets. We were announced to begin at 7:30. At ten minutes before eight one man came timidly in on a complimentary ticket. Three more followed, each bearing a complimentary ticket. Then four other men came and paid a quarter apiece, and a boy deposited ten cents with the treasurer. This was our audience—small but intelligent, and critical to a high degree. The Liberals of Troy were not represented that evening, and but two Spiritualists materialized. As Professor Nelke would remark: "Er kam in sein Eigenthum, und die Seinen nahmen ihn nicht auf;" which being interpreted means that he came to his own and his own received him not. At eight o'clock sharp we darkened the hall, and turned on the pictures. Mr. Reynolds described them briefly, and the audience looked on. There was no chance to find fault with either the views or the lecture.

The door receipts were $1.10.

When Mr. Reynolds went back to Mrs. Simmons's that night it cannot be said that he was in the exalted mental state to which the sudden acquisition of wealth sometimes raises a man. Still he was not discouraged.

The next day he addressed the Secularists in the same hall. His subject was that old serpent which is Satan and the devil. It is a powerful lecture, and I enjoyed it very much. Wherever Mr. Reynolds goes he carries a banner with "SUBSCRIBE FOR THE TRUTH SEEKER" painted on it in big letters. He had this nailed up beside him on the platform, and prefaced his remarks by calling attention to it. The result was several subscribers. I met here a number of people whom I was glad to make the acquaintance of. Among them were Mr. Hiram Wilbur, who presides at the meetings, Mr. Morrissey, Mr. Edgar Brown, Mr. Jeffers, Mr. Wattenburg, and others. These are subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER. They inquired with solicitude for the man with the badge-pin. The opinion was expressed that a meeting of the Liberal Club was worth going a long way to attend. This opinion I did my best to confirm.

The address of Mr. Reynolds was cordially received. Nothing was heard but expressions of delight, and I cheered myself with the thought that the lecture would repair the disaster of the night before. You can therefore imagin that a cold chill struck me when a member arose to "move you, Mr. President, that in default of other remuneration, a vote of thanks be tendered the speaker for the admirable address to which we hav listened." The motion prevailed, but Professor Nelke wouldn't hav it; so he opened a subscription list, and a comfortable sum was shortly subscribed.

In the evening Mr. Reynolds went to Albany with Mr. Wade, and addressed the Secularists there both to their satisfaction and his own.

The weather continued terribly cold. The air was sharp enough to cut hair with, and breathing it was like drawing a wire through the lungs. The snow had put a high collar on all Troy, and the inhabitants of the city of shirts were happy. Monday evening we had over a hundred beautiful views ready to exhibit. A dozen people were present, enjoyed the entertainment, and went away delighted, promising to come again and bring their friends. Total receipts, $3.50.

At this juncture affairs began to wear a serious and frowning aspect. The receipts did not pay for the gas required to illuminate the paintings. Expenses were accumulating with a dogged persistency with which it was impossible to inoculate the receipts; and, worse than all, here was one of the best shows possible on earth going along with nobody to look at it. Mr. Reynolds was not discouraged, but he said he believed the people of Troy had no desire to be either amused or instructed. The proposed prize fight between Paddy Ryan and John L. Sullivan had the public eye, and nothing would be permitted to intervene. It was certain, too, that "Spiritual Parlors" was not a favorable place for the materialization of audiences.

Tuesday our lecturer was struck with the thought that perhaps the inhabitants of Coxsackie might relish a stereopticon entertainment, and away to Coxsackie he went. As he passed out the door he casually observed that he might not return until the next day, in which case he would expect me to "do the cackling." The subject for that evening was "Japan, China, and Italy." Now, as you know, I was born in America, and hav not paid particular attention to the study of oriental customs, habits, and scenery. Besides, I am not an orator, as Brutus is, and possess none of those arts which, in conjunction with gall, secure the attention of an audience.

The afternoon wore away and Reynolds didn't come. I made a hasty list of about one hundred views, and arranged them beside the stereopticon. At eight o'clock Reynolds still tarried, and we had a larger audience than we had seen before. Fifteen minutes past eight, and the void remains unfilled. With a large effort I gathered myself up, resuscitated my vocal organs from somewhere in the region of my boots, and broke ground by explaining why Mr. Reynolds was not there. Then I lowered the gas and dodged behind the screen where the stereopticon was and passed in the views. The first one had a picture of a nest with some open-mouthed young birds in it. Those, I took it, represented the audience. Next I gave them a picture of D. M. Bennett, and explained about his going around the world and obtaining these views. The third picture gave us a scene in Japan. In this Land of the Rising Sun I got lost, tangled up in its jungles, buried under an eruption of its volcanoes, and its people looked contemptuously at me out of their oblique eyes. We wandered around Yokohama, Kioto, Nagasaki, Kobé, and other cities. From Japan we skipped across the sea to China, loafed around among the temples and tombs there, and then slid off to Italy. Scenes here became more familiar—the leaning tower of Pisa, views of Venice, the Rialto where Antonio guyed Shylock; St. Peter's at Rome, the Forum, the Coliseum, the amphitheater, and all the other interesting structures that went to ruin before my day. Likewise I gave them Pompeii—which word perhaps I did not pronounce right; and colonnades and temples beyond number. A fact which I did not divulge to my audience was that the views were as novel to me as they could possibly be to any one else, that being the first time I had ever seen them. How the persons present enjoyed the entertainment I had no means of knowing beyond an occasional furtiv snicker when something of a less depressing nature than usual was said.

At the close one lady said it was real nice, and another said the entertainment was pretty good, but that it would probably hav been a great deal better if Mr. Reynolds had been there.

Wednesday morning the wanderer returned. Nothing of a very attractiv nature had been held out to allure him into any of the propinquous towns, and he concluded to stay in Troy. I left him and his boy Wednesday afternoon preparing for a matinée. Clint has had no experience in running the instrument, but he worked last fall with a threshing-machine, and it is said he can feed as fast any two men can cut bands; hence I infer he will hav no difficulty with the stereopticon. Before I got out of Troy I consulted perhaps a half dozen nativs to find out why they were so apathetic toward so good an entertainment. The verdict unanimously condemned the hall as being inaccessible, and in addition there is, as a reporter of the Telegram said, a strong prejudice here against Spiritualism. The town is full of the Holy Ghost. The "Spiritual Parlors" are enough to kill any entertainment held in them. If the public had known how few of the Spiritualists showed up at our exhibitions, they might hav buried their prejudice. Professor Nelke, however, a Spiritualist, worked for us, as I may say, like a Trojan, and left nothing undone that he could do. But prejudice against the hall, coupled with inaccessibility, did its perfect work, and the public wouldn't come. Mr. Reynolds may yet return, like Mazeppa, and bring their houses down every night.

These pictures should be shown all over the country. They make a most instructiv evening's entertainment, and Mr. Reynolds is a lively and interesting talker. My experience in Troy has confirmed my previous estimate of him—that he has come into Liberalism to stay. There may be honester and earnester men in the work than he, but I hav never seen them, and, owing to the precariousness of our earthly tenure, I don't expect I ever shall.

My trip to Troy has been worth something to me, if it has not materially boomed the cause. A thousand incidents occurred that will furnish food for cheerful reflection. Besides, I met with the Freethinkers there, and I giv you my word they are people worth knowing. It is encouraging, for instance, to meet a man like Mr. Hiram Wilbur. He has been a Freethinker for fifty years, and he finds the idea of mental liberty as fresh and inspiring now as ever. The Liberals at Troy hav a pleasant meeting-place, when you get to it, and hav considerable home talent. There seems to be no reason why the Secular Society of Troy should not grow. There is certainly room enough, and, I should say, sufficient necessity.

Anyway, I took home with me from Troy a subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and orders for several ANNUALS, besides bringing a mind stored with large and silver-plated chunks of experience.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

VINELAND, N. J., Jan. 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find one dollar, for which please continue my TRUTH SEEKER. And while I hav my pen in hand I wish to say a few words on Mr. Wakeman's review of "Rational Communism." The two last paragraphs of that review are in my opinion untrue and unjust to Herbert Spencer, and misleading to some of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I consider the philosophy of Herbert Spencer far in advance of the teachings of any one of this or any other age, and for anyone to say that the sociological teachings of Mr. Spencer are worthy only of contempt is misleading to those not acquainted with the writings of Mr. Spencer, and a reckless assertion to those who are. If "A Capitalist," or Mr. Wakeman, attempts to build a square society from unsquare men they will find that Mr. Spencer's teachings are worthy of some respect.

P. ROTHWELL.

BARRE, MASS., Jan. 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In answer to L. S. Burdick in to-day's issue—for I wish to be prompt and brief—let me say:

First, I will "tell," as he requests, again, as I hav done already, in Dec. 5th in those "Remarkable Seances," that I did not take "Mr. Truesdell's assertions," but the evidence of my "own senses instead." Seeing is knowing, is it not?

Second, It is all right for L. S. Burdick to speak for himself and assert: "I know that independent slate-writing is a fact," if he does know, but what right has he to affirm, "So does Mr. Truesdell know it; so does Ella E. Gibson know it?" I know that Ella E. Gibson does not know it, notwithstanding the positiv assertion of L. S. Burdick to the contrary.

And, Third, I know further that she is willing to "suffer the just retribution of her own act," in "prostituting her pen to such low mud-slinging (?)," as he terms it.

Fourth, "Now, what is the object of the article referred to? Simply this, to create a sale for Truesdell's book." Indeed! Mr. Truesdell is not a dead-beat, dependent on the sale of "Bottom Facts" for a living. He could giv away every copy and never feel the loss. My object in having the seances was to satisfy myself; in publishing them, to enlighten others, as I stated in the article.

Yours composedly,

ELLA E. GIBSON.

P.S.—Thanks to N. G. W., of Burr Oak, Mich., for his very sensible article in to-day's issue.

E. E. G.

ST. CATHERINE'S, MO., Dec. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I need not say to you that I admire THE TRUTH SEEKER. In looking over your subscription list you will find that I hav been a subscriber from the first number published in Paris, Ill., never having missed but one number in that time, and hope I may never miss another one while I liv, which may not be long. When my subscription fails to come to time you may make up your mind that is the last of the Mohican. For forty years I hav been what is termed an Infidel, never trying to conceal it, especially from preachers, who claim to know something about the Bible.

The average Christian knows but little of what is in the Bible. When the brothers talk to me about sinning against God I say to them, "I know nothing about your God; there may be one and there may be a thousand; I hav no evidence of any; but if there is a personal God and I hav ever sinned against him, and if I know just how I hav done it, I will try and make all reparation in my power to undo what I hav done." In looking over my past life I think of but one thing that I did derogatory to his character. That was in my younger days, when I accused him of being the author of the Bible. But my early education ought to be a good excuse for me.

W. E. CRANDALL.

LOWELL, MASS., Jan. 5, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 for two years' subscription. I am very glad that you hav decided to illustrate your papaper, and hope its circulation may be greatly increased thereby. I will recommend it to all Liberal friends with whom I meet, and do the best I can to get some of them to subscribe.

Yours respectfully,

N. D. BURNHAM.

LA CRESCENT, MINN., Dec. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I received a couple of copies of your paper a few days since and must say that I appreciate it very much. The biography of the late Elizur Wright, who spent the best efforts of his life in the interest of four millions of human beings as against the tyranny of masters, is good. It will bring to the minds of many who are prejudiced by the belief that the ranks of Freethought are destitute of prominent men, that one of the most conspicuous leaders in the strife for emancipation was a Liberal, who with Wm. Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips form a trio of Liberals who shed more light upon the horrors of slavery than all the sermons thundered from the oracles of superstition; who originated and supported the grand theme of emancipation which orthodoxy never dreamed of; who labored away the better years of their lives in the interest of a cause which they believed both just and noble. This is just your mission—but on a larger scale—sixty millions against four millions. Yes, Mr. Editor, you hav entered upon the work of liberating sixty millions of human beings from the wretched confines of intellectual slavery—from the disease of superstition—from the seeming hereditary creeds of Christendom. Work on, and may you be heartily supported by your followers. A. D. CAMPBELL.

BROOKLYN, Dec. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I think it would be useful for a great many Freethinkers, and the Freethought propaganda, if adherents of Freethought could meet with as much material advantage and welfare as possible, and if every Freethinker could be informed as to the best place to secure a situation, to do his trading, or to find social enjoyment. In order to carry out such a plan it would be necessary, for instance, to establish colonies of Freethinkers, and to strengthen the colonies already existing; to provide Freethinkers with as many vacant places as possible; to protect inventors, authors, artists, if they are Freethinkers. I think it would be the best to establish an international agency for that purpose, which could be kept up by small fees.

To any gentleman or lady who would like to join me in such an undertaking I shall be glad to giv information.

I am at home from 11–12 A.M., from 4–6 and 8–9 P.M.

DR. BARAU, 162 Union street, Brooklyn.

The other Freethought papers are requested to copy.

SPRINGVILLE, UTAH, Dec. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It is a hard matter to sell any of our Freethought publications here, for the people are so bound by prejudice, and so full of superstition, there seems to be no room in their hearts for anything of a pure and truthful nature. But whenever I get a chance to sell any of the little books bought of you I do so, and then send and replace them. I spoke to one merchant here about keeping and selling Freethought publications, but he declined. I think the trouble is that our merchants are afraid to hav our reading matter in their stores; they doubtless think they would lose many of their customers thereby, and most likely this Freethought business has got to be too strong food for them as well as the most of their customers. With the exception of a very few, the people here decline to assist me in the spread of Freethought—they fear the power of these Christian organizations. Still there is an element of Freethought here, and even now it has its effect on the community. I don't expect the Christian to like me so long as I pick at his idols, yet I intend to treat all civilly and kindly; show them the better way when they desire to investigate. But there are some people who know all there is necessary for them to know; it is embraced in their creed, and they want no more. They claim to get truth from the right source and to know that their church is the only true one, and that God acknowledges it as his own, and they all do, so far as I know.

I send a bill of what is wanting this time, and $4.15 to pay for it. Respectfully, LUKE WM. GALLUP.

EUREKA, CAL., Dec. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Being unemployed this winter, and a friend having loaned me several numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hav enjoyed a literary feast such as seldom falls to the lot of a poor wage-worker. It contains so many logical and convincing proofs of the utter falsity of Christian dogmas that had I not lost faith in them years ago I certainly should do so now. Among other things I hav been specially interested in the conclusions arrived at by Materialists and Spiritualists, both having very able advocates. I long since evolved in my mind a theory that differs from them both, which may interest some of your readers, and, to those who think me wrong, induce them to set me right. Regarding the words mind, soul, or spirit as synonymous, definitions to the contrary notwithstanding, I hav and do still believe in a nature mind. The Materialist describes it as inherent force or motion, the Spiritist calls it spirit, but I call it an activ intelligent principle that permeates everything, like electricity. And though it may lie dormant like a person in a trance, or like the vegetable kingdom in winter, for a long period of time, yet it does recur and spring into activity from time to time. To illustrate, when a person sleeps he loses consciousness (that is to say, it lies dormant), but it cannot be said that his consciousness is dead or annihilated. If nature does not think, how then was it possible for her to evolve laws and eternally enforce them so as to bring forth such a vast multitude of diversified objects—as grasses, trees, flowers, fruits, etc., with their innumerable variety of shapes, colors, shades, and tints in the vegetable kingdom, not to mention the animal and mineral kingdoms? And here let me say it seems a mistake, to me, to speak of only three kingdoms. Would it not be more proper to say the feathered kingdom, the finny kingdom, and the insect kingdom, instead of saying the feathered tribe, and so on? But, to resume the subject, I ask is it possible that nature could do these things without intelligent design? I also believe that inasmuch as it takes so many drops to make the ocean, and so many atoms to compose the earth, so our minds are individual elements of nature's intellectual consciousness, and our bodies a combination of elements of matter that, in the event of death (change), separate and mingle with other elements, and form other objects. And how do we know that nature, in secreting seed in the animal organism, does not also secrete the intelligence (mind) of those who hav lived on earth heretofore, and thus liv in this life again, only under different circumstances, and occupying a different tenement (body)? Again, those forms of matter which manifest difference of race may attract those intelligences which will exhibit sympathetic traits of feeling common to both, and I conceive it possible that our individual minds can unite with vapory substances, and appear visible to our sight under certain conditions, although the conditions at present required are crude and perplexing. Yet more intelligent conditions may, in time, be discovered, just as machinery and improved implements hav supplanted the rude implements and crude methods of past ages. Perhaps learned and scientific men may consider my idea inconsistent and foolish, and may, like several men I hav known, prefer a knave to a fool, though I think that amounts to offering a premium on deceit, trickery, and theft. A fool is often a simple-minded, honest man, but a knave never. The above are the characteristics of a knave, and he will always practice them when an opportunity offers. We should pity a fool, but despise a knave. So I hope those who consider me a fool will act accordingly.

I will now write a few lines about the land question. I think Henry George's book, "Progress and Poverty," is a masterpiece, and, leaving out his religious views, only lacks execution. Mr. Malcolm has also written some sensible letters on the subject, and you said it is something to be hoped for but not realized, but I don't see why. All newly discovered truths are repelled by the masses because of their prejudices, but by persistent effort in teaching them they gradually relax their intolerance, and appreciate their benign influence. I think it the duty of those who hav means, leisure, and the cause of humanity at heart, to try and educate and stimulate the people with the fire of patriotism for their own mental, social, and political freedom, and that of every individual in the United States. The Secular Union hav a heavy burden, and they are wrestling with it vigorously. But I do wish it would not break their backs to carry two more straws, i.e., woman suffrage, and non-vested rights in land. Alas! the people are in a state of apathy, and those who are said to be the servants of the people hav usurped the sovereign power of the people, and wield it to the misery, degradation, and premature death of the laboring classes. H. DELMAR.

SPOKANE FALLS, W. T., Dec. 26, 285.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 19th inst. makes very sensible remarks upon the "Suppression of Mormonism." One sentence in the final paragraph, however, contains the germ of what is more dangerous to free institutions than would be a score of Salt Lake cities. The sentence in question asserts that "Congress may deal with the inhabitants of Utah as citizens, or, if they break the laws, as criminals." Will THE TRUTH SEEKER point out the source from which Congress gets authority to meddle with inhabitants anywhere except in the District of Columbia? "But Congress has always legislated for the territory." So it has. Thomas Paine says that wrongs contemplated for a long time assume a superficial appearance of being right, and the Constitution says that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectivly, or to the people. Congress shall hav power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." The inhabitants are not property, and social affairs are not property.

If Congress may make laws without Constitutional sanction for one purpose, or upon one pretext, then "Good-bye Mary Ann." No one can tell to what extent the usurpation may be pushed. JOHN F. WATKINS.

DEXTER, ME., Jan. 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 on my subscription. When I am in arrears please let me know. I cannot dispense with your able paper. You hav so many able men writing for your paper it is very interesting to me. I hav taken great pleasure in reading Colonel Ingersoll's lectures. Every word is to the point; not a word lost. What a tribute to Elizur Wright! I should like to get some new subscribers for your paper. I liv in a town of about three thousand inhabitants, with six churches. You can easily judge how I am surrounded by humbug and superstition. I am now over seventy years of age, and by observation and experience I fully indorse the sentiments of your paper. They are my views exactly. S. M. INGALLS.

BRUNSWICK, MO., Jan. 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1 for "Infidel Text Book" and the "Besant and Hatchard Debate."

Why don't your lecturers make their passage east and west from St. Louis to Jefferson City and up on the north side of the Missouri river to Kansas city some time, for God knows if he knows anything about it, this north side has as much need of the Gospel of Humanity as any place on the patron that I hav ever seen. On that route to Kansas are Jefferson, Moberly, Salisbury, Keetsville, Brunswick, Carlton, Kansas City, etc.

And of Brunswick I can say, of my own knowing, they hav never had a Liberal lecture here. There are a number of still Liberals here. Our mayor and the editor of our local paper, the Brunswicker, are certainly Liberals, together with a number of others, but Mother Grundy is supreme here. A revivalist by the name of Misanhamer left Brunswick a few days ago after having administered the Holy Ghost to 305 of this community. Come over into Macedonia and help us. If there is any balm in Gilead let there be a physician that knows how to apply it.

Please say to Brother Reynolds that I hope he may come next summer to Brunswick with his Tent. I hav not the pleasure of his acquaintance, but think he in part is responsible for making my daughter follow the law instead of the gospel, but I will forgiv him, with all my heart, if he will come here with his Tent next summer. His board will be free with me as long as he will stay, up to three years, and I will do all I can to help in the cause. WM. TYLER.

BALLSTON SPA., N. Y., Jan. 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. C. B. Reynolds gave two lectures in this place January 5th and 6th. They were entitled, "Bible Sabbath" and "Honest Answers to Christian Lamentations." Only a few were present, but they were thinkers. Brother Reynolds has sown seed that will take deep root, and if he comes here next summer with the Tent he will find plenty of hearers, as there are many people who now wish they had heard him. One reason why they did not is that all the God-houses in town were having a week of prayer, but I am expecting to hear from him soon, and then I will try to fix a date that will not conflict with the Lord's anointed. Hoping we shall hav the pleasure of hearing Brother Remsburg, and that you and THE TRUTH SEEKER family may enjoy a happy New Year, I am as ever,

Yours in the cause of Humanity, WM. THORPE.

WOODSTOCK, VT., Jan. 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I send you an order for ten dollars, to be applied to the Campaign Fund. Yours, etc.,

JOHN D. POWERS.

P.S.—A second thought: I send two dollars for the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER. J. D. P.

MONONGAHELA CITY, PA., Jan. 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: On Monday evening, December 28th, Prof. W. F. Peck delivered his famous lecture in Jr. O. A. M. Hall on "Evolution versus Creation." The attendance was small, but well pleased, and should Professor Peck visit this town again a large attendance will greet him.

R. F. HILL.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1, according to promis, for pictorial department.

I had intended making some reply to Miss H. Gardener, on her sex being omitted, or excluded, as she terms it, in the Nine Demands. I thought the whole human race came under one head, but I do not think I should be able to cope with her, and do not wish to provoke argument.

Your last picture is pretty hard on the blowers.

RUFUS W. MIDDLETON.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., Jan. 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find 75 cents, for which send me THE TRUTH SEEKER, on trial, for three months.

It was not until quite recently that I knew of the publication of so valuable a journal as THE TRUTH SEEKER, my friend A. L. Frisbie, one of your subscribers here, being the first to call my attention to it, he kindly loaning me a copy to read. And I wish to say that in Mr. Frisbie you hav a stanch advocate of Freethought, a tried and true man, who dares think, speak, and act, regardless of the clergy and of public opinion. If we had more men like him it would not require many years to revolutionize the religious world. Unfortunately, however, Brattleboro, although the oldest settled town in the state, and with a population of six thousand, is very conservativ, there being nine churches within its limits. These are also supplemented by a branch of the Salvation Army from Brooklyn, N. Y., and a Young Men's Christian Association. But what a travesty on religion is this army of bummers and chronic deadbeats! How proud the sanctified devotees of Christianity must feel of such an attachment! Slang, cast-iron cheek, and the holy Bible seem to be their stock in trade. They lie in wait for the weak-minded, and hav succeeded in capturing a few imbecils, but it is rather up-hill work for them, and sooner or later they will hav to "move on." They implore everyone to put his trust in God, but when they first struck this place they immediately sought the protection of the police, showing how little confidence they had in the almighty themselvs. A Swede, two niggers, a variety actor, and several fallen women hav joined this religious show, and they make night and day hideous with their incessant howling and baboonish conduct. One woman sent her daughter away from home to prevent her from joining the army, and then became a member herself. Last week they were unceremoniously fired out of several billiard saloons which they visited, but that had no perceptible effect on them, for they were just as defiant and persistent afterward in their efforts to intrude themselvs where they had been kicked out as though nothing had happened to them. Talk about gall—if you want the genuin thing, join the Salvation Army.

A few Sundays since, the Baptist divine, Rev. F. S. Tower, informed his congregation that the number of Freethinkers was decreasing. He also said that they were trying to overthrow the church and government, all of which his credulous dupes swallowed whole, as they would a sugar-coated pill. Was one of these "public charges" ever known to tell the truth, anyhow? If Mr. Tower will take pains to instruct himself in regard to Freethought statistics, he will probably be somewhat surprised to learn that there is considerable activity among Freethinkers yet, and that instead of their numbers decreasing, they are increasing, and, further, that it is the Catholic and Protestant churches combined that are trying to destroy this government by attacking the Constitution of the United States, and not Freethinkers, as this quibbling, canting, indigent church mendicant very well knows, if he knows anything. Let this reverend prevaricator and falsifier of Freethinkers post himself in regard to the same before attempting to tell others that which he knows to be a lie. The world to-day is groaning under the curse and burden of an army of just such men as this dominie, and always will, until it refuses to longer support them in their fruitless endeavors to Christianize the world. S. H. FARR.

WE regret to hear that Mr. Charles Watts has been confined to his bed for some time with sickness which at one time assumed a rather serious aspect. The illness was brought on through a chill caught in the Canadian provinces. Several lecturing engagements had to be canceled. Fortunately Mr. Watts has quite recovered, and is about to start upon his tour in the States. Friends West requiring lectures should communicate with Mr. Watts at 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ont., Canada. All his letters will be forwarded to him without delay.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Private's Glory.

Sweet little major, he mounts my knee,
And the tender blue eyes look at me;
"Tell me, popsie, just once more,
What did you do when you went to war?"

And then I tell of the autumn day
When the Forty-seventh marched away;
How Cromwell died at Jackson town,
And Miles on Corinth field went down.

"But how many rebels, tell me true,
Did you kill, then, and the whole war through?"
And I tell him then, with eager zest,
How Jo. Reed blew up a limber chest.

But the major sticks to his question still,
"How many rebels did you kill?"
So I told him how, near the set of sun,
The charge was made and the battle won;

And how, the day McClure was shot,
When Vicksburg's fight was fierce and hot,
Brave Sam Law took C Company in
Through flame and smoke and the batteries' din;

How over our heads the battle broke
With screaming shell and sabre stroke,
And he wanted to know, the little elf,
"But how many men did you kill yourself?"

'Say, tell me, popsie, say you will—
How many rebels did you kill?"
So I told him the truth as near as might be—
As many of them as they did of me.

—R. J. Burdette.

New Year Resolutions.

There were three little folks, long ago,
Who solemnly sat in a row,
On a December night,
And attempted to write
For the new year a good resolution.

"I will try not to make so much noise,
And be one of the quietest boys,"
Wrote one of the three,
Whose uproarious glee
Was the cause of no end of confusion.

"I resolve that I never will take
More than two or three pieces of cake,"
Wrote plump little Pete,
Whose taste for the sweet
Was a problem of puzzling solution.

The other, her paper to fill,
Began with, "Resolved, that I will——"
But right there she stopped,
And fast asleep dropped
Ere she came to a single conclusion.

Quite a Story.

Once there was a man whose name was Phipps—William Phipps. He was born of poor parents away up in the state of Maine, in the year 1651. The family was large, William being one of twenty-six children, twenty-one of them boys. He used to tend the sheep when a lad, and also do little chores about the farm where he lived with his father. At eighteen he learned the trade of ship-building and at twenty-two he went to Boston, and it was then he learned to read and write, and, with the exception of some arithmetic, this was about all the book education he received. But he had a good deal of nativ talent and shrewdness. It was about this time he married a widow with some means, which she used to set him up in business. But he did not seem to succeed very well and failed.

"I guess I can go to sea," he said, and he took what little money he could scrape together and bought a vessel. Some one had whispered in his ear that there were vast treasures hidden underneath the big foaming billows, and that recently a noble Spanish bark had been lost on the Bahama coast, and solid gold and silver bars had gone to the bottom with her. He made up his mind to go and search for the buried treasure. With a stout heart and brave purpose he started on his self-imposed mission. But he was doomed to disappointment. He lost his vessel and never found the treasure.

Some old sailors spun a long yarn about a ship that had been wrecked fifty years before, away on another coast, and she was said to be more weighted with gold and silver than the one he had been in search of.

Most of the people thought it was only an idle tale, a made-up, fairy-like story, but Captain Phipps believed it to be true. And what did he do but go to England, march boldly up to King James, and, telling him the story of the sunken treasure-ship, ask him to let him hav a craft to go and get the buried gold and silver?

The king listened, and finally let him take a vessel called the Rose Algier, in which to go and bring back the great bags of gold that Phipps was so confident was to be had for the going where it was. He set sail with bright hopes, and was gone two years and did not find a thing. The crew became discouraged and told him he had better turn pirate—that he could find plenty of treasures on top of the water, and that he would never find any under it. But Captain Phipps had no intention of turning pirate and hoisting the black flag, and, as his men were so uneasy, he sailed back to England with them.

He was not discouraged, however, and wished to try his luck again, but the king would not furnish him with another vessel. The duke of Albemarle then came forward and said that he himself would bear the expense of another trip. So away went Captain Phipps once more in search of buried treasure.

Arriving at the spot where he believed the sunken ship lay, he sent down a diver to see what he could find. Up he came panting, with a handful of seaweed, and declaring that he had touched a Spanish gun.

"Go back and try again!" said Captain Phipps. Down, deep down under the waters went the diver, and the next time he came up he brought a silver bar.

"Hurrah! Hurrah!" said the gallant captain. "We hav found the long-sought treasure, and our fortunes now are made."

Down went the divers again and again, and every time they came up they brought treasures of all kinds—silver pitchers, silver baskets, a solid silver table, great boxes full of silver and gold coins, bags of gold, caskets of gems, and a cross of solid gold set with rare and costly jewels.

When he sailed back to England you can imagin how proud and happy he was with his ship-load of treasures. The duke of Albemarle received him with open arms, and when the treasure was counted it was found to be worth more than three hundred thousand pounds—some assert that its value was really much more than two millions of dollars.

For his share, Captain Phipps received a hundred thousand dollars, was made a knight, and appointed high sheriff of New England.

Sir William Phipps returned therefore with great honor to his nativ land, and became afterward governor of Massachusetts.

He was very pious and belonged to the North church in Boston, where Cotton Mather was minister. He believed in witchcraft, but his last act while he was governor was to issue a general pardon to all who had been accused and convicted of that curious offense. He died in England in 1694 at the age of forty-four.

He had a great deal of Puritanic zeal, but was not more superstitious than the people of his time. He was a man of good intentions and great perseverance. The history of his life reads like a romance, and it verifies the old adage that "Truth is stranger than fiction."

The Wonders of an Egg.

Everyone who eats an egg eats a sermon and a miracle. Inside of that smooth, symmetrical, beautiful shell lurks a question which has been the Troy town for all the philosophers and scientists since Adam. Armed with the engins of war—the microscope, the scales, the offensiv weapons of chemistry, and reason—they hav probed, and weighed, and experimented, and still the question is unsolved, the citadel unsacked. Professor Bokorny can tell you that albumen is composed of so many molecules of carbon, and nitrogen, and hydrogen, and can persuade you of the difference between activ and passiv albumen, and can show by wonderfully delicate experiments what the aldehydes hav to do in the separation of gold from his complicated solutions; but he can't tell you why from one egg comes a "little rid hin," and from another a bantam.

You leave your silver spoon an hour in your egg cup and it is coated with a compound of sulphur. Why is that sulphur there? Wonderful that evolution should provide for the bones of the future hen. There is phosphorus also in that litttle microcosm, and the oxygen of the air, passing through the shell, unites with it, and the acid dissolves the shell, thus making good, strong bones for the chick, and at the same time thinning the prison walls. Chemists know a good deal now about albumen, and if they cannot tell us why life differentiates itself therein and thereby, they can tell you how not to spoil your breakfast by overdoing your egg.

The Size and Power of the Sun.

The sun is the life of us all. It keeps the world going. All terrestrial energy is but solar energy at second-hand. I will not discuss the distance of the sun, its dimensions, etc., and the methods of ascertaining them, although I might make a very interesting lecture from that point of view, but I will begin at once by stating a few facts, which are essential to an understanding of the sun's constitution. In the first place, then, the size of the sun is something enormous—absolutely beyond our power of conception. It is a great ball about 860,000 miles in diameter, or 110 times the diameter of the earth. Perhaps that means nothing to you; but just for a moment imagin yourself at the center of the sun, if it were possible for you to liv there. Suppose the earth were placed in the center of the sun, where would the moon come? Why, it would be only a little more than half way to the solar surface. If the earth were at the center of the sun, the moon would circle around the earth about half-way from the center of the sun to its surface. The radius of the sun is about 430,000 miles, and the distance of the moon from the earth is only 240,000 miles; so that if we lived in the center of the sun its shell would make an admirable sky for all the lunar motions. Next, the sun is about a million and a quarter times the bulk of the earth. Take 1,300,000 earths and roll them into one ball, and it would make a sphere about the size of the sun; but the sun is not correspondingly massiv, for it is only about 230,000 times as heavy as the earth. It follows, of course, that it is not so dense as the earth; it is only about one-quarter as dense, or a little more than the density of water. A bushel of sun would weigh only about a quarter as much as an average bushel of the earth. The sun, therefore, cannot well be a solid substance, It is not a ball of rock like the earth, but probably a great bubble—a mass of gases surrounded by a shell of cloud. Its power of attracting bodies is very great, of course, because its mass is so enormous. On the surface of the sun a body would weigh nearly twenty-eight times as much as on the earth, so that if I were on the surface of the sun I would be crushed. I could hardly lift my hand to my head, for the force of gravity would be twenty-eight times as strong as it is here, and it would increase the weight so that a pound here would weigh twenty-eight pounds there. Of course, you will see at once that this is a very important fact, as bearing on the constitution of the sun.—From a Lecture by Prof. C. A. Young.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

If a person who was born blind, and who had known the shape of objects only by the sense of touch, should be restored to sight, could he tell a sphere from a cube without touching it? WM. SCOTT.

2.—CHARADE.

In possession, I register one;
By permission, my second is done;
With the two I am one for a meal,
Either swine-flesh, or mutton, or veal.
ISAAC A. POOL.

3.—ANAGRAM.

"Though Barbarism jeers Benk bangs."
West Union, O. J. F. BECK.

4.—MATHEMATICS.

There is a square field such that the number of rods around it are equal to the number of acres within it. How many acres does it contain? G. W. WILLIAMS.

5.—A SHARP-SHOOTER'S INVOLVED CHARADE.

Make a mark a mile wide,
Half a mile to each side,
And fire in—the center—precise;
Only fire in reverse,
And the whole will rehearse
And the name of your gun it supplies;
Irwin, Iowa. J. K. P. BAKER.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 9, 1886.

1.—A M A M A
M I N I M
A N O N A
M I N I M
A M A M A

2.—An onion—It draws tears (steers). 3.—44 4-9 per cent. 4.—20 1-2 per cent.

SOLVERS.—Joseph F. Levy, G. W. Williams, W. R. King.

[I. A. Pool will please accept our thanks for box of valuable geological specimens. Also our thanks are due E. W. Phillips for elegant paper-cutter and ink-eraser.—ED. C. C.]

Another Prize.

A copy of Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia" is offered for the best poem contributed to the Children's Corner within a month of this date.

Correspondence.

LEIGHTON, ALA., Dec. 18, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought that I would write to you again, as I saw my other letter published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like to read the Children's Corner. I think it is very interesting. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since I could read, and how long before I can't remember, and I hope he will keep on taking it. I havn't been going to school very regularly this fall because I had the whooping-cough, but I clerk in the store, for the fall here is the busiest time. Papa thinks I am great help to him.

If you hav got time, please accept this invitation: I will now invite you to come and see us. But the most attention we can giv you will be to show you the negroes. We can show you more negroes in a week than you ever saw, and more religion to the square inch than you ever heard of. They (the colored people) are very religious. If you come, I will hav them sing religious songs for you. Here is a part of one on a piece of paper. This is all for this time. I hope I hav written this so you can read it. From your friend,

LIBBIE A. TRAUTMAN.

P.S.—If I were there I could sing it better than I can write it.

A NEGRO SONG.

"Some go to church
Dressed so fine,
Dey ain't got Jesus
In day mind.

CHORUS.

"Heah Gabil blow
In dat morn.

"In dat mornin'
Bright and fair,
In dat mornin'
Bright and fair,
Gwine to hitch
Up my wings and try de air.

CHORUS.

"Heah Gabil blow
In dat morn."

[Libbie's letter shows her to be bright and intelligent, liberal-minded and useful. THE TRUTH SEEKER and all our Liberal papers are educators, and we are glad for those who hav the privilege of reading them. We should like dearly to visit Libbie some time, and hope we may in the future hav that pleasure; and we shall certainly enjoy hearing the negroes chant their weird melodies.—ED. C. C.]

BEEBE, MICH., Jan. 4, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I see so many little correspondents in the Children's Corner I thought I would write too. I am eleven years old. I hav two brothers and two sisters. The oldest and youngest are boys; the youngest is twenty months old, and can talk everything. I wish you could see him; we think he is awful sweet. Papa got the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885. It is very nice, and we admire the pictures very much. And when Reynolds was at Ithaca he got Remsburg's "Bible Morals" and "False Claims." Papa and mamma went to hear Mr. Reynolds lecture; they said he lectured very nicely. I hope my letter will be printed. I will try and do better next time. GRACE G. PEET.

[We are glad to read such a good letter as the above. Grace is having the advantage of healthy reading matter, and we trust and believe she will grow up to be a truly noble young lady. We hope she will write again. Thanks for the motto card.—ED. C. C.]

PIPESTON, MINN., Jan. 5, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I see so many little correspondents in the Children's Corner, I thought I would write too. I liv on a farm near the Pipestone quarry. The Indians come here every summer and dig pipestone, and make their pipes and trinkets.

Pa takes your paper, and four other Liberal papers. My pa writes poetry sometimes; he wrote a legend of the Pipestone quarry. I think it is nice.

I am ten years old, and this is my first letter. If you think it is worth publishing I will try and write again. Your friend,

EVA WHITEHEAD.

[It is a nice letter for the first one. We shall be glad to hear from Eva again.—ED. C. C.]

PIPESTONE, MINN., Jan. 6, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am visiting with my Aunt Eva, and she wrote a letter, so I thought I would write a little. I am six years old, and go to school every day. I liv a half-mile from the school-house. I liv in Pipestone. Pa does not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I hav seen the Children's Corner, and think it is nice, and thought I would like to hav my name in the paper, too. I don't want to make my letter too long. Yours with love,

EDITH WHITEHEAD.

[We hope to hear again from Edith. Next time write about your pets and playmates, the school and your lessons.—ED. C. C.]

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL,
Price, 25 cents.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Weland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 4-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

PERSONAL.

A man 42 years of age, a Liberal, not wealthy, but having some means, would like to correspond with some lady who is also a Liberal, not over 35, of good family, fair education, and willing to work. Best of references given and required. Object, marriage. Address C. W. P.,
Care TRUTH SEEKER office,
2t4 33 Clinton Place, New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

Containing
COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-paged colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.
Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised. A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress: Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.
Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. BY KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishiug a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

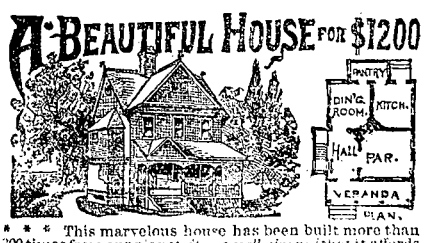
REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priets's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav these busts.

Iron-Clad and Manna Series.



IRON CLAD SERIES.

Atonement. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Secular Responsibility. G. J. Holyoake. 5 cts.
Buddhist Nihilism. Prof. Max Muller. 10 cents.
Religion of Inhumanity. F. Harrison. 20 cts.
Relation of Witchcraft to Religion. Lyall. 15 cents.
Essay on Miracles. David Hume. 10 cents.
Land Question. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Were Adam and Eve Our First Parents? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Why Do Men Starve? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cts.
Logic of Life. Deduced from the Principle of Freethought. G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
A Plea for Atheism. Charles Bradlaugh. 10 cts.
Large or Small Families? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Superstition Displayed, with a Letter of Wm. Pitt. Austin Holyoake. 5 cents.
Defense of Secular Principles. Chas. Watts. 5 cents.
Is the Bible Reliable? Charles Watts. 5 cents.
The Christian Deity. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Moral Value of the Bible. Chas. Watts. 5 cts.
Freethought and Modern Progress. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christianity: Its Nature and Influence on Civilization. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Thoughts on Atheism. A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Is There a Moral Governor of the Universe? A. Holyoake. 5 cents.
Philosophy of Secularism. C. Watts. 5 cts.
Has Man a Soul? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Is There a God? Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Labor's Prayer. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Poverty; Its Cause and Cure. M. G. H. 10 cents.
Science and Bible Antagonistic. C. Watts. 5 cents.
Christian Scheme of Redemption. Charles Watts. 5 cents.
Logic of Death; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? G. J. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Poverty; Its Effects on the Political Condition of the People. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.

MANNA SERIES.

New Life of David. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
200 Questions Without Answers. 5 cents.
Dialogue Between a Christian Missionary and a Chinese Mandarin. 10 cents.
Queries Submitted to the Bench of Bishops by a Weak but Zealous Christian. 10 cents.
Search After Heaven and Hell. A. Holyoake 5 cents.
New Life of Jonah. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Few Words About the Devil. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
New Life of Jacob. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Daniel the Dreamer. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Specimen of the Bible. Esther A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Acts of the Apostles; A Farce. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Ludicrous Aspects of Christianity. A. Holyoake. 10 cents.
Twelve Apostles. Charles Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
Who Was Jesus Christ? Charles Bradlaugh. cents.
What Did Jesus Teach? Charles Bradlaugh 5 cents.
New Life of Abraham. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cts
New Life of Moses. Chas. Bradlaugh. 5 cents.
A Secular Prayer. A. Holyoake. Per doz., 10 cts

A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE FOR $1200

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl or shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.
Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION,
(Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

Poetry.

Excelsior.

The subjoined poem appeared recently in the Halifax Chronicle. It is by an eminent Nova Scotian Freethinker, who, though self-taught, is familiar with Greek and Hebrew, and can converse in several modern languages. Although at present employed in the comparativly obscure, though honorable and useful, vocation of a country school teacher, it is to be hoped the world of letters will yet hear more of this accomplished writer and brilliant conversationalist.—R. J. MOFFAT.

Mit Jedem Schritt wird weiter
Die rasche Lebensbahn,
Und heiter, immer heiter
Steigt unser Blick hinan.—Goethe.

The age of the gods is past,
The reign of man is begun,
And the specters are vanishing fast
'Neath the still ascending sun.

The apostles of fear and of force,
Though armed with celestial right,
Hav finished the shameless course,
Hav lost the unnatural fight.

Opinions, once rooted as deep,
And overshadowing all,
Hav felt the morn breezes sweep
And are swaying to their fall.

Old power, once held to be firm
As the everlasting hills,
Is reluctantly nearing its term
As the popular mandate wills.

Less bitter the sectary's strife,
More wholesome the social breath,
As the growing hope in life
Is supplanting the hope in death.

No tyrant's mock thunder e'er stilled
The watchword by Liberty given;
But her mission will not be fulfilled
Till the last ancient fetter is riven;

Till not one heart that has bled
Shall longer be trampled down
And not one human head
Shall put itself up for a crown.

Cape Island. —M. H. Nickerson.

A Mountain Out of a Molehill.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I notice that I am accused of "backing down" from a debate with Elder Hill. Well, if my unwillingness to bear all my own expenses for a journey of several hundred miles, and receive no compensation for time devoted to such work, is a "back-down," so be it.

THE TRUTH SEEKER says: "Allowing it to be as Mr. Geddes says, Mr. Jamieson can only be blamed for not notifying the Freethinkers that he would hav to be remunerated. But let us hear Mr. Jamieson's side of the story."

Well and truly stated. I would hav been to blame if I had not notified the Freethinkers that I would hav to be remunerated. That is just what I did do. I offered to come and hold the debate for less than I receive for a course of lectures occupying the same length of time. In other words, I was willing to contribute $10 for the sake of having the debate with the Adventist. Indeed, I hav not been able to coax an Adventist into debate for the past eight years, and only one since I debated with Elder Miles Grant in Salem, Mass., in 1874.

I stated to Mr. G. W. Rima, a stanch Liberal, what I could do, and suggested that an admission fee would probably defray the expenses of the debate. It was understood among the Liberals generally, in that part of the country, that I could not come and debate for nothing any more than I could travel over the United States and lecture for nothing. Nor did the Liberals expect me to do it. During the summer, fearing that the Adventists might seek to avoid the debate, I wrote several times inquiring about the prospects of a war of words. I wrote to the elder also, and to this day not a line in reply hav I received from him. Mr. Rima wrote me, stating that the Adventists refused to allow an admission fee to be charged, although they were to receive one-half. He then said to them that if they would hold the debate at Sterling Center instead of Good Thunder the Liberals, who are quite numerous at Sterling Center, would bear the expenses by subscription. As the two places are but twelve miles apart, I believe, there was no valid objection to the change if they were as anxious for the debate as they try to make people believe.

Up to the matter of admission fee, we agreed to everything they required. They refused to agree to anything we wanted. We asked nothing of them which Christians, really desirous of debating, hav not again and again consented to. I wanted to meet them then, while I was on the ground. They put it off four months, and then objected to every plan we could devise to bring about the debate. I could obtain not one word from my would-be opponent until the time appointed expired, when he develops an astonishing eagerness for the fray, and publishes far and near his wonderful victory in a battle which did not come off. I hav had several Christians fail to meet me according to agreement, two this very season; one of them last week telegraphing me that he could not debate with me. I never thought of "rushing into print" over it.

Hereafter I will insist that Christian controversialists comply with the usual order and rules of debate. It is difficult to get any of them to agree to a complete arrangement beforehand.

Now, what will be thought of our Christian valiants when I tell your readers that my Liberal friends hav been trying their best to bring them to toe the mark? Under date of December 25th, friend Rima writes: "I was in conversation with an Adventist who said he 'was very, very sorry that the debate had fallen through, we were so anxious to show the frailty of one side and the genuinness of the other.' Now, professor, mark the change of the falsifiers. I remarked if they would but grant us one desire we would meet them without fail. I would sign an agreement under a forfeit. I explained why we wanted it moved to Sterling Center. Well, he did not know whether Elder Hill would care to debate now since he had been fooled once. He hardly thought they would accept the proposition. Ah! I said, you are not so anxious, after all, to hav the prophecies analyzed, and this Jesus Christ business debated.

I am yours fraternally,
"G. W. RIMA."

Now I come to Mr. Geddes, an earnest Liberal and a good man; but in this instance he renders judgment against me without waiting to hear the other side of the question, or rather listened to the other side, but not to our side. Liberals usually want to hear both sides before they decide. He says: "Had Mr. Jamieson informed his Liberal friends that it would be necessary for them to bear his expenses, the amount could easily hav been raised and the appointment kept."

Mr. Rima, who had the business management of my series of lectures last June, knows just what was expected. What Mr. Geddes thinks I ought to hav done I did do. In the whole transaction I left not a single prop on which to rest a single objection by Freethinker or Christian, friend or foe. Mr. Rima, who had the matter in charge, did his best to bring on the debate.

Mr. Geddes says "the amount could easily hav been raised." Yes, if the debate could hav been held at Sterling Center, or perhaps at Delavan, or Mapleton, or Mankato, or any other point where Liberals are numerous enough to pay a lecturer for his time. At Good Thunder there are but few Liberals. Knowing this, and knowing that there was but one chance left for them to avoid a debate, the Adventists greedily seized upon it for the sole purpose, it would seem, of blowing their horn.

Mr. Geddes says: "Some of the Liberals declare that they would sooner hav paid the whole bill themselvs than hav a back-down before the church people."

It is a pity those Liberals were not sooner discovered. I know Mr. Rima as one of the most fearless of Freethinkers and an excellent business man. In a business capacity he travels many miles almost every day. Yet he never met with any Liberals "willing to pay the whole bill themselvs."

I regret that my old friend, Geddes, has allowed himself to be deceived by the Adventists. Their aim has been to make it appear to the community that the Infidels dare not meet them. There is not one word of truth in it. Everywhere I go I challenge the clergy to meet me in debate; invite them to occupy half the time during my course of lectures even. Do you suppose they accept? Not once in a score of towns. They either hold opposition meetings (as they are doing at this very time in Dexter, Mo.), or else wait until I am away filling other engagements, when they roar in their pulpits and tear Infidelity to tatters. Is it reasonable to expect that a lecturer can then travel half-way across a continent, at his own expense, to debate with some obscure preacher who probably has never been heard of outside of his own county? I am always ready to debate whenever and wherever arrangements can be made. I hav just closed a twelve sessions' debate, two hours each, in Maitland, Mo., with one of the biggest guns of the Campbellites, Dr. D. R. Dungan, of Des Moines, Iowa. Some of the more sanguin Christians were so sure that the Lord and victory were on their side that they prophesied that Jamieson would not appear after the first day's battle. I managed to be on hand through the entire twelve sessions. It is as impossible to stop Christians from boasting as roosters from crowing. The Christians sent six hundred miles, to Lexington, Ky., for the president of a college, Prof. I. B. Grubbs, to meet me at Burlington Junction, Mo. We debated six nights. I met Rev. J. W. Damon at Savannah, Mo., four nights. These encounters hav all taken place within a few weeks. I mention them to show how terribly frightened I am when a Christian Goliath unsheaths his controversial sword. The public love debate; but no better than I do. At the one just held in Maitland the church was packed after the first session; nine out of ten, Christians. People were in their seats sometimes two hours before the advertised time. No better opportunity can a Freethinker hav for showing the weakness of the Bible and the Christian religion. If the Christian yearns to expose the frailty of Infidelity, we are willing that he should hav the chance.

Afer all the Adventist flourish of trumpets, I am satisfied that all the Freethinkers can neither coax, drag, nor drive them into debate. I know them of old. With them it is "all cry and no wool," with very few exception. Elder Hill may be one of the exceptions. We will see. I hav never in all my travels found Christians so eager for debate as they appear to be. I hope it is not all seeming.

I therefore say to my Liberal friends in Delavan, Sterling Center, Good Thunder, and Mapleton that, as there are Liberals found who are willing to defray the expenses of a debate, and throw the doors open to the public, I will meet Elder Hill in a debate of twelve nights. We do not want a mere skirmish of five or six hours.

1. I accept the elder's question, "Is the Bible a Divine Revelation?"

2. The usual rule of half-hour speeches each evening, two-hour sessions, affirmativ opening, negativ closing, to be adopted. This brings the disputants into close quarters.

3. To prevent dodging or evasion on the part of either disputant, I submit this rule, laid down by a Methodist clergyman in his debate with me: "Any categorical question asked by either disputant must be answered by his opponent on the spot without equivocation." I will abide by that rule. Let us see which of us avoids the conflict.

4. Each disputant shall select his own moderator, they two to choose a third party, who shall preside as chairman of the debate.

5. The moderators shall preserve order, suppress undue manifestations of applause, and decide points of order when appealed to by either disputant.

I appoint, as my moderator, Mr. G. W. Rima, of Sterling Center, Minn.

If my opponent chooses, I will accept the affirmativ, or laboring oar, for the first six nights, or the last six, on this form of the question: The Bible is of human origin, and its teachings are immoral.

I will affirm that during one-half the debate, my opponent to affirm his proposition the other half.

To my Liberal friends I say, I will come and hold the debate for less than half price. For a debate of eight sessions I receive $100 and traveling expenses. I will hold a debate of twelve sessions for $75, and bear my own traveling expenses.

The debate ought to be held in a large place. But I leave that with the Liberals and Christians to decide.

If Elder Hill and his friends refuse to meet us on these just terms, I throw the challenge down to any other denomination.

I would be glad to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER print the elder's letter, and then I would like to hav the privilege of answering it. Christians expect more favors from Infidels than Christians are willing to grant. Can't we afford it? I havn't seen his letter. Let us hav it. It is doubtless an invaluable addition to classical literature. W. F. JAMIESON.

Lake City, Minn.

WOMAN,
In the Past, Present, and Future.
BY A. BEBEL.

Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.

"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 27 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.

"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.

LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth $1.25. For Sale at this Office

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.
Sent on receipt of price,

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson and Unbeliever-Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.;

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.
For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. MCDOUGALL and Mrs. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections. and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popula R
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcibl E
Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi A Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cure D
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literat I
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young me N
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interestin G

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two work for hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

THE CANARY. A New and Remarkable Work on the Care of the Pet Canary. By mail, 50 cents. Contents table mailed free. Lady Agents Wanted. Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th Street, New York.
3t4

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Friendship Liberal League No. 257, of Philadelphia, will celebrate the 149th anniversary of the birth of the Author-hero,

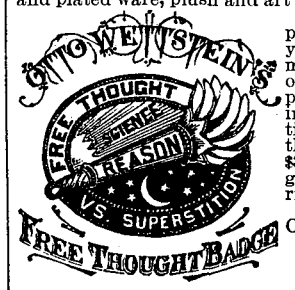
THOMAS PAINE,

January 31st, 1886, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets, at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M., to consist of addresses, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. Entertainments free.

Supper at 5:30 P.M. Tickets for supper, 25 cents.

Liberals throughout the state invited.
3t2

"ZIITA KII."



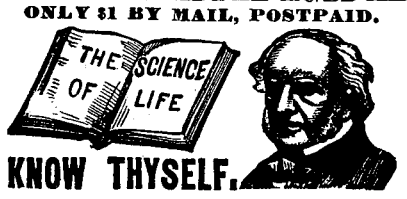
A new book by Owen E. Longsdorf, of interest to all Liberals and lovers of thought. Neatly bound in cloth, gilt edges, on fine heavy paper. Price one dollar, postage free.

Address the author, 12 Louisa street, Williamsport, Pa. 3teow2

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods, My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged, and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50 or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price, only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissel, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bullfinch St., Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FAITHFUL BEYOND DEATH.—THE STORY OF A MISSIONARY, IN THREE PARTS.—Puck.

The Missionary. The Reception Committee. VOICE FROM WITHIN.—"My friend, you forgot to say grace."

Gems of Thought.

THE Christians surely hav very few stones to throw at the Mohammedans on the score of massacres and persecutions.—D. M. Bennett.

EVER remember that thou and everything thou beholdest within and around thee, all that befalls thee and others, is no disjointed fragment, no wild chaos of atoms or casualties, but that it all springs according to eternal laws from the one primeval source of all life, all reason, and all good. This is the essence all religion.—Strauss.

If everything that happens is God's will,
Both good and ill,
Then say wherein
Rests man's responsibility? Though sin
Go hand in hand with him through ways of shame,
Is man to blame?

If everything that happens is God's will,
Both good and ill,
What credit hath
That man who ever shuns the evil path,
And treads with feet that do not hesitate
The true and straight?

Do the things external which fall upon thee distract thee? Giv thyself time to learn something new and good, and cease to be whirled around. How much trouble he avoids who does not look to see what his neighbor says, or does, or thinks, but only to what he himself does, that it may be just and pure!—Antoninus.

COSMO, duke of Florence, had a desperate saying against perfidious or neglecting friends, as if their wrongs were unpardonable. "You shall read," said he, "that we are commanded to forgiv our enemies; but you shall never read that we are commanded to forgiv our friends." But yet the spirit of Job was in a better turn: "Shall we," saith he, "take good at God's hands, and not be content to take evil also?" and so of friends in a proportion. —Bacon's Essays.

ALL things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. . . Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, hav we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."—Jesus.

BURKE thought about life as a whole, with all its infirmities and all its pomps. With none of the mental exclusivness of the moralist by profession, he fills every page with solemn reference and meaning; with none of the mechanical bustle of the common politician, he is everywhere conscious of the mastery of laws, institutions, and government over the character and happiness of men. Besides thus diffusing a strong light over the awful tides of human circumstance, Burke has the sacred gift of inspiring men to use a grave diligence in caring for high things, and in making their lives at once rich and austere. Such a part in a literature is indeed high. We feel no emotion of revolt when Mackintosh speaks of Shakspere and Burke in the same breath as being both of them above mere talent. And we do not dissent when Macaulay, after reading Burke's works over again, exclaims: "How admirable! The greatest man since Milton!"—John Morley's Burke.

THERE is no method of reasoning more common, and yet none more blamable, than, in philosophical disputes, to endeavor the refutation of any hypothesis by a pretense of its dangerous consequences to religion and morality. When any opinion leads to absurdities, it is certainly false; but it is not certain that an opinion is false because it is of dangerous consequence. Such topics, therefore, ought entirely to be forborne, as serving nothing to the discovery of truth, but only to make the person of an antagonist odious.—Hume on Liberty and Necessity.

Odds and Ends.

ON the face of it, it would appear to be somewhat personal on the part of a California preacher to mention the purchase of a mule by a brother minister as a "remarkable instance of self-possession."

THE editor of a Rockbridge, Va., newspaper is also a preacher. When a form is pied, or a compositor makes a little error which takes a column of the paper to explain, he goes upstairs and delivers a sermon in the composing-room. Don't mention it. But although distended by a big moral, the story is a lie.

"MOTHER," said a little girl, looking up from her book, "what does transatlantic mean?" "Oh, across the Atlantic, of course. Don't bother me; you made me forget my count." "Does trans always mean across?" "If you don't stop bothering me with questions you'll go to bed." "Then does transparent mean a cross parent?" Ten minutes later she was resting in her little couch.

TEN LITTLE BIGOTS.

[The appended verse is republished by request of an esteemed reader.]

Ten little Bigots chalked out a line,
One couldn't toe it, then there were nine.

Nine little Bigots full of zeal and hate,
One asked time to think, then there were eight.

Eight little Bigots fencing roads to heaven,
One cut across the roads, then there were seven.

Seven little Bigots, at each other shying bricks,
One's pet creed was smashed, then there were six.

Six little Bigots fighting who should drive,
One got down and walked, then there were five.

Five little Bigots wrangling more and more,
One heard of Darwin, then there were four.

Four little Bigots still could not agree,
One kicked his catechism, then there were three.

Three little Bigots, madder yet they grew,
One cried, "Damn it all!" then there were two.

Two little Bigots, each with loaded gun,
Aimed one at the other, left was only one.

One little Bigot, crowing all alone,
Tackled Bob Ingersoll then there were none.

THE GREAT REVIVAL SCHEME.

"Dis heah is er great 'vival dat we'se got on han', Brother Marcus," said Parson Hickney, addressing a co-laborer in a great cause.

"Yas, indeed; yas, indeed. It do me er heep er good ter see all dese ole sinners 'fessin' de Lawd, sho's yer born'd it do."

"Me, too, Brudder Marcus. It do 'pear like de day o' de penycost hab come at de las', an' I thanks de Lawd fur it. Start up er nuder hime, dar," he added, turning to the congregation. "Yas, Brudder Marcus, we'se gwine ter git our 'ward fur all dis good work we'se doin'. Say, deah brudder, whut does de c'leckshuns ermount ter dis ebenin'?"

"Ten dollars an' er quarter."

"I thanks de Lawd fur dat, too. Say, Brudder Marcus, we ain' gwine ter steal dat money, is we?"

"No, indeed."

"Jes' gwine ter 'joy ourse'fs er leetle arter sarvices, ain' we?"

"Dat's all."

"Dar's plenty red plan'ation liker down de street, ain' dar?"

"Plenty o' hit."

"Gwine ter git some, ain' we?"

"'Deed we is."

"Fine 'vival dis, Brudder Marcus."

"Monstrous."

"An' we'se thankful."

"We is dat."

"Wall, let 'em sing er nuder hime an' den we'll go. Sing er nuder hime, please. Brudder Jake, please start de chune an' de Lawd'll jine in arter er while."—Arkansas Traveler.

A PERSON of inelegant Leisure, who had deservedly gained the Reputation of being the Laziest man in all the Town, became such a Nuisance to his neighbors that they determined to bury him unless he would undertake to Do Something for himself. As he resolutely refused to make an Effort, they placed him in a coffin and bore him toward the Graveyard at the Head of a Procession. A benevolent Farmer, unwilling to see a Fellow-Creature buried alive, stopped the procession and offered to giv the poor unfortunate a Bushel of Corn if he might be allowed to liv. When this generous offer was repeated to the would-be Corpse, he partly raised his Head out of the Coffin and languidly inquired, "Is it shelled?" The benevolent Farmer was obliged to admit that it was not shelled. "Then," replied the Person of Inelegant Leisure, "let the Funeral go on."

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

News of the Week.

THERE is great suffering in Ireland from famin.

LAST week sleighing was good in and around New York.

ABOUT $115,000 has been subscribed to the Grant monument fund.

THE health of Pope Leo is in a bad way He has trouble with his kidneys.

THE New York cigar-makers are on strike, and a general lock-out is looked for.

ADDED to its small-pox epidemic, Montreal, Can., has just had a half-million dollar fire.

J. E. MUNSON, a stenographer, has invented and patented a machine for setting type by electricity.

ALMOST a water famin was caused at Cleveland, O., last week by slush clogging the supply shaft.

A MINE at Almy, Wyo. Ter., exploded from fire damp last Saturday, and thirteen men were kiled.

A TYPE-SETTING tournament just held at Chicago was won by Barnes, of New York, Champion McCann taking second place.

HENRY NORMAN HUDSON, the distinguished Shaksperian scholar, died at Cambridge last Sunday. He was seventy-two years old.

THE Newark children who were bitten by a mad dog, and who were sent to M. Pasteur at Paris to be treated, hav returned in excellent health.

JOE COOK spoke to the American Temperance Union at Chickering Hall last Sunday. He said America was the drunkest people on the planet.

THE value of taxable real estate in New York city, as estimated by the tax commissioners, is $1,206,112,404. This is an increase of nearly $38,000,000 over last year.

MISS KATHARINE BAYARD, eldest daughter of T. F. Bayard, United States secretary of state, was found dead in her bed last Saturday. The cause of her death is unknown.

WE stop the press to announce that the Rev. James C. Clarke, Methodist, of Hazleton, Pa., has been acquitted by a church committee of the charge of stealing eggs.

A NEW telephone company, having head quarters in Chicago and capital of $10,000,000, will prosecute the claims of Professor Gray to priority in the invention of the Bell telephone.

PROF. O. S. FOWLER, the phrenologist, was arrested in Buffalo, N. Y., last week for illegally practicing medicin. Mr. Fowler is 76 years of age, and belongs to the well-known firm of Fowler & Wells.

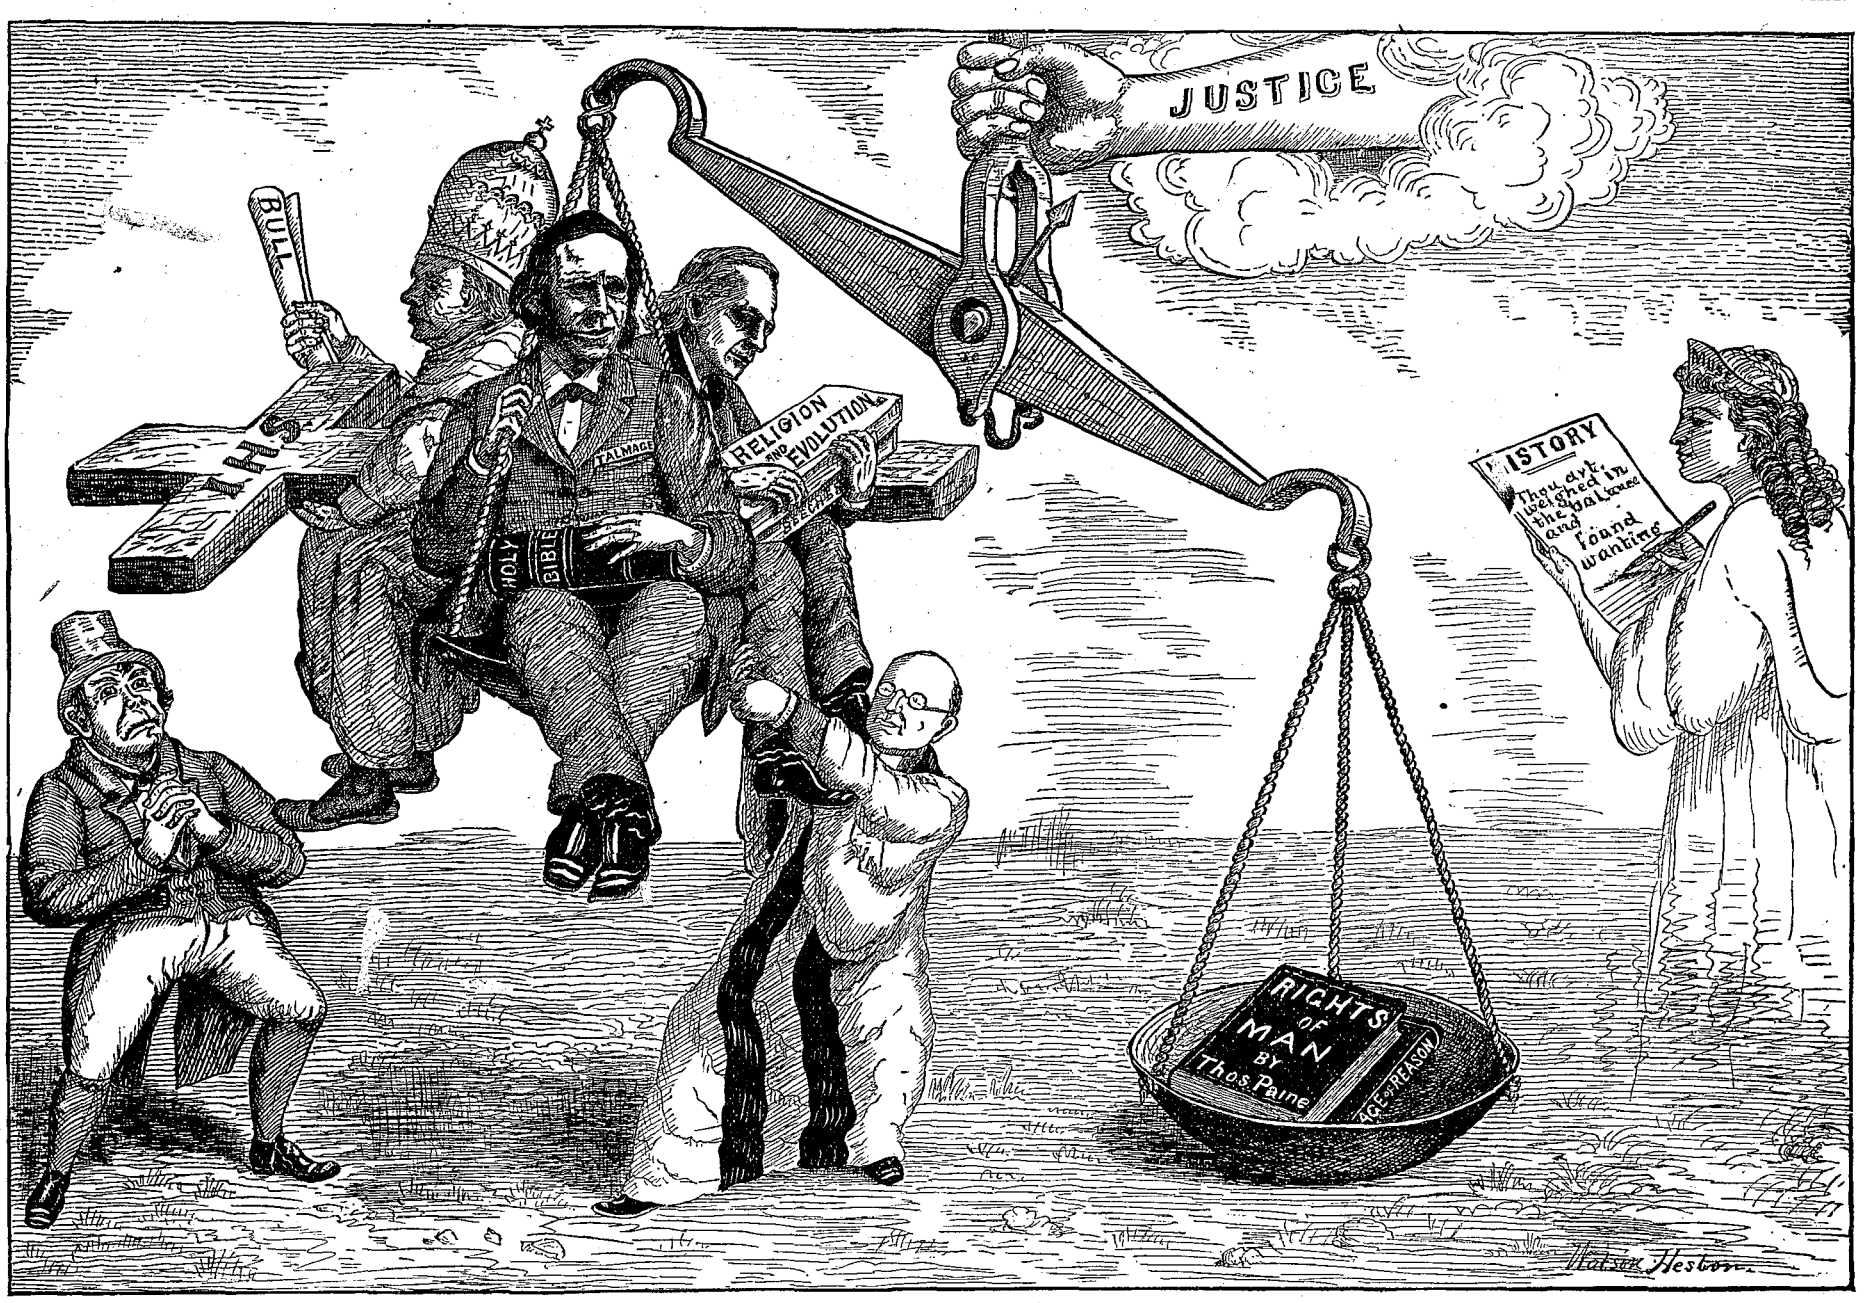
UNDER the head, "Two Infidels," the New York Sun of the 15th says: "Colonel Robert Ingersoll and the Rev. H. W. Beecher were unanimously elected members of the Thirteen Club on Wednesday evening."

THE dynamiters of Chicago are endeavoring to get up a scare by announcing their preparation for blowing up the Illinois militia, but the world at large does not enthuse, and moves on with its accustomed indifference.

THE people of Baltimore desire a delivery of their mails on Sunday, and efforts hav been made to procure it, but without effect. Postmaster General Vilas refuses the petition out of respect to the alleged moral sense of the community.

A MONUMENT to John C. Calhoun is projected at Charleston, S. C. It is to be 33 feet high and 30 feet square at the base. Calhoun (1782-1850), it will be remembered, was a nativ of South Carolina. He was twice vice-president, and a statesman of eminent attainments.

THE preliminary investigation into the case of the Rev. Dr. I. C. Pershing, president of the Pittsburgh M. E. Female College, began on Tuesday, and will continue a week or perhaps longer. The trial will be of interest to all Methodists in the country. The charges are embraced under the general head of conduct not in accordance with the rules of the church.



ST. MARY'S Catholic church at Fort Wayne, Iowa, is a wreck. On Jan. 13th a steam boiler in the building exploded, and a loss of $65,000 was the result, when a little watchfulness on the part of the Catholic god might hav saved the whole business. The lamentable feature of the affair is that one of the doors fell upon a thirteen-year-old school girl, killing her instantly.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York. N. Y.. as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 5. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, January 30, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

THE JUDGMENT OF HISTORY.

Notes and Clippings.

AN experienced vocalist has, it is said, during fourteen years cured any number of cases of obstinate cough by prescribing the free use of raw oysters as a diet. The remedy is easily tried.

THE vicar of Masham, England, thus concluded a sermon to his flock: "And now, friends, which is it to be—Salisbury, Churchill, and heaven, or Gladstone, Chamberlain, and hell?"

GIN FUN, a San Francisco laundryman, has joined the Anti-Coolie League, and posts over the door of his washee-house the sign: "The Chinese must go. None but Melican man employed here."

"Now, sir, you are better," said a Boston faith doctor to a patient he had been treating; "tell me just how you feel." "Well, sir," replied the victim, "I feel like a damned fool; how much is your bill?"

"The announcement that Bradlaugh was cheered on going to the House of Commons indicates," says the New York Times, "that the British mob has a keener sense than British society of what fair play requires. It had already been explained that Lord Salisbury's government did not intend to oppose the admission of Bradlaugh. But the confession that Bradlaugh is entitled to sit is a confession that he was entitled to sit in the last Parliament. That confession, in turn, is a confession that he has been the victim of a series of outrageous and scandalous persecutions which hav disgraced the House of Commons more deeply than any other of its actions for many years. The least that the house can in decency do for Bradlaugh is to reimburse him by bill for the heavy and almost ruinous expenses he has incurred in defending what is now acknowledged to be his right. He cannot be compensated by cheers alone."

A MAN in Minneapolis sued a church for $20,000 because he fell down a stairway which he took to be a dark closet. He lost his suit. The jury took the ground that if a man insists upon going to church, he must put up with the consequences.

A COUNTRY clergyman was one day catechising his flock. The sexton, being somewhat badly posted, thought it best to keep a modest place near the door. But the clergyman observed him, and, divining his object, called him forward. "John," said he, "what is baptism?" "Ou, sir," answered John, scratching his head, "ye ken—it's just saxpence to me, and fifteen pence to the precentor."—Redruth Times, Eng.

AN Alabama negro, about to be hung for a horrible crime last week, made the usual meet-me-on-the-golden-shore speech, concluding with the following brilliant remark: "I mus' leabe ye bekase de Lawd needs me, de angels am er callin' me, de redeemed am singing hallelujahs, and de grand choir needs one moah harp." Then the sheriff moved the crank, and the heavenly necessity went to his reward; or, as Texas Siftings puts it, he "played on an instrument of one string with the bridge down."

A PETITION for the introduction of cremation was recently laid before the German Reichstag, containing 23,365 signatures. The petition was signed by 1,942 physicians, 1,046 lawyers and professors, 1,015 government officials, 849 school-masters, 10 Protestant clergymen, 3 rabbis, 361 women, and 6,000 workingmen. The remaining names were those of merchants, manufacturers, tradesmen, and others. It will be seen that, as usual, the clergy are miles in the rear in this progressiv movement.

A WRITER in the People's Health Journal tells of a debilitated patient who did not do at all well on beef-tea, but was easily restored to health on a diet of bean soup. The only remarkable thing about this, says the Sun, is that the patient ever expected to derive strength and nourishment from beef tea alone. Considering that we hav upward of a hundred thousand doctors, and that a very large proportion of them are fully agreed that beef tea is almost valueless, except as a stimulant, it is surprising that people continue to look upon it as a food.

THE London Daily News reports that in Paris decorativ artists and sculptors are preparing to adapt themselvs to the crematory movement, which has now in its favor a vote of the municipal council adopting the plan of a mortuary furnace, and granting a site in Pere Lachaise, where it will operate early in 1886. The expense of cremation is not, it is settled, to exceed fifteen francs. The municipality will, at a future sitting, vote the construction of a sort of lay temple, where families will be allowed to keep urns, or other funereal vessels, containing the ashes of dead relativs. This will not necessarily do away with any religious ceremony short of that of consigning the dead to consecrated ground; but, as M. Koechlin Schwartz says, there is no reason why urns may not be consecrated, or why Protestants, Catholics, Jews, and Freethinkers may not build a vast mausoleum in which the ashes of thousands could be deposited in beautiful vessels without injury to the living. It is probable that, cremation being now legal in such an art center as Paris, new and beautiful forms of artistic decoration will grow out of it. The time for the combustion of an adult at Pere Lachaise will be two hours.

A PETITION is being circulated in Boston for signatures, which states that "the right of a citizen of Massachusetts to obtain justice ought not to be impaired on account of the theological opinions of his witnesses," and asks that the clause of the public statutes of that state which says that the evidence of a person's "disbelief in the existence of God may be received to affect his credibility as a witness" be repealed. This clause is unjust, not to Atheists only, but to all suitors in Massachusetts courts; for their interests are liable to be injured by allowing the religious opinions of witnesses to affect the credibility of their testimony.

THE repetition of the sectarian troubles which agitated Long Island City some years ago, and which culminated in the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, is threatened. A large number of the taxpayers of the first ward wish to know by what right the priests of the St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, Hunter's Point, are allowed on certain church holidays to go to the school and march the Catholic children from their class-rooms and lead them across the street to the church to hear mass. As the Catholic children form seventy-five per cent of the attendance, some of the class-rooms are entirely emptied on such occasions.

Communications.

Letters to a Catholic Friend.

II.

St. Clement of Alexandria was a stanch advocate of spurious books, and quotes freely from the "Sibyl." In fact, most of your early fathers insist that the "Sibyl" was inspired of God and confirmed by authority of St. Peter and Paul. Is was held to be equally authentic with the gospels, and, as will be seen hereafter, was quoted as late as the fourth century to prove that Jesus had once lived. The interpolations bearing on Jesus hav been proven beyond the question of a doubt; not one Christian commentator of any note denies it. Among them I find the following:

With five loaves and two fishes,
He will satisfy five thousand men in the desert.
Then, gathering up the fragments which remain,
He will fill twelve baskets for the confirmation of many.

Also an acrostic, the initial letters being: "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior, Cross." So you see, my friend, even in those early days, there was a question as to his existence, else why these forgeries? Archbishop Wake, no mean authority on these matters, says: "In the early days many spurious books were forged and published by the fathers, who did not scruple to quote them as true and genuin." St. Clement wrote a commentary on the scriptures called "Hypotyposis." Your church, ages after it had canonized him, declared that it was Infidel in its tendencies, and Pope Benedict XIV. anathematized the saint and struck his name off the calendar.

Origen comes next. "He was," says Rev. Dr. Lardner, "a bright light in the church of Christ and one of those rare personages that hav done honor to human nature." He was the first author to giv a distinct catalog of the books of the New Testament. He taught that "Christianity and Paganism, when rightly understood, differed in no essential points, but had a common origin, and were really one and the same religion." He claimed that the father existed before the son, but that no human mind can comprehend "how the unbegotten god is made the father of the only begotten son." This is precisely the position which Infidels take, and is the reason why they do not bother themselvs about the unknowable. Origen harps upon the Old Testament, and when pushed has recourse to faith. In the much-vaunted work, "Origen versus Celsus," he puts up his man of straw and knocks him about at pleasure; but when Celsus objected to the reappearance of Jesus after death, and asked why he did not appear publicly, all your great authority could say was that "none could see him except those who received eyes capable of such sight." He admits that Barnabas's statement in regard to the mental and moral status of the apostles was correct—they being not only very wicked men, but the scum of creation, and claims that the Christians of his day were performing greater works than Jesus. In the excess of zeal he construed too literally the passage in Matt. xix, 12, as he had a half-dozen lady amanuenses. Sober second thought, too late, however, caused him to regret his action. Tired of defending that which, if true, should hav been self-apparent in those early days, he relapsed into Infidelity. Your church still quotes him.

St. Hippolytus is indebted to Baron Bunsen for his present prominent position in church circles, as the baron found his "Refutation of All Heresies" in 1842 at Mount Athos. As life is short and space in THE TRUTH SEEKER valuable, I will simply giv you one short quotation and remark that if you were my direst foe I might hope that you would be condemned to read his work—I don't say understand it, but read it. "Now this sole and supreme God," says he, "first by reflection begets the word, not the word in the sense of speech, but as the indwelling reason of the universe. Him alone he begat out of things existing; for that which was, was the father himself, the being born of whom was the cause of all things produced." I desire to treat your holy writers respectfully, but let me ask you, as a lawyer, if a client of yours had written the above, would you object to a commission de lunatico inquirendo?

St. Cyprian is the next on the roll of honor—"Cyprian the bishop." "There were bishops before him, there were bishops after him, but never has one so magnified the office as this bishop of Carthage." He was over fifty years old when he "joined the church." In less than two years he became bishop. He had been a roué and was considered one of the hardest cases in the city. In his epistle to Donatus he claims to hav "been born again, and set free from the bondage of his sins." His biographer Pontius, in extenuation of his early life, says, "The doings of a man should not be reckoned from any other point except from the time he is born of God." He was a man of great wealth, which he distributed among the poor as soon as he had a change of heart, but when he had attained the bishopric his property was restored to him, so it was claimed, by a signal exhibition of divine providence. He made the eucharist his hobby. He says that a nurse took a child of Christian parentage to a heathen temple, where the priest gave it some bread dipped in wine, the remains of a sacrifice. The mother, ignorant of this, brought the child to him, to partake of the eucharist, but the child was seized with fits and showed signs of a guilty conscience. After some trouble, the deacon succeeded in pouring a few drops of consecrated wine into its mouth, but "the holy eucharist could not remain in a body so defiled, and burst out of the child's polluted bowels." The number of instances given by Cyprian of how people suffered for having received the sacrament unworthily should hav satisfied every inquiring mind of those days. One well-authenticated instance would answer to-day. Cyprian was what might be called an involuntary martyr. Twice he ran away and hid himself, leaving his flock to the persecutions of the pagans. His various epistles to the lambs who had been caught and were awaiting sentence, exhorting them to stand steadfast, suffer for the truth, and gain their crowns, are certainly, under the circumstances, very amusing. However, from him I glean one fact, that in his day Rome was simply a bishopric, with no claims to supremacy, and he addresses its bishop as "colleague." In his 27th epistle he says, "The church is founded upon the bishops, and every act of the church is controled by them." His remains are preserved in Arles, having been carried there, so it is stated, by Charlemagne. The cathedrals in Venice, Compiegne, and Rosnay also claim the honor of possessing his entire skeleton.

St. Athanasius has enough theological glory in being the formulator of the creed which bears his name. The day for its defense has gone by. Therefore I'll pass it without comment. He vouches as an eye-witness to the truth of the records of Anthony, and that Satan visited the staint, admitted he felt uncomfortable while in the saint's presence, and that by his prayers he had deprived him (Satan) of the power of injuring mankind. Athanasius declares that an angel supplied Anthony every day with a half loaf of bread and a half pitcher of drinking water, and whenever anyone visited him, the angel, without having been previously notified, brought the same allowance for the visitor. His writings are filled with the wondrous doings of the monks, who were his firm friends, and defended and protected him during his several banishments. But impartial history has declared that these monks were disgustingly filthy in their habits, as, among other things, they were not allowed to bathe themselvs. Athanasius boasts of Anthony's holy horror at even the sight of bathing water, "by which, except under the direst necessity, his feet were never contaminated." Is it not barely possible, my friend, that this is the reason why the devil felt so uncomfortable in his presence?

Epiphanius, styled the "father of all bishops, a shining star among them; the pattern of ancient sanctity, and man of God-blessed memory," confines his attention principally to miracles. Besides the usual run, he testifies that several fountains and rivers were annually turned into wine. This was particularly the case with the river Nile in Egypt. There can be no doubt of the truth of this. He is not quoting on information derived from others, as he solemnly asseverates that he himself frequently drank the wine from the fountains and rivers. He is one of the stanchest advocates of the existence of Jesus, and as I am pleading my side of the question, I feel that you will excuse my not quoting his conclusiv arguments. They would surely convert every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

St. Ambrose, a lawyer by profession, was sent to Milan as governor. Shortly after his arrival the bishop died, and he was elected to the vacancy. Not being a Christian he was baptized, and immediately assumed the Episcopal robes. His works are many and cover almost every subject, but it is evident that all he knew of your religion or mysteries was due to their approximation to those of the pagan worship he had just left. Your church claims that the very moment he was invested with the Episcopal power, 'his mind was divinely illuminated," but as I am personally acquainted with several who hav been anointed with holy oil, knew them both before and after the ceremony, and hav never noticed any special illumination that I can now remember, either the story must be incorrect, or the oil, owing to age, has lost its power. Certainly Ambrose's works, so far as they treat of your mysteries, show no more knowledge, cogent reasoning, common sense, or illumination than those of the earlier writers. His works on morals are good, necessary, and well-timed, else the history of those days mislead me. Theologically speaking, you are welcome to whatever comfort you may gather from his writings. Like Cyprian, he extolled the sacraments, dwelt on them continually, and, among the thousand and one tales, relates that a personal friend was once shipwrecked. Taking a piece of the eucharist, which the faithful always carried around with them in those days, he tied it in a handkerchief around his neck, and though he could not swim, boldly plunged into the raging sea. A special wave took him on its crest and carried him safely ashore. The other equally marvelous stories are presumably as well authenticated as this, and just as credible.

Eusebius, the father of ecclesiastical history, comes next. He is the mainstay of commentators, as he was the compiler of the writings of many of the early fathers, which most probably would hav been lost but for his mention of them. I wish every intelligent Catholic would carefully read his history, as it goes further to prove my proposition than any other work I hav as yet met. I would be pleased to hav you study Book I., chap. ii, entitled, "Summary View of the Pre-existence and Divinity of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," in which you will find the current views and early teachings of your church. Then compare them with what is now taught, and ask some priest the cause and necessity for the change. Do not let him put you off by saying it is an uninspired work, and that the church recognizes the writer only as a historian, for Eusebius is quoted as the pillar of early Christianity, and compiler of all the so-called facts attesting to the divine origin of your religion. Read his admissions in chap. iii that "the name of Jesus, as also that of Christ, were both known and honored from ancient times." In chap. iv he admits that "the religion announced by Christ was neither unexpected nor strange;" and this read in connection with an essay by one of your early bishops, Faustus, who said, "Do you receive the gospels? Undoubtedly I do. Why, then, you also admit that Christ was born? Not so; for it by no means follows that in believing the gospels I should therefore believe that Christ was born," should satisfy any ordinary man that your Christ was simply an idea suggested by the meaning of the word anointed. The term was applied even to Cyrus, else your records are untrue, and every high priest was a Christ. Every petty ruler was also a Christ, and as he could not hope to hold his power over the people without the assistance of the priests, the addition of a little sacred oil to the coronation ceremonies invested him with supernatural powers, and the superstitious credulity of the masses, inculcated by the priests, helped on the fraud. Eusebius says that in his day the term Christ was applied to every faithful follower of the church. Possibly, my friend, if he had had your late personal experiences with a very pious deacon of the Methodist church, he would not hav attached the name Christ "to every pious person." In speaking of the Essenes, the monks of Egypt, he says: "The sacred writings used by this sect were none other than our gospels and the writings of the apostles." As it is a historical fact that the Essenes were in existence several hundreds of years prior to the Christian era, the advent of Jesus must therefore be proven from some source other than "our gospels." The reputation of Eusebius is not of the most savory nature, and his veracity may very reasonably be called into question, even by Infidels, since the Rev. Dr. Lardner and other orthodox commentators hav declared as an interpolation the passage in Josephus attesting to the existence of Jesus, and carried its perpetration home to the very door of this "greatest of ecclesiastical historians."

As I hav already made this letter too lengthy, I will carry my further remarks over to my next.

Yours truly, MCARTHUR.

Religious Toleration.

It seems to be an admitted rule that eccentric persons are always in the wrong. Happy, therefore, must we think it, considering that the concurrent testimony of physicians and philosophers adjudge all men to be more or less insane; that society, in obediance to secret laws of affinity, resolves itself into distinct circles, allowing each prudent lunatic to revise the display of his aberrations for congenial company and to enjoy his madness without forgetting his self-esteem. I plead only for the protection which this paragraph provides in the presentation of my thoughts upon the topic heading this paper. It is a wonder that the advocates of religious toleration hav never considered that, perchance, in this wide world there may be some aside from religionists who need toleration. Seemingly, this divine thing, religion, is the specialized thing which is ever in need of toleration, recognition, and protection. The devotees of this divine thing must be tolerated under all circumstances. It is a crime for any one to entertain an adverse opinion—this thing must be protected and tolerated. With consummate impudence this demand is made by the devotees of religion. I am not sure but this point is wisely taken. A divine thing is certainly sorely in need of protection and toleration. Its presumed author, seeing that he is in need of the devotion of these religious devotees, might reasonably enough demand that his divine religion should hav toleration of all nations; this it has had to a very large extent. This government, in its gracious liberality, has extended its protectiv toleration to all kinds of religions and religious practices, but, for some unaccountable reason, it never thought that there might be citizens of this nation without religion, who, in fact, might need the same kind of toleration granted to these religionists, especially when we remember how intolerant these devotees hav been through all history. We hav had enough religious toleration specialized—let us hav a little for the men and women who are so unfortunate—or fortunate, as the case may be—to hav no religion at all. These tolerated religions in this country are so infamously intolerant toward those who do not believe in the divine thing that they are ready to deny to them the rights of an American citizen. The most disreputable knave, being religious, can be heard in a court of justice, while a man every way trustworthy and honorable is excluded, and a hearing is denied him in this same court of justice, he being without religion. Is there anything more contemptible than this? And yet it is often repeated in our halls of justice.

This is not all that this tolerated, intolerant religion demands. It also demands that the condition of truth-telling is that you shall swear by the pains of hell, and a being who will inflict the same. The time is when we ought to hav toleration for decency, though it does not come in the dress of hypocrisy. Let us hav toleration for worthy men and women who cannot swear by the gods, neither heaven nor hell. This wholesale religious toleration in this country is one of the great causes of crime and indecent practices. It is a fruitful source of crime, inasmuch as this toleration concedes to the superstitious bigot the unmolested right to flaunt in the face of manliness a bloody scheme, a bloody victim, sin-atoning blood, sin-washing blood, innocent blood for the sins of guilt, and the acquittal of the guilty thereby, and consequently the encouragement of crime.

The world's history demonstrates this: Crimes—ninety-nine per cent of all crimes—are from this immunity from guilt through this bloody scheme, and still the cry is more toleration for these bigots. Yes, toleration for crime—that is what it is. I deny that any authority in this country has the right to tolerate or in any way protect crime. There is no liberty in such protection. There is no liberty in such toleration. Tolerate Freeman in his religious rite to kill his daughter. Tolerate the Mormon in his religious rite of polygamy. Tolerate the priesthood in wringing from their stupid devotees the secrets of their lives. Tolerate the incarceration of women in nunneries. Tolerate inquisitorial fires and hells where crime forever goes unpunished. Tolerate forced fastings and rites which are in violation of the common decencies of life. Tolerate baptism in ice-cold water. Tolerate the lawlessness of the Salvation Army and the free Methodist; and thus we find that every kind of foolish, harmful, and wicked practice is in vogue among these tolerated religious outlaws, and decency has no hearing or toleration unless it comes under some of these abominable superstitious religions. Let us hav toleration for science, philosophy, and investigation, though they chance to come with uncovered and unbaptized heads. I ask those who are in the interest of freedom—not that of anarchy—but freedom, which demands that no practice among these tolerated religions shall be tolerated or allowed that is inimical to the health of this community, or the interest of the commonwealth, ought not this nation to reserve the right to abate a nuisance at all times and in all places?

A nation should protect itself against all foes, and should not permit any religious or other practices that are indecent and tend to promote crime. It should protect its subjects against ecclesiastical dominations and the enforcement of a religion upon the people which will tend to make them less loyal and less competent to defend the honor of the nation. All of this must happen when their religion binds them to any foreign prince or potentate on earth or in heaven. Allegiance, first and last, is due the nation which will protect its subjects in the use of their constitutional rights, but to tolerate those whose practices are in violation of decency and tend to crime is quite another matter. In this wholesale toleration, this nation, by its indifference, has placed itself in criminal league with that very element which, some day not in the far future, will cost the nation dearly in its best blood. The Republican party is bidding for the Protestant vote by criminal neglect of religious usurpation; and, on the other hand, the Democratic party is bidding for the Catholic vote, through like criminal neglect of religious usurpation. Religions should hav no more toleration in their bad and criminal practices than the thief when he steals. The nation proposes to protect the people against contagious diseases. In this the state, through municipal law, assumes the right to protect even against that which religions hav ever claimed is the work of Gods, and to prevent plagues, famin, and pestilence, as far as possible; and, we ask, why not enter a legislativ protest against these religious indecencies, and that under the sanction of the national authority? Can any one render a good reason why the national government should permit an infringement upon the rights of the children of this nation, from whom our future lawmakers must come? Robbed by religions of the birthright of freedom, priestcraft challenges their rights from the day of their birth. A nation in self-protection must prohibit this priestly interference with the children of this republic. It is an unpardonable offense. It is high treason committed against an innocent childhood and the mothers of hat childhood—horrid mutilations, mental and physical. Every priest, Christian or Jew, deserves the unmitigated contempt of all manhood and womanhood for this treason which they are constantly committing against the children of the nation. They should not be allowed to look upon the innocent face of a child with these rites of savagery in their hands. Tolerate religions in these foul practices? It is a damnation thus to do. To tolerate in this government these imported filthy customs from the rotten carcase of a dead theology, is to tolerate a stench full of pestilence and danger to the stability and advancement of this nation. St. Patrick saints and Orangemen saints meet religiously, and the result is murder; but the religion guilty of these foul murders must be tolerated and protected. These Poles, coming here full of religion, fight over their religion and commit murders, all for Christ's sake; but this vile religion, guilty of the crime of murder, must be tolerated and protected.

These representativs of a foreign religion and a foreign God should not be allowed to bring their religion or their Gods with them any more than they should be allowed to bring their contagious diseases along. If any are to be excluded, there would be less danger to the nation in the exclusion of the former than the latter. They should at least be required to leave their scalping-knife and other instruments of butchery at home with their dead gods.

Such people should not be allowed, when they become citizens of this nation, to worship any foreign gods. They should worship the gods of this country—American gods; they are bad enough for all practical purposes. Is it not in violation of this nation's protectiv decency, when those who hav found asylum here are disturbers of the peace through the importation of habits and customs nativ in despotic governments, but only elements of discord and danger here? Importation should be denied to all of these, whether they come in a religious or a political form. The most of our riots and crime come from these sources, and they should not be tolerated in these disturbing practices.

But here is another religion bound by a foreign potentate—protected in its rite—that will not allow fighting for the honor or defense of the nation; and thus we pass from one to the other, and we ever find that they are an element of weakness to this nation. Would you by national legislation prohibit the religious devotees in their worship? No, by no means; but these practices to which we hav referred, and there are many others which are not healthful or innocent—all, at any rate, that lead or tend to indecency—ought to be abated, should not be tolerated any more than any other crime. Whenever they interfere with childhood, enforcing vows, baptism, or mutilation, then they should be pronounced criminal or a nuisance; and if criminal should be punished, and if the latter, abated. It may be assumed that religions are useful, and therefore should be tolerated and protected. So far as they are useful, that is all right, but this is not the point in debate. It is the unuseful, harmful, and indecent practices of these religions of which we complain Religion cloaks crime, and tends in many cases to develop the vilest traits in human character. To illustrate: Take that man in Cincinnati who murdered his wife. Listen to his last speech before he was hung. Of course he, by priestly intervention, was washed white in the blood of the lamb, and hence when he mounted the scaffold he was nearing heaven. Only the fall of the trap, and he was there. And this is what he said: "I hav only one thing to regret, and that is that I shall not meet my dear wife in heaven." A religion capable of making such a consummate villain of a man as this is hardly a useful religion. But it may be said this is not the work of religion, but the abuse of it. But we cannot separate religion from its historical features. Its value must be taken in the light of its history. And what is that history but one of infamous deeds and bloody crimes? In its name sixty millions of human beings hav been murdered.

This is essentially religious. There is no religion without crime in its practices—that is, as a rule. If there is, then it has stolen the wrong name. We cannot concede the claim that religions are so far useful as to offset the evils in the practice of the same, without swindling history. But let us enlarge upon this, and inquire as to the benefit religion has rendered this government that it should demand toleration and protection and thus specialize itself. I confess that the criminal statistics of this country fail to show that any good has been rendered this nation by religion. The penal institutions of this land hav been and are largely supported for criminal religionists. No mathematics but divine mathematics can figure a useful factor out of these statistics. The insane and penal institutions hold a large percentage of criminals, whereas less than one-fourth of the entire population of this country are classed as religionists. This only shows very justly that the laws of this country do not protect religionists any more than others whose crimes come within the provisions of the statutes, but we claim that the criminal practices of religion should be punishable under statutory enactment like all other crimes, and the fact that they are religionists should not shield them. We would not in any form limit the freedom of the people in belief or unbelief, or in the expression of the same. This should be conceded to all, and this is what we demand. The right thus to do, without fear or harm from any source, must be admitted. Black, white, yellow, or brindle, the right is, and ought to be, the same. We ask not for toleration, only that which is equally granted to all. But this is not enough for religionists. They want toleration and protection on the ground of their religion. We say, No! If this is conceded, then it would be only just that others should be tolerated and protected on account of not having any religion.

This is not conceded, however, in our courts of justice, and this is the ground of our complaint—not that we demand toleration and protection on the ground of being not religious, and we would not hav it conceded to religionists on account of their religion—but on the ground of equality under the laws, as American citizens. We demand that the national government shall protect its citizens against the invidious distinction made in our courts of justice, so-called. But what is there in religion, at any rate, legitimatizing these invidious distinctions? An honest man, disfranchised because he will not consent to act the hypocrit, is frank to confess that he cannot affirm or deny what religionists affirm as to the being of a God. This honest confession makes him a criminal. If he will only falsify his conviction by his lips, then his word is taken, he is trustworthy. But in telling the truth, there is no toleration for him. The religionist must falsify when he affirms his belief in this being whom he says created the universe, for they hav ever told us in their creeds, and by the word of mouth, that this being of whom they affirm is incomprehensible. Who can affirm or deny an attribute, good, bad, or indifferent, belonging to, or not belonging to, an incomprehensibility? The man who refuses to affirm or deny according to this confession of the religionists is much nearer the truth than he who affirms. He who affirms falsifies, as he falsifies when he says he, she, or it is incomprehensible, but his word is the embodiment of veracity, while he who confesses that he does not know is the incarnation of vileness, and the courts of so-called justice bid him step down and out! Tolerating such a religious fraud as this is an infamy which the English language can not express. A man that would indorse this infamy ought to spit upon the stars and stripes and seek for some savage hut where he could lie down and rot. But it may be said that this incomprehensibility is known in part. If this is true, then two parts are more than one, and thus you see that a relation is established between the parts, which reduces that incomprehensibility to measurement through its parts, and thus we see at once that the story of this incomprehensibility is a falsehood, and hence its utter ruin. Its infinity is veiled within the terms of the limited.

But religion, in fact, can plead for no reality only that coming in the line of inheritance. The religions of this world hav a genesis in no way unlike that which gave us hands, feet, eyes, and ears. All of these came from the lowest structural forms. Many things in this genesis are harmful. Our hopes are contained in the wisdom which will come to us as the result of having learned the methods of nature, and in the application of the same to all of those which are the gifts of the lower forms. In time we will drop them off as we hav in the past disposed of useless members. And thus it will be in time with the diseases which we hav inherited, and it is impossible not thus to class religions. They are like the muscle which once moved the ear, which is now human, but not thus when that muscle was activ. Religion, like that muscle, is an arrested development. It belongs to a dynasty which is dead. It does not belong to rational thought. It is atrophied, and has an expression in those fragments of the human race whose development has been forever arrested, and it points to extinction. It cannot hav a resurrection. This is the divine thing that is tolerated. And, as we look upon its slaughtered hecatombs, we are convinced that, were they all collected, they would build a monument whose top would reach the Christian's heaven—at least, the Bible heaven. I am aware that we hav modern religionists to whom my arguments do not reach. All I hav to say is, I hav been dealing with religion proper, which is a divine thing.

J. H. BURNHAM.

CLEMENT OF ROME.—The name of Clement does not appear in either of the two epistles ascribed to him, but is added at the end of the first in the only manuscript extant, the Alexandrian, which is assigned to the fifth century. The second epistle was first mentioned by Eusebius. It is now universally regarded as spurious. The only primitiv preachers named in the first epistle are Paul, Kephas, and Apollos (chap. xlvii). In another place (chap. v) Paul and another apostle are mentioned as martyrs, and as all the letters of the name of the other apostle are obliterated but the last two, os, it has been assumed to be Petros. But is it likely that the author would write Kephas in one place, and Petros in another, referring to the same apostle?—Antichrist.

The Liberal Club.

It was bad weather that prevailed on the evening of Friday, the 22d. The air was full of dampness and the streets were slushy. But this state of affairs made no difference in the attendance at the 396th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club held that evening. Interest in the club has risen superior to all outside influences, and no interruptions are recognized. An earthquake intervening would be called to order by the president, and then business would proceed. The visitor who arrived later than eight o'clock had to search for an empty chair and then sit on a campstool.

No minutes of the previous meeting were read. The secretary had so large an armful of TRUTH SEEKER ANNUALS for 1886 to carry that the minute book was left at home, as of less importance. When this was explained to the chair by the secretary, the chair admitted that the secretary's action was regular.

The lecturer for the evening was Dr. R. A. Gunn, and the subject was "Alcohol Out of and In the Human System." The doctor led off with a brief history and description of alcohol. It originated away back in Arabia, and is a colorless, limpid liquid, of agreeable taste and odor. Its component parts are hydrogen, carbon, and oxygen. Its effects are hilarious. The use of it is almost universal, and the habit of getting full is older than history. Among the claims made by Dr. Gunn were these: that alcohol in the system was necessary to sustain life; that it is produced by digestion, being found in the excretions of those who hav never drank it; that it possesses such medicinal properties as to make it almost indispensable to the physician; that as a food it will sustain life for months; that in the decline of life it is a useful stimulant, and that more injury than good would follow its total abolition. The doctor admitted the harmful and dire effects of excess. There would be less drunkenness among working people if their social condition were improved. Crime is not so largely due to the use of liquor as is supposed. From twenty to fifty per cent of the inmates of prisons are drinkers. So are about the same per cent of church-members. Fanatical crusades against liquor, Dr. Gunn believed, would never hav the effect to restrain intemperance. Lecturers on the subject are usually sentimentalists, and hav no practical knowledge of it.

Dr. Gunn's address pleased some of the audience; others, including the president, did not like it at all.

Dr. Weeks was the first to respond to the chairman's invitation to discuss the question. The doctor said he didn't like to appear forward, but if he didn't come in then he might not get a chance at all. Dr. Weeks had not much respect for the opinions of scientists. They were all pollywogs. There were as yet no frogs among them. Quoting from the poet, Dr. Weeks said, "A little learning makes a man a a fool." Alcohol was an irritant, not a stimulant. At the end of ten minutes the chair hit the speaker on the elbow with its mallet, as an indication that his time was up.

Mr. Minchall, a young Englishman, made some astonishing statements about the process by which alcohol is produced. He said that in fermentation a small insect absorbed something or other, and voided alcohol; so that the best champagne was merely the fluid excretion of an animal. Mr. Minchall seemed to possess considerable uncoördinated knowledge of chemistry. His statements were wholly contradictory to those of Dr. Gunn.

Dr. Lambert felt called upon to flatly contradict Dr. Gunn's assertion that all practicing physicians found alcohol indispensable. He instanced Dr. Davis, of Chicago, editor of a medical journal, who, with a wide practice, for the past twenty years has prescribed no alcohol. Adulterated liquors was no more poisonous than pure alcohol. The doctor then related a dream. He went to heaven, and St. Peter objected to admitting him because he was an M.D. Peter said that M.D.'s and D.D.'s were rare in heaven for the reason that they had done so much harm in administering wine as medicin and at communion. No drunkard should enter the kingdom, much less the manufacturer of drunkards. Dr. Lambert then went on to relate that St. Peter inquired after Mr. Wakeman; but the chair here told the doctor he was out of order and made him stop.

Dr. Eccles said that everything we eat turns into alcohol. Digestion is fermentation, and there is an alcoholic stage to it through which food must pass, becoming an acid, the same as cider has its fermented alcoholic stage before it becomes vinegar. Food that goes into the mouth as starch leaves the body as carbonic acid, and there is no way of going from starch to carbonic acid except through alcohol. Dr. Eccles showed casually that Mr. Minchall did not know what he was talking about.

Dr. Gunn, in closing the discussion, could not see that the remarks of his critics were worthy of much notice. These men were mere theorists, not practical experimenters. Mr. Minchall's notion about the production of alcohol would not be advanced by any intelligent person. Dr. N. S. Davis was known to Dr. Gunn. They had met in consultation, and Dr. Davis prescribed alcohol. He was one of those doctors who had made no progress in anything for forty years, and still prescribed calomel and jalap whatever the disease. The medical journal edited by him was the object of just criticism by the whole profession on account of its chemical, medical, grammatical, and typographical blunders. Besides, Dr. Davis was a temperance fanatic, and his opinions were formed without an impartial examination of the facts.

The arguments, one way and the other, left the listener to settle by personal experiment whether alcohol was a useful thing or not. Dr. Gunn was apparently better fortified than were his critics, both by facts and experiment, as he admitted that he sometimes took a little aqua fortis, and had no doubt that many in the audience had done the same thing.

The next meeting falls on the birthday of Thomas Paine, when there are to be exercises of an interesting character. Following that comes Mr. Reynolds's illustrated lecture, Sunday evening, the 31st. The man with the badge pin will worry the stereopticon, and he cordially solicits the attendance of all those who delight to see a fellow-being in trouble.

A Meeting of the Sabbath Committee.

The New York Sabbath Committee is an organization said to be composed of laymen of different denominations, who hav devoted themselvs to defending the puritanical Sabbath. The committee is, however, only a jack-in-a-box worked by a string. The ministers hold the string. The Rev. W. W. Atterbery is secretary.

One of the strings now being pulled is the circulating of Morris K. Jesup's pamphlet against the opening of the museums. The Rev. W. W. Atterbery (layman, of course) is the distributor. Last Sunday the committee held a public meeting at Chickering Hall. Between two hundred and fifty and three hundred people were present, mostly old men with egg-shaped heads, who were evidently living along to save funeral expenses, middle-aged ladies very pious, young ladies who had nowhere else to go, and young men who had followed the young ladies to see that no harm came to them. This meeting was not advertised as a protest against opening the museums on Sundays, but that is what it was, and an exceedingly weak protest it turned out to be. When Felix Adler spoke in the same hall in favor of opening the museums, over twelve hundred people listened to him. Neither was this meeting advertised as a religious gathering. But the advertisment was deceptiv. The meeting was all piety. After a prayer by Rev. Mr. Schaff, a former secretary of the committee (layman, of course) Mr. John E. Parsons came to the front. He said the committee is composed wholly of laymen, and its work wholly unsectarian. All the committee wanted was to preserve the Christian Sabbath. He then announced a hymn, one verse of which ran:

O day of rest and gladness,
O day of joy and light,
O balm of care and sadness,
Most beautiful, most bright;
On Thee, the high and lowly,
Bending before the Throne,
Sing, Holy, Holy, Holy,
To the Great Three in One.

When the choir and audience had sung two verses of this, Mr. Parsons pulled the string which stopped the organist, and said that the Rev. W. W. Atterbery (layman, of course) would tell the audience what the work of the committee was. Mr. Atterbery said the committee was comprised wholly of laymen. He would read a letter from Archbishop Corrigan, which he did as follows:

452 MADISON AV., NEW YORK, Jan. 22, 1886.

REV. W. W. ATTERBERY, Secretary, etc., Rev. and Dear Sir: In reply to your polite note of yesterday I beg to say that I hav a previous engagement for Sunday evening.

As I understand it, the movement for opening the museums on Sunday, though advocated in the interest of the working classes, is really the entering wedge of a larger and insidious design which aims at throwing open also on that day the theaters, drinking saloons, and other places of amusement, and so gradually do away with everything that givs the Sunday a sacred character.

If this view be correct, as there is good reason to believe it to be, the question becomes a very serious one, which deserves most attentiv consideration.

To visit the museums on Sunday is in itself harmless. To destroy the general religious observance of Sunday would be a national calamity. To weaken and endanger its sacred character would be most undesirable, for we all know the tendency of human nature, and how hard it is to recall the due observance of the day once the old landmarks are broken down.

I am, reverend and dear sir, very respectfully yours,
M. A. CORRIGAN, Archbishop.

Rev. W. W. Atterbery (layman, of course) concluded by quoting Renan's sentiment that "Christianity is dead; it has lost its Lord's day."

The Right Rev. W. C. Doane, D.D., of Albany, came forward and grasped the reading desk. Mr. Doane wore his Episcopalian uniform, knee breeches and cassock, and when he had stretched himself across the reading desk and put one shapely leg in view of the audience, he said, in substance:

To open the museums is in itself harmless, but when this is done to satisfy some people, will you not be compelled to open the theaters to satisfy others? Museums mean theaters and theaters factories. We ought to exact as little work from the laboring class as possible and consistent. We should advocate natural recreation, such as fresh air, as against the artificial recreation of museums and theaters. The sale of liquor on Sunday must be prevented. The early closing movement and the Saturday half holiday must not be lost sight of. They will do much toward a proper observance of the Sabbath. Muscums can be seen at night, and they should then be opened. Our churches should be made more attractiv and the stranger received at all times with a hearty welcome.

Congressman Breckinridge followed Mr. Doane. Mr. Breckinridge's principal claim to distinction is that he fought in the Confederate army. He looks like a twin brother of Samuel Colgate. He said that opening the museums on Sunday could not be a minor matter in a concatenated system. The observance of the Sabbath must be maintained, and it would be. He talked for three-fourths of an hour, but this is all he said.

While Mr. Breckinridge was talking Howard Crosby came in and took a back seat, from which he gradually worked forward, until at the close he was down in the front. Mr. Crosby said he would not say a word for a million dollars. He wanted to say, though, that there are no two bigger liars in the world than those who humbug the laboring man with the cry, "Down with the Sabbath, it is the badge of slavery!" and "Hurrah for the saloon, it is the hall of liberty!" Two classes only advocate these lies. First, the lazy class, who don't want to work; and, second, the greedy class, who want seven days' profit out of six days' work.

Mr. Parsons (who was about the only genuin layman taking part in the proceedings) asked the audience to join in singing the doxology, and remain while Dr. Crosby pronounced the benediction. The doxology runs in this wise:

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise him all creatures here below,
Praise him above ye heavenly host,
Praise father, son, and Holy Ghost.

Mr. Crosby then shut his eyes, leaned on the reading desk, and, with a supplicating look at the chandelier in the ceiling, asked the divine blessing on the audience, including the wicked secretary of the American Secular Union, and the totally depraved editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The young men then selected their girls, and, presumably, went home.

To an outsider the meeting presented all the appearance of a "fizzle". There were but few, comparativly, present; there was no enthusiasm; the arguments were of the trashy religious sort, and exceedingly weak. The purpose of the committee was transparent—but it miscarried. The effort might as well hav been confined to some church, for all the effect it will hav upon public sentiment. If it is the best the committee can do, it will giv Mr. Jesup and his fellow-directors of the museums very little excuse for keeping the museums closed on Sundays.

ARGUMENTS BASED ON FACTS.

From the New York Herald.

Again I see there is an effort made to open museums, libraries, and art galleries in New York on Sundays. The non-success of the movement heretofore is owing chiefly to managers and trustees yielding too readily to religious prejudice, and if it is to succeed at all, they must not be weighed down by mistaken notions.

Frequently it is said that there is no need of Sunday opening; that those for whose benefit it is intended care very little about the matter, and would not avail themselvs of the privilege should it be granted.

Experience shows differently. It shows that all libraries, museums, and art galleries that hav granted "Sunday opening" their use is comparativly greater than on any other day. Clerks, salesmen, and saleswomen, shop boys, and shop girls—in fact, all those who are engaged in exacting avocations or household duties during the week, are concerned in it. That numbers who are weary in mind and body through the week would avail themselvs of a chance for improving their condition morally and mentally is evident by the success attending those now open in Boston and Worcester, Mass.; Bridgeport, Conn., and various other cities. Managers or librarians of any of these institutions will show, too, that many who hav no pleasant homes and are without mental food accept Sunday opening as a happy boon. But should only a small number desire Sunday opening it ought to be granted as a matter of justice. It is not right to keep them from what they help to pay for. The wage earner can take recreation or relaxation only on days of leisure, but the well-to-do can take it any day. On Sundays, if they want to read, or study literature, art, or science, they do so, and do not question themselvs as to whether or not they are doing right; and if they wish to indulge in riding or visiting or a so-called sacred concert they do so. Let the people hav an opportunity of entering amid cenes of interest and influences that humanize and civilize.

I hav been thanked often for the privilege of coming to the library and reading-room here in Bridgeport on Sundays, and hav been told that the "directors never rendered a greater help to morality" than when they granted Sunday opening. Even ministers and the strictly pious hav become so favorably impressed that the thought of closing it on Sundays would meet with a bitter protest from them. It was tried as an experiment. The experiment proved a success and became an established fact.

W. J. HILLS,
Director and Librarian Bridgeport Public Library,
Bridgeport, Conn.

SUPERSTITIOUS OPPOSITION.

From Heber Newton's sermon last Sunday.

In our own city every effort rationally to use Sunday for the physical and mental improvement of the people is met still with the sincere and earnest but none the less superstitious opposition which similar efforts would hav met with from the scribes and Pharisees in the age of Jesus. When it is proposed to open our libraries or our museums on Sunday, the churches which bear the name of the saintly Sabbath-breaker of Judea interpose on behalf of that Jesus to perpetuate the very superstition which he lost his life in combating. There is still need for those who discern the significance of his example and who believe in the principle which he enunciated, to lift up a calm and earnest protest in his name against this lingering superstition.

It stands in the way of the physical progress of man. There are hosts of our fellows to whom it is the one chance for an outing into the fresh air—the one chance to build up their bodies toward the measure of a perfect manhood. The superstition of the Sabbath stands in the way of the intellectual progress of mankind. We hav a number of libraries in this city. How many of them are opened on Sunday? It is the religious sentiment of this city which turns the key of their doors in the name of Jesus Christ. Our young men and women may not become saints by frequenting libraries, but will they not be more likely to grow into noble manhood and womanhood as they learn to think and read, and thus climb from the life of the animal to the life of intellectual being?

The superstition of the Sabbath stands in the way of the moral progress of mankind. No one who studies our social problems calmly and thoughtfully can fail to recognize as the most alarming danger of our time the gulf that is opening even more and more widely between the classes of our society. Everything that tends to foster among our working people the notion of class privilege is making against the truest morality in our midst. It is the wealthy people whose homes are private libraries and galleries of art who, unconscious of the seeming hypocrisy, protest against the opening of our libraries and museums to those who can afford no library and can buy no pictures. Sabbatarianism is feeding very dangerous fires to-day.

The superstition of the Sabbath stands in the way of the religious progress of man. This superstition of the Sabbath very largely aids in continuing the undue emphasis which ecclesiasticism has always laid upon secondary elements of religion. This superstition of the Sabbath, now as of old, endangers religion by caricaturing God, and by drawing above the life of his children the dark clouds from which men shrink back into the sunshine of life. What sort of a God is he whose inalienable prerogativs can be encroached upon by a walk in the fields upon a Sunday?

THE WICKED INFIDELS AT THE BOTTOM OF IT ALL.

From Monday's Mail and Express.

In this period, midway between two presidential campaign, everything favors a development of moral, religious, and social questions. The rapid rise into prominence of the discussion of Sunday observance has been facilitated by these conditions. It has also been favored by the organization of the most aggressiv Infidelity and Atheism of the time into a propagandist machine called "The American Secular Union," of which Ingersoll is president, and whose secretary, Mr. S. P. Putnam, has been the circulator of almost all the petitions for opening the Museums of Art and of Natural History on Sundays, as a part of the war of the Secular Union against everything that has been held "sacred." One of the main avowed objects of Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Putnam's Secular Union has been and is to secularize the Christian Sabbath.

Sound Sense.

From a Baptist Paper.

The so-called "Freedom of Worship Bill" is to be pressed on the legislature again this winter, and the only hope of its being defeated is in the united effort of all who are opposed to the sort of "freedom" Rome claims. Her idea of "freedom of worship" is making other people giv way to her, and pay for her arrogance besides. While under this bill there is to be "no additional expenditure on the part of the state," a large charge for priestly services can be put on the city. The attempt to make it a misdemeanor if the managers of the House of Refuge, and like institutions, do not provide altars and other appliances for celebrating mass is worthy of the palmiest days of Romish rule.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$1,807.57
Hampton Steele	1.00
Nellie E. Crouch	3.00
Graham A. Pearce	1.00
Mrs. James Beveridge	1.00
Mrs. Agnes Pearce	.50
Andrew Beveridge	2.00
James Simpson	.50
James Beveridge	1.00
Alex. Beveridge	2.00
Total,	$1,819.57

News and Notes.

Let all the Liberals of New York city and vicinity remember the Thomas Paine celebration on Friday evening, Jan. 29th, at German Masonic Hall, 220 East Fifteenth street. Come and do honor to the memory of the hero, and help swell the funds for carrying on the work of opening the museums on Sunday. The question is being discussed, and pulpit and platform begin to feel the waves of agitation. Some wise preachers hav spoken in favor of this movement on fundamental humanitarian principles. The New York Sabbath Committee take the other side. They held one of their semi-occasional meetings on Sunday evening at Chickering Hall, which, out of a sense of duty, in order to know how much ammunition the enemy really had, I attended. The audience was small, and, as the New York Herald of Monday says, the arguments were weak.

The only argument put forward against the opening of the museums was that it would be an "entering wedge." It was granted that in itself it was an innocent thing, but human nature was such a terribly uncertain and depraved affair that if you granted a harmless pleasure, there is no knowing what may happen. It is the Inquisition over again in a milder form. It is assuming that mankind is desperately wicked and must be kept in a strait-jacket. A little freedom, however innocent in itself, must not be allowed for fear of consequences. Men and women and children must be punished, not for what is actually done, but for what the theologians think they will do, like the parental disciplinarian who punished his boy every morning, not because he had done anything wrong, but because the father was quite theologically certain that the boy would do wrong before the day was over. Such is the pitiful and weak position of those who would close the museums on Sunday. Quite antediluvian, I should say, in their ideas of morality, quite on a par with the logic of the good old Presbyterian deacon who didn't want a stove put in the church to keep the people warm. This was an "entering wedge." There was no knowing what direful consequences might happen if the congregation received a little warmth on this side instead of waiting until they got too much of it on the other side of Jordan. The "entering wedge" argument is the hight of dogmatic folly. Everything must be accepted by the morality of common sense for what it is in itself, and not be rejected for some fancied abuse that may result. Do the right thing and its legitimate consequences will always be right.

The following letter, received among others from the members of the Legislature at Albany, shows the exceedingly muddled condition, mentally, of many of our politicians on the fundamental question of American politics. The propositions involved are those referring to the taxation of church property:

ASSEMBLY CHAMBER, ALBANY, Jan. 24, 1886.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, ESQ., My Dear Sir: Yours of the 22d received and contents noted, as well as inclosed circular.

In answer I would say that, while I am liberal in my religious views, I am no Agnostic, and cannot favor the propositions in your circular coutained.

Yours very truly, H. C. HOWE.

What has Agnosticism to do with these propositions? No more than astronomy or geology, and the honorable member might just as well hav said that he could not favor these propositions because he was not an astronomer or a geologist. These propositions are founded upon the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. The most eminent Christians hav favored them, not because they were Christians, but because they were keen-sighted men, and understood the principles of American government. These propositions are purely political propositions and hav nothing at all to do with religion per se either for or against. They simply demand justice and equality before the law of every citizen. What has this to do with Agnosticism? The philosophy of the universe is one thing; the philosophy of human rights is another. There is no direct logical connection between the two. Agnosticism may tend to make a man more Liberal, so that he sees no importance in the spread of a certain theological belief, but it is still to be hoped that one may be a Theist and a Christian, and yet deal justly with his fellow-men on purely humanitarian grounds. We assure the gentleman that he need not be an Agnostic or any other kind of a heretic or unbeliever in order to support these propositions, but simply a wise student of the Declaration of Independence, and an honest politician.

F. K. Blue, secretary of the Liberal Secular Union of Liberal, Mo., writes of the efforts that are being made in that "Infidel" town for mental and moral improvement. Meetings are held every Sunday. Jay Chaapel has delivered lectures on religious and social errors; habits injurious to the individual; the cultivation of our finer sentiments—love of music, art, poetry, beauty, etc. The audiences are appreciativ, and the work is encouraging.

I want to call particular attention to the illustrated lecture of our friend, C. B. Reynolds, next Sunday evening in this city, when the Liberals of New York purpose to giv him a rousing benefit, and thus show their appreciation of his services in the field of Liberal advancement. The illustrated lectures themselvs are very interesting, and will constitute a new and attractiv feature of the lecture platform. Mr. Reynolds has expended a great deal of labor upon these lectures, but it is labor which must in the future produce valuable results. By means of these lectures a large number of those who are indifferent to the ordinary discourse will be brought in and, along with the entertainment and pictures of the world as it is, receive many new ideas in the direction of Liberal progress. There should be various instrumentalities for the presentation of Freethought, and this adopted by Mr. Reynolds is one of very great importance, and encouragement should be given to it so that Mr. Reynolds may find permanent employment. I hope for a full house next Sunday evening, and ask all Liberal friends to come so that an impulse can be communicated to the labors of Mr. Reynolds that will make them more beneficial and inspiring to our scattered forces wherever the illuminating rays may flash. Again, I say, do not fail to giv a Happy New Year's greeting to the Chairman of the Executiv Committee of the American Secular Union next Sunday evening. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Lectures and Meetings.

SEVENTY-FIVE miles by team across the prairies of western Kansas in the great January storm has been one of the interesting features of Remsburg's winter campaign.

E. C. WALKER lectured at Empire, Kan., Sunday, Jan. 24, forenoon and evening. His trip to Arkansas is postponed until March, and he desires a few more engagements for that month in that state and Southern Missouri. His permanent address is Valley Falls, Kan.

THE Liberals of Pennsylvania will hold a state League convention at Pittsburgh on Saturday and Sunday, the 30th and 31st. The state meeting will be in Maltby Hall, 76 Fifth avenue at 10 A.M. and 2 P.M. each day. Saturday evening will be given up to a Paine celebration at Brooks's dancing academy, consisting of music, addresses, recitations, etc., and concluding with a social. On Sunday at 3 P.M. Charles Watts will deliver the closing lecture on "Science: Its Struggles and Triumphs."

W. F. JAMIESON is having fine audiences in Joplin, Mo., and very friendly notices from the daily press. He was delivering lectures in Joplin's new theater, a handsome place for meetings, and when last heard from there was talk of a debate with one of the most popular preachers in the city. He was announced to deliver three lectures in Carthage, Mo., January 25th, 26th, and 27th. Jamieson is now on his way northward, and will lecture on his route in Nebraska, Iowa, Dakota, and Minnesota. Address, Lake City, Minn.

MR. RODD sends us the following report of the meeting of the Society of Humanists: Notwithstanding the severe weather that prevailed last Sunday, the members of the Society of Humanists met as usual at the paint shop of Mr. Foster to again continue the reading of the "General View of Positivism." Mr. Hugh McGregor made a few observations on what had been read on the previous Sunday, and brought out very clearly the Positivist idea that society is composed of separate organisms, meaning the family and not of individuals. The meeting opened and closed with a prayer, as is always the custom. All men who are interested in the Religion of Humanity, and who feel the need of the moral regeneration of this world, are invited to attend these meetings which are held at 10 A.M. every Sunday at 4 Market street, New York city.

Sunday in Scotland.

A strange illustration of the idolatry of Sunday appears in the Rev. Dr. William Ross's recent volume of Scottish local history, "Aberdour and Inchcolme," where a kirk session took a remarkable view of the comparativ guilt of Sabbath-breaking and criminal offenses. Dr. Ross makes this quotation from the minutes of the kirk session of Aberdour for August 30, 1724: "It being reputed that David Allan, Robert Thompson, and John Reid had broken the Sabbath day, by stealing apples on that day, they were cited, and compearing, they all acknowledged that it was only eleven of the clock on Saturday night, and that they were very sorry it should so hav happened, and promised never to border so near on that day again; and were exhorted to carry as Christians, to behave themselvs as those that know that God would not let them go unpunished that break his day without serious repentance."

Communications.

What is Money?

A writer in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 9th, over the signature of "J. D.," makes such strange assertions in reference to the functions of money that I feel impelled to answer him. He says: "The advocates of unlimited silver money, like the paper inflationists, think that by adding to the amount of the currency you increase the wealth of the country." This assertion is not corroborated by my observation. As a rule, this class maintain that money, whether made of paper, gold, or silver, is not wealth or value, as those terms are usually understood and applied. Gold or silver is wealth, but when made into money it is no longer wealth. Its money quality must be destroyed if its metal quality is ever utilized. All that givs gold or silver value is its metal quality, and not its money quality.

Again, "J. D." says: "If you double the amount of currency, . . it takes two dollars instead of one to buy the same article." In other words, if all the currency of the country were destroyed but one dollar, that dollar would buy all the property of the country. If by doubling the currency its purchasing power diminishes one-half, then by diminishing the currency one-half its purchasing power doubles. And if this process should be repeated, it don't take much ciphering to discover that the last dollar would be able to purchase countless millions. Hence "J. D.'s" reasoning is fallacious.

Again I quote: "We put on a tariff that shuts ourselvs out of foreign markets, and then use a cheap currency that admits foreign goods practically with but little duty, and this we call statesmanship." We put no tariff on exportation. Nearly all the countries of the world admit our surplus products free of duty. If it were possible for our statesmen to do what "J. D." charges them with doing, then that would be what I would call shrewd statesmanship. We should get something for nothing. We would encourage foreign merchants to ship us their merchandise, but would discourage shipments in return to pay for the same. The basis of all exchange is commodity for commodity. If shiploads come to us, and none go out, then we are so much ahead.

One more quotation: "While silver is used as money standard, it will inevitably drive the gold out of the country, and leave us nothing but a continually expanding currency for ourselvs, which, in any dealings with other countries where they hav a staple currency, would not be worth fifty cents on the dollar." Now, suppose the gold is driven out of the country, is it to be supposed that a single ounce of it will go without its bringing us an equivalent therefor? In other words, if we exchange our gold for tea, coffee, or other foreign commodities, are we not getting value received? Gold is a production of this country, the same as cotton, wheat, petroleum, etc We expend labor in these productions, and exchange the productions for other productions which we prefer, and thus are benefited. When we exchange iron metal for foreign merchandise it is heralded as a sign of prosperity. Where, pray, is the difference when we exchange gold metal? A commodity is a commodity, whether it be gold, iron, silver, or petroleum, and when we exchange these commodities for other commodities the only vital question involved is whether we get a day's labor for a day's labor. If silver becomes so plenty with us that it passes for fifty cents on the dollar, where does the ruin come in? In other words, if we should discover silver mines so that the metal could be turned out at the rate of a pound where we now get an ounce, who is that going to hurt? I am quite sure it won't hurt me. It is said he is a benefactor who makes two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, and if sixteen ounces of silver can be produced where one ounce was produced before, some of us people who now eat with a tin spoon may be able to enjoy the luxury of a silver spoon. There are some people who get terribly muddled over a variable dollar. Some years ago, when greenbacks were about ninety cents on the dollar, a lawyer friend of mine purchased a draft for one hundred dollar on some foreign office, which he proposed sending to a member of his family then traveling abroad. I happened to enter his office as the draft lay upon the table before him, and, as I happened to belong to the fraternity of Greenbackers, he remarked to me: "See here what I hav to pay for the foolishness of you Greenbackers. That hundred dollar draft cost me one hundred and fourteen dollars." I very coolly remarked: "What of it? Did you pay more or less than it is worth?" He replied: "Why, I paid some ten or twelve dollars more than I need to hav paid if greenbacks were not at a discount." I answered: "If you hav got half an hour to spare, I'll take that kink out of your head." And I did take it out of his head. I challenged him to find the man who had got his ten or twelve dollars. There was no more profit to the exchange broker at that time than there is to-day. He soon discovered his error and acknowledged it. Underneath all exchange is the fundamental basis of commodity for commodity. I am not unmindful, however, of the mischief which may be created by the variable dollar, but of that I may treat at another time.

Chicago, Ill. J. K. MAGIE.

European Ideas.

The idea that our founders established a free government far in advance of anything ever before experienced simply because they had broken loose from the control of Great Britain, was certainly most erroneous and deplorable—deplorable because it left the people to regard great evils as among the privileges of freedom, and checked reform.

The thirteen colonies had already derived from Europe for over a century some very bad laws, customs, and opinions on religion, government, and economy. First, their idea of military organization was and remains to-day entirely the same as exists in Europe. Our military system is unworthy of a free people. Second, we retained many ideas of religion as we received them from Europeans. Even to-day a large part of intelligent Americans would gladly see "God in the Constitution" and the enforcement of Sunday observance. Third, we retained slavery, and encouraged it by legislation, extended its area vastly, and nearly one-half of our people fought to the death to retain it. Fourth, we hav the same system of raising revenues that was cunningly devised by kings and aristocrats, whereby to tax enormously the common people and relieve the wealthy. We hav gone further, we hav used the device to build up and protect monopolies. The idea of so interfering with human freedom as to tax imports to keep them out is intolerable to the natural mind. Not for one hour would we endure it were it not that we hav become familiarized with it, as we were with slavery.

Strange, what a mighty educator or miseducator is law! We see to-day thousands of men who would be shocked at the thought of restoring slavery, yet who not long since were either its apologists or advocates. So if once free trade is established here, all these people who are now ignorantly upholding protection would look amazed at any proposal to enslave them under a protectiv tariff. The idea that we must not buy any article of commerce without paying a great fine! We are far from being a free people. HOLT.

What Will the Weather Be?

I hav long been convinced that simply knowing and teaching the size, distance, mass, cycles, and axial and orbital velocity of the planets of our solar system, and the size, composition, rotation, and comparativ mass of the sun, is of very little practical value. As if this great luminary, 750 times larger than all the planets and planetoids that sail around him, were swung in the heavens merely to astonish and bewilder! Yet this is the sum of what astronomy teaches to-day. Is it not astonishing that profound men, such as Herschel, Newton, Laplace, Olmsted, and Proctor, never divined the reciprocal electro-magnetic action of the sun and his family of worlds in the production of storms, cyclones, and earthquakes, when planets pass 80, 170, 260 and 350 degrees on their orbits? Proctor, however, is beginning to get a little light in this direction, as indicated by his article on "Auroras and Comets." I hav studied this problem carefully, made many barometrical observations, estimated the force of heat on equatorial and other waters, trade winds, etc.; studied storms, cyclones, sun-spots; noted the electric thrills that sweep over telegraph wires, interrupting messages, setting fire to tables, and melting the conducting wires, while the electric storm was advancing, and all synchronous with solar outbursts, caused by the return charges of devitalized electricity from Jupiter, Saturn, and Uranus, and augmented by the return charges of inferior planets. I hav also noted, and, by the aid of others in the same line of research, proved conclusivly, the location of storm points as designated. I would modestly call the attention of astronomers to these laws regnant in our family of worlds. This view givs us a living, stirring family of worlds—an electro-magnetic life, pulsating through the entire organic domain. In a former article, published in the Missouri Republican, I gave planetary distances, except Neptune, which is 2,850,000 miles from the sun, and his cycle 166 years. The sun's axial and the planet's axial and orbital motions giv a clue to the generation and development of electric energy, the production of heat, clouds, and storms, Vulcan, the recently discovered planet, etc.

I wish to say a few words to all interested. Look out for potato rot in 1886. An excess of electricity, with much warmth and moisture, is the cause. Heavy rains, hot days and nights at the time of maturing, on low, rich, and tenacious soils, will kill potatoes in a few days. Sandy and gravelly lands, with porous subsoil to quickly filter out water, are better: Water has great attraction for electricity. Plant early, and only early kinds; keep free from weeds, and as soon as they cook mealy, although tops are green and skin tender, dig and handle carefully and store in dry and cool cellars and shield from light. Tested forty years. Farmers, brother-Liberals, try it and report. D. HIGBIE, M.D.

Burton, Jan. 11, 1886.

Commiseration of an Anarchist.

Vice is the wrong you do yourself. Crime is the wrong you do your neighbor. Excepting accidental hurts, these are the only human agencies that destroy human happiness. Ignorance is their mother, and she is a most prolific breeder. Want is her favorit condition and prepares the way for her guilty children. Vice is passiv, crime is activ. The educator may show the vicious a better way and the moral revivalist exhort him him to take it, but the criminal must be restrained by physical force. All crimes are violations of individual liberty, and all violations of individual liberty are crimes.

Liberty is not the natural complement of life, but it is the rightful one. We cannot argue for liberty because it is a decree of nature, for it is not; nor because it is the will of any god, for it is not, but because it is the only condition in which life can be enjoyed. I would a thousand times rather hav one master than two, for then I would fight him until I was dead or free. But when every man I meet, who is over a certain age, is a bit of a haughty ruler, I know of no egress of escape, and my chains tinkle on with a merry ringing tone, and seductivly invite me to enter for the spoils.

There can be no ruler without a subject. Every subject is a slave. Governments are held upon the aching backs of slaves. There they were built and there they rest and ride. He who is loyal to a government is so much of a slave, else how could he be governed. The free man governs himself. He is neither master nor slave. It is the province of the state to preserve individual liberty, but it does not do this. The people hav harnessed themselvs up, built an office in the coach, seated an officer in the office and given him the lines. What will he do? Why, drive of course; and as it is some one else's rig, he "don't care a d——n for horseflesh" either. Why should he?

When every citizen of the world loves liberty well enough to battle for his brother's freedom, then the state will hav to go. But, now, the slave crouches under the shadow of his master's frown and waits for the millennium to free him! How foolish! It seems so funny to pass that throng and see Putnam and Macdonald sitting there awaiting the good time coming. My fellow American slaves, let me whisper something in your ears. The millennium of which you speak will never come to you while you wear your chains. But some people are satisfied with anything if they can only boss a squad. S. V. LUMKEY.

Our London Letter.

The result of the elections, though not so satisfactory as the friends of freedom and progress could desire, has yet been felt as a heavy blow to the clerical party. The agricultural voters were continually being told, previous to the pollings, that the parson was the best friend they had both in health and sickness, in adversity and trouble; but it turned out that the laborer was not to be caught by fair words and promises for the future, and so he voted in his own favor and against the oppressor. Consequently the clergy cannot help seeing that their power is drawing rapidly to an end, now that they are successfully assailed in their strongholds; and to avert the evil day—for disestablishment and disendowment are within measurable distance—some of the bishops are leaguing together with many of the most influential of the rank and file to take steps for cleaning out the Augean stable; but they will find their scheme of reformation is rather too late in the day to avail them anything, and the power they hav exercised so long and so unmercifully will soon be taken from them; and as the vast majority, from their training and traditions, are incapable of earning an honest living, they will have to go the way of all useless lumber.

As this is the week of "universal" special prayer, no doubt many supplications will be offered up by the anointed ones for help against the adversary; and, though their successors may suffer, the prayer of the present unjust steward with regard to disestablishment will be, "Not in our time, O Lord!" I expect they will find they are leaning on a broken reed, and they will get as much assistance as the priests of Baal are reported to hav received. The time they hav held pre-eminence has been long enough to show what they are, and the opportunities they hav had to help and relieve suffering humanity hav been thrown away, and it would be useless and wicked to giv them another chance. They will never improve themselves or their system, and the only effectual remedy will be to improve them off the face of the earth. Plenty of them will still find admirers in sufficient numbers to minister to their luxuries and make their paths through life pleasant, but a goodly number will be in no request; and when such is the case, no doubt the stock exchange will get an augmentation of members, and still be able to gain a living by fleecing the unwary in a slightly different manner to which they hav hitherto been accustomed no doubt, but the result will be pretty much the same, and the employment congenial.

A rather bulky pamphlet has been written by the promoters of the Japanese nativ village established in London, giving a history, past and present, of Japan, and I notice that the religious question is entered into. The writer of the introduction is a Japanese woman, and she claims to be the only one "who has embraced and appreciated the blessings of Christianity," and signifies her intention of eventually returning to her nativ country to explain its beauties and the religious liberty enjoyed here. I don't know what her idea of religious liberty may be, but she certainly cannot hav read or heard much of the doings of the clerical members of the church as by law appointed. Perhaps it may be only a little joke on her part, or a bid for the patronage of the religious portion of the community. I should certainly be inclined to look upon it as an artful advertisment, more especially as she only admits the Protestant section as being the true church. Doubtless if the show was exhibiting in Spain or Russia it would be asserted that the Romish or Greek churches were the only genuin articles, all others being counterfeits. The simple-minded Jap has quite as good an eye to business as other individuals who claim a greater amount of civilization.

Several efforts hav been made to draw Charles Bradlaugh, and find out his intentions regarding what action he will take at the assembling of Parliament, but he does not quite seem inclined to divulge his plans, and thereby shows great wisdom. The enemy would be only too glad to be forewarned, and it would scarcely answer to let him know what will be done. It is to be hoped he will be able to take his seat without difficulty, and if so the forthcoming Parliamentary debates will be rather more interesting reading than they usually are. Progressiv literature in this country is steadily increasing in circulation, and this appears to be the rule wherever aggressiv Freethought is establishing itself in the colonies. I hope you find your list of subscribers continually being augumented, for so interesting a journal only has to be seen to be appreciated J. D.

London, Jan. 6, 1886.

Opinions of the Press.

From the Liberal.

THE TRUTH SEEKER came to us last week illustrated with two good cartoons.

Adding to The Truth Seeker's Worth.

From Rights of Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER comes out the first of the year with a new dress, adding illustrations, which adds to its worth as a representativ Freethought paper.

What is a "Splinter" New Dress?

From the New Thought.

THE TRUTH SEEKER comes out illustrated, and with a brand, splinter new dress. It was always a good-looking and able paper, but now looks and is better than ever. E. M. Macdonald is probably the most able editor in the Liberal ranks.

Still Improving.

From the Nonconformist.

The New York TRUTH SEEKER begins the New Year with a complete new dress of type, and several illustrations. The first page contains a large fine engraving from the pungent genius of our old friend Watson Heston. THE TRUTH SEEKER is improving.

No; We Do Not Fear the Hebrews.

From the Hebrew Standard.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, which appears in an elegant new dress, has in its last issue a vigorous cartoon, entitled, "Liberty in Peril." It is a sermon in itself and we are glad to note that the artist does not see in Judaism an element of danger to the rights of the people. It is a truthful compliment which we fully appreciate.

Mr. Walker Knows the Artist.

From Lucifer.

And now comes THE TRUTH SEEKER in a new dress, and embellished with four pictures, the first of which is by our Western artist friend, Watson Heston, of Carthage, Mo., and is fully up to the high standard of conception and artistic excellence by which we hav come to recognize Mr. Heston's productions. Success to the new enterprise.

An Envious Contemporary.

From Light for Thinkers.

THE TRUTH SEEKER put on a new dress with the advent of the New Year. It really looks so neat that we feel envious. It is a hopeful sign for all of us, when our Freethought and spiritual brethren are able to put on style. THE TRUTH SEEKER is also launched into producing illustrations which are more radical than elegant. It intends to show up the ridiculous and unjust in religion, and evidently is going to do it.

The "N. D. C." Also Fighting Catholicism.

From James A. Bliss's N. D. C. Axe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, No. 33 Clinton Place, New York city, Jan. 2d, comes to us in a new dress and finely illustrated. The illustration upon the first page, entitled, "Liberty in Peril," is worth the price of a whole year's subscription. Every member of the N. D. C. should send ten cents for that especial copy, for there is nothing that can so perfectly illustrate the work of the National Developing Circle as that particular picture. The illustrations upon pages 6 and 7, "Holy Virgin," will show you what we escape for our outspoken sentiments by having been born in the nineteenth century. Lay on, Brother TRUTH SEEKER, you are in the true field of reform not one moment too soon.

A Tree-Climbing Fish.

Of all land-frequenting fish, however, by far the most famous is the so-called climbing-perch of India, which not only walks bodily out of the water, but even climbs trees by means of special spines, near the head and tail, so arranged as to stick into the bark and enable it to wriggle its way up awkwardly, something after the same fashion as the "looping" of caterpillars. The tree-climber is a small, scaly fish, seldom more than seven inches long; but it has developed a special breathing apparatus to enable it to keep up the stock of oxygen on its terrestrial excursions, which may be regarded as to some extent the exact converse of the means employed by divers to supply themselves with air under water. Just above the gills, which form of course its natural hereditary breathing apparatus, the climbing-perch has invented a new and wholly original water-chamber, containing within it a frilled bony organ, which enables it to extract oxygen from the stored-up water during the course of its aërial peregrinations. While on shore it picks up small insects, worms, and grubs; but it also has vegetarian tastes of its own, and does not despise fruits and berries. The Indian jugglers tame the climbing-perches and carry them about with them as part of their stock in trade; their ability to liv for a long time out of water makes them useful confederates in many small tricks which seem very wonderful to people accustomed to believe that fish die almost at once when taken out of their nativ element.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Opposition.

AFFLICTED WITH BLIND-STAGGERS.

From Liberty of Jan. 9th.

The editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great bouncing good fellow. He snuffs the air as though it belonged to him. There is not a mean spot in him, and he would spurn to descend to such dishonest tricks as a certain old fox in the Freethought line in Boston is capable of. Neither does he pretend to "culture," and puts on none of those dainty, mincing airs which certain Free Religious sepulchral high priests masquerade in, as forms hardly risen from the dead. For ordinary purposes he is a good, square, level-headed fellow, and publishes the best Freethought journal in America.

But he is, alas! no philosopher. Giv him a good rounded philosophical statement, and he will prance around it like a monkey, chattering such disconnected and inchoate things that it is very hard to get a grip on him. Yet, if he is honest, he is worth saving; hence from time to time I hav tried to show him how utterly illogical he is in fighting the church while at the same time defending the state, when the two are simply different arms of one identical body.

In attempting to criticise my late article, "Institution-Ridden," he steps into a clam-hole and gets over his head. Then how he does flounder and splash! After calling my analysis of true social law a mere "bundle of assertions," he says that Anarchy is unfitted for anything short of the millennium, and makes Mr. Tucker say that it is "impossible of realization."

Mr. Macdonald does admit, then, that at the millennium, which occurs about a thousand years from now, Anarchy will be in order. This is certainly no mean compliment to Anarchy. If Anarchism were radically wrong, it could not liv so long and capture the world just in proportion as progress moves. What progress hav the old left-handed guns such as are still wielded in the TRUTH SEEKER office made in the last four thousand years? Priests were never so numerous and so fat as they are to-day. And yet in one thousand years Anarchy is to take the field and priestcraft be no more. Friend Macdonald, you had better get on board our train, considering the slow progress of your old team through several millenniums.

When the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER asserts that full voluntary individual co-operation would be an institution as fully as any, I pass such ignorance gently by with a recommendation to consult Webster's unabridged, if nothing better is at hand.

Our friend asserts that "the best of governments is a necessary evil, yet that it is necessary no man in his senses can deny." But why is this true of civil governments and not of theological? The vital point, which will not go into Friend Macdonald's brain, is that civil government and theological are one and the same thing. Upon this plain proposition the whole inconsistency of his position hinges. Both rest upon authority. Both are defended as conservators of good order. Each invokes the other when violence is threatened. Each advertises itself as a restraining force. Both assume to be instituted of God. Both levy compulsory taxes. Both hav pains and penaltics for disobedience. Neither concedes the right of private judgment, when expressed in acts. Both are monopolies of natural wealth and the means of well-being. There is, in short, not a single principle that applies to one that does not exactly fit the other. Why, in all consistency, then, condemn the one and defend the other? Why a theological Anarchist and a civil politician? Why skepticism here and cringing faith there? This is the one point that I cannot hold these Freethought people to. They dodge and splatter and hide everywhere. Macdonald in his silly and incoherent reply to me talks exactly like the editor of Zion's Herald when replying to him.

Editor Macdonald's greatest fear of Anarchy lies in his dread of thieves. What is a thief? Is it not he who takes your property without your consent? What power is chiefly engaged in this business? He knows it is the so-called government. Yet he sticks to it that the public welfare calls for these governmental thieves. In saying that the government is the people, he says that the people are thieves. What people? Does he mean everybody? Still more does he insult the people by saying that, if they do not want to be robbed, they can modify the thieving institution. Hav the people, then, been engaged in setting up an institution to rob themselvs?

According to Mr. Macdonald it is the "public welfare" that demands a government. Who is this individual, Public Welfare, and who gave him the right to demand anything? Individuals just as good and wise as Editor Macdonald declare that Public Welfare demands that we should not hav a government. Public Welfare, then, seems to be talking both ways at once. He is on both sides of the fence. He demands of Macdonald that we hav a government, and he demands of me that we hav not a government. He seems to be about as irresponsible and uncertain a nonentity as that other incomprehensible thing, "the people." Cannot Editor Macdonald giv us some accurate description of these two great potentates of his? Are their pictures to be found in any thieves' gallery, or their biographies in any known library?

Editor Macdonald's libel on nature is about the blankest piece of pessimistic savagery that I hav seen for many a day. He says that nature is as vicious as God, which is equivelent to saying that the existing Christian God is as good an ideal as nature is capable of producing. Hence he charges upon nature all the crimes and cruelties executed by the God of the Spanish Inquisition. Could I believe that Friend Macdonald had sunken [sic] so hopelessly low as this, I should despair of him. The fact is that, when he gets tangled up in his own inconsistencies on this subject of Anarchism, he becomes mad. If there is no more virtue in natural law than in the God of scripture, where, then, are we to look for help? Nothing is left us, I fancy, but Macdonald's brain. It were indeed a hard outlook.

Try again, Brother Macdonald. I repeat that you are worth saving. The fact that you lose your head on this one subject of Anarchy alone shows that your conscience is ill at ease in your ridiculous position. There is no use of monkeying with this subject of individual liberty. You want to make liberty a sectarian thing. You cannot do it. Your arguments for full individual liberty on the theological side are pure Anarchism, and yet you say that Anarchism is nonsense when another takes them out of your mouth and applies them to civil affairs. In setting up this war with yourself and chasing your own tail, you get dizzy and lose your head. I do not know where it will end, but shall still labor and pray for your soul's conversion.

A Truth Seeker! Pah!

From the same paper of the same date.

If "X," before writing the foregoing editorial, had seen THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 2d, he would not hav done Editor Macdonald so much honor. Not seeing it, he has given him a certificate of character far beyond his deserts. The paper of the date mentioned contained the following:

AN ANSWER AT LAST.

From Liberty.

"The New York TRUTH SEEKER makes an effort to answer 'X's' editorial, 'Institution-Ridden.' Doubtless 'X' will giv this effort due and satisfactory attention hereafter. Meantime I may remark THE TRUTH SEEKER's statement that when an Anarchist proposes to imprison a thief without his consent he proposes to set up an institution as really a government as any we now hav. Now, it seems to me that just the opposit is the truth, and that the Anarchist, in proposing to imprison the thief without his consent, is fighting precisely on the line of no-government. Why? Because in the case supposed the thief is the government."

Mr. Tucker is developing remarkable powers as a humorist. He cannot mean this as a serious argument. It must be a joke.

Readers of Liberty will remember that the passage quoted by THE TRUTH SEEKER was the beginning of a paragraph the remainder of which was devoted to the seemingly paradoxical statement that "the thief is the government," showing that he is such because he embodies the governing principle, invasion, and that those who resist him, either individually or in association, do not embody that principle at all, but the opposit one, self-defense. Of course, persons unfamiliar with Anarchistic thought, seeing the unexplained statement that the thief is a government, would set its author down for a fool, whereas, if they should see the explanation, they would recognize the idea as an intelligible one, whether it commanded their approval or not. This Macdonald knew; so, seeing the chance to play the pettifogger, he improved it. He did not want his readers to understand me, but snatched at the opportunity of causing them to misunderstand me, in order to avoid confessing his own error, not being sufficiently ardent in his search for truth to pursue the latter course. Hence he descended to this despicable trick, such as "X," in the kindness of his heart, supposes him to be incapable of. THE TRUTH SEEKER begins the New Year with new type. It needed a change of dress badly, but it needs a change of heart more.

Why Are Ministers' Sons Hard Cases?

A subscriber in Vineland, N. J., asks:

"Why is it that so many ministers' sons are such bad boys and such hard cases as men?"

Not all of ministers' sons are thus bad, but many of them are. The reasons are as follows:

1st. The average minister is a tyrant in his family. Imagining himself to be better than other men, he tries to rule his boys with a rod of iron. He denies them access and participation in games, the delight of all people of all ages in all countries. He forbids cards, checkers, and such harmless home amusements. He freezes them up Saturday night or Sunday morning, and stands them back till Monday. His life is so often and so greatly different from his sermons that the boys notice a failure to connect and get out as soon as they can.

2d. Boys inherit from their mother. Many a wife of a minister knows that there is about nineteen miles difference between her husband in bed and in the pulpit—that he is not a sweet saint, a neat man, or a loving husband and parent. Her ideas reach into the minds of her boys. She knows that in a great many cases her husband is a fraud to a certain extent. Her boys know it and kick out. His attentions to other women often worry her and thus impress the child before its birth, and thus the world jogs on. The sense of honesty there is in every human being is disturbed by the difference between profession and possession, and the boy is led astray.

The average minister gets so near to God, as he thinks, that he is a long way from his children. No man can influence children unless he is of them, with them, and for them.

We knew a minister years ago, a cold, psalm-singing Bible-banger, who preached what he said was religion. During the week he would bruise and torture his cows and a horse that was afraid of him; would pound his pigs over the head with a shovel because they came to the trough for feed; would jaw his wife, horsewhip his boys, strip all the clothes from his daughters, and lock them in a bedroom to keep them from going to the neighbors to play with other little girls. As fast as his boys grew up they plunged into the world, finding the lowest kind of a hell-hole to be a haven of happiness in comparison to what they had at home. One of his daughters committed suicide, and his wife died of a broken heart. His home rule was simply beastly, brutal, and his boys became, one a professional gambler, the other a thief who is now serving a term in the Michigan state prison.—Pomeroy's Democrat.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JANUARY 30, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of all the great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Religious Toleration.

J. H. Burnham has on another page a remarkably able article under this heading. But we fear that Mr. Burnham's intense hatred of religious intolerance has led him to go to an unusual extreme. It is very true that the Christian church is outrageously intolerant toward Freethinkers; it is very true that the Mormon and Catholic churches are strongholds of treason and hot-beds of immorality; it is very true that the confessional is an infamous religious scheme; it is very true that the practices of religious fanatics many times are conduciv to the grossest vice, but nevertheless the law that should attempt to stamp out the religion that led to these things would be monstrously tyrannical. Neither can we assume, as does Mr. Burnham, that religions are useful and should therefore be taken cognizance of by the state. In his catalog of religious things not to be tolerated Mr. Burnham has included not only such acts as Freeman's and such immorality as polygamy, but also the ridiculous antics of the Salvationists, the hysterical shoutings of the Free Methodists, and the almost suicidal rite of baptism in open air in mid-winter. Mr. Burnham, too, has almost gone to the length of advocating the prohibition of foreign beliefs.

All this is wrong. The state has no right to inquire into a man's beliefs. The state has no right to prohibit any act not vicious or criminal. The state has no right to interfere with any person who is not trespassing upon the rights of others. A man in this country has a perfect right to be a fool—with the qualifying adjectiv usually written with a dash—that is to say, he has a right to be stupidly religious. If a person wishes to shout in a Free Methodist meeting let him; that is his business. If he wishes to walk through the streets dressed fantastically, shouting for Jesus, that is his right. If a man wants to cut a hole in the ice and stand in the water, all right; his religious insanity will sometimes keep him warm. If a man thinks eternal happiness will be secured by telling another man how many times during the month he has lied, we see no legal objection. Let immigrants bring with them the largest assortment of religious beliefs they hav; they cannot corrupt current Christianity, any more than a rotten egg can be addled.

In dealing with religion the state should be neutral—and neutral not only among religions, but among no religions. The state should never spend a cent for religion, nor for no religion. The state is not for missionary purposes nor for the propagation of any special ideas. When Freeman killed his daughter the state had to incarcerate him in a lunatic asylum for the protection of others. But it would be a dangerous stretch of power to incarcerate all his coreligionists because they might become insane. The state may prosecute a polygamous Mormon, but not all Mormons because they might sometime become polygamists. The state should prosecute a priest who uses the confessional for the accomplishment of crime, but not all priests, unless they are actually criminals. The state should rescue from nunneries all women who are detained against their will, but if a woman voluntarily chooses to immure herself we do not see how she is to be legally prevented. When a Salvation Army "officer" or a Free Methodist class-leader has ruined one of his female converts, the state may punish him; but we do not see the justice of going to the next "officer" or next class-leader and saying, "Here, that fellow is a scoundrel; perhaps you are, too," and summarily ordering his "army" to disband, or the Free Methodists to disperse. If the state shall, as Mr. Burnham advises, tolerate nothing "that is inimical to the health of the community, or the interest of the commonwealth," then who is to judge—especially as to what is in the interest of the commonwealth? If the majority should chance to be of such fellows as the writer of the following in the Westerly (R. I.) Call, what would become of Mr. Burnham? This is in answer to an article in the same paper favoring the taxation of church property:

"I answer that the existence of the churches is as necessary for the public welfare as the existence of the public schools. We might as well tax one as the other. Our safety as a nation depends upon the churches and schools. We could not get along without them. It seems to me that it is policy to encourage and foster them in all possible ways. One of the easiest ways is to exempt them from taxation. . . . If any man wants to get a proper return for the aid which he, by paying a little over tax, givs, let him go to church every Sunday, and take his pay in listening to the religious teachings he will there hear. It will not hurt him. There is little doubt in my mind that a law compelling church attendance on the part of all would be conduciv to the public good. . . . The church wishes to make this nation a Christian nation. Those who are not believers in our creed and faith are at liberty to depart for other quarters. . . . I hope the day is not to come soon when churches and church-members will be thought to be entitled to no more rights than unbelievers. If it does, what profit will it be to belong to the church, or even for the church to exist? I say not tax the churches."

No, friend Burnham, it won't do—to borrow Mr. Ingersoll's expressiv phrase. If the real simon-pure Christians had the majority, you and we would hav to depart for other quarters. The state must not interfere with religious convictions nor with religious practices unless those practices are immoral or criminal. As we hope for justice, so must we render it. Education, science, philosophy, and investigation, "uncovered and unbaptized," must be the weapons against religion. To use the law against it is to repeat the tyrannical action of the church which forces us through legal machination to support what you not inaptly term a disease, inherited from undeveloped ancestors.

Two Entertainments.

The first is on Friday evening, January 29th, in honor of Thomas Paine. This will take the place of the regular Liberal Club program, and will consist of an address by T. B. Wakeman, followed by a musical and dramatic entertainment in which Joseph Frankel, Gustave Frankel, Mrs. L. McCune, Mrs. Fannie Cummings, Frank Fitch, the Krahmer brothers, Miss Annie Lenont, Madam Delescluze, Prof. P. P. Field, and others, will take part. The admission will be twenty-five cents. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the American Secular Union. Every Freethinker in New York should attend.

The second will be on Sunday evening, January 31st, at the Liberal Club (220 East 15th street). This is a benefit which the New York Liberals tender to C. B. Reynolds, previous to his departure for the lecture field. On this occasion Mr. Reynolds will exhibit over one hundred colored views of London and Paris, which he will describe in his unique and picturesque style. Mr. Reynolds's efforts in the Freethought missionary field (if we may so call it) during the past year entitle him to the thanks and assistance of all, and we hope the hall will be crowded. The entertainment is guaranteed to be worth double the twenty-five cents charged. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the lecturer. Let them be large, that he may go on his way rejoicing.

Two Anarchistic Gentlemen.

We print in "The Opposition" this week two editorials from Liberty in reply to our brief criticism of Anarchy in THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 19th. The first is by "X.," Mr. Henry Appleton, the second by "T.," Mr. Benjamin R. Tucker, editor and proprietor of Liberty. For Mr. Appleton's personal compliments we are obliged. We extend to him the assurance of our distinguished consideration. For his derogatory estimate of our philosophical capacity we do not care a pin. The editorial epidermis long ago became callous. We entered into friendly discussion of Anarchy because we desired to know just what Anarchy is, and what its advocates want after they hav overthrown the state. Up to date we acknowledge our ignorance, notwithstanding Mr. Appleton's rather wind-millish endeavors to save us. We hav, indeed, obtained two ideas from Mr. Tucker upon the subject, the first being that Anarchy is "individual initiativ and voluntary coöperation," the second is that a thief stealing an honest man's property is the government. That is all, and the game is hardly worth the powder. From Mr. Appleton's brilliant little essays no satisfaction whatever has been derived. His defense of anarchy has degenerated into badinage and epithet hurling of a not very witty nor convincing sort. When we ask him what Anarchism proposes to do with abusiv ruffians who invade other people's rights he retorts, "You're institution-ridden!" When we press him further he howls, "You're afflicted with blind-staggers!" just as if we were a horse. What use is it, then, to attempt to reason with a "philosopher" like that?

In our last to Mr. Appleton we said that Anarchy was unfitted for any age we could conceive of short of the millennium, and straightway he has it that we admit that in a thousand years Anarchy will prevail. A philosopher who could draw that inference from that statement ought to be at once translated to the millennium. He is of a too logical turn of mind to linger here. Then, again, what has the fatness and numerousness of priests to do with the question of whether or not Anarchy is a feasible institution? Is an inch of fat on a priest's ribs an argument in favor of no government? Or shall we hav no cakes and ale because there are numerous priests with distended waistcoats? Another statement of our philosopher:

"When the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER asserts that full voluntary individual coöperation would be an institution as fully as any, I pass such ignorance gently by with a recommendation to consult Webster's unabridged, if nothing better is at hand."

Well, we hav a Webster—revised edition, with five thousand new words—and it says that an "institution" is an established order, or method, or custom. Now, if a voluntary individual coöperation is neither a method nor a custom, then what in the world is it? We pass that phase of Mr. Appleton's foolishness by without further comment.

To our opinion that no man in his senses can deny that government is necessary our helter-skelter philosopher of Boston asks: "Why is this true of civil governments and not of theological?" and adds: "The vital point is that civil government and theological are one and the same thing." This is nonsense. A civil government is that form of society which men hav instituted for their own protection against undeveloped or wrongly developed animals. It is coöperation of the people to achieve certain ends relating to secular affairs. When Mr. Appleton walks down to the Newsman office he treads a pavement provided by coöperation of the people—otherwise, a municipal government. To be consistent (because he asserts that the government has no right to tax him for this pavement), he ought to walk in the slush of the street. When he returns home late at night his way is lighted and his person protected by the same government. Again, if he is willing to push his logic to the extreme, he must carry a lantern or else find his way over unpaved streets in the dark. He should not take advantage of what other people hav done unless he is willing to pay his portion. Civil government—or society in its corporate capacity—performs a thousand necessary acts which individuals cannot do. It protects us from outside invasion; it givs us a stable currency in place of wildcat issues by irresponsible parties; it givs us schools, instead of having each family teach its own children; punishes domestic wrong-doers, cares for the poor, the insane—imperfectly, we admit, but still better than individuals can—and in all these is but the servant of its creator, the people. The people can change or abolish it, if they choose. The people are alone to blame if their servants, chosen to administer the government, steal from them. The people of New York city, for instance, are phenomenal in their idiocy in allowing their officials to abuse their trust as they do.

But ecclesiastiacism—what is it? An institution of scheming men who gull the masses, and by alliance with political schemers fasten themselvs upon the necks of the people. Ecclesiasticism does not subserve one useful purpose. Civil government does. Civil government should be reformed, not abolished. Ecclesiastical government should be abolished, because it is a burden from which no good is derived. Civil government deals with this world, which we know is here; ecclesiasticism deals with an unknown world. It is necessary that this old world should be righted; the other we can attend to when we reach it. The government of the United States does not assume to be instituted by God, but by the people. Ecclesiasticism cannot levy taxes of itself, but only through abuse of power by those chosen by the people to administer the affairs of society. This abuse should be reformed, and will be when enough of the people realize its monstrous injustice.

These points we hav pressed upon Mr. Appleton's attention several times, but he never attempts to answer them. He is lost in the clouds of his own crankiness, and will hav nothing to do with facts.

There is nothing in his further remarks concerning the individual Public Welfare, or THE TRUTH SEEKER editor's pessimism, that calls for comment. Public welfare, in the opinion of Mr. Appleton, is only his assertion against ours. If he can deceive anyone with such a definition, that person is not worth saving. In his comments upon what he calls our pessimistic view of nature, Mr. Appleton givs a splendid epitome of his method of argument. He asserts we "charge upon nature all the crimes and cruelties executed by the God of the Spanish Inquisition." Now just analyze, as it were, that "reply." 1. We never wrote or thought any such thing; 2. Nature is incapable of artificial cruelty; and 3. God had nothing to do with the Spanish Inquisition. Men, and men only, perpetrated the cruelties, and it was as an ecclesiastical government that they did them. Civil government destroyed the Inquisition. And so it is all the way through Mr. Appleton's alleged argument—there is no honesty, no regard for facts, in it. "Gratiano speaks an infinit deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice; his reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and, when you hav them, they are not worth the search."

Mr. Tucker, our other opponent, is evidently in a state of mental exacerbation. Without doubt he is angry. Yet why should he be? In all our controversy, he has never done more than jerk out from our criticisms of Anarchy a single sentence to belabor. We did not complain, because our statements are self-supporting. But when we giv the whole substance of his remarks, the very kernel, he waxes indignant, and says we hav made him out a fool. We can only reply, in the words of the Hindoo poet, "You say it, and not I." But we never intended to injure the fine sensibilities of our Boston friend, and to make amends we giv herewith the props depended upon by him to support the assertion (which, standing alone, he admits is foolish) that "the thief is the government:

"A government is any power which seeks to impose its will upon others and steal away their rights. The very first act of nearly all governments is precisely that of which the thief is guilty—the taking of property without the consent of the owner. They who resist the highway robber are just as truly opposing government as they who resist the tax-collector. And when the compulsory state resists the highway robber and imprisons him, the spectacle is furnished of one thief struggling with and punishing another. When a thief attempts to take the property of another, he undertakes to govern, to impose his will; and if the intended victim and those whom he can get to help him offer any resistance, they become rebels against government, and so far Anarchists. So, when the state attempts to collect a tax, or when it imprisons D. M. Bennett in the Albany penitentiary for expressing his opinions, it undertakes to govern, to impose its will; and the victims of this thief and tyrant are likewise rebels, and so far Anarchists, if they resist. The Anarchist is opposed to all thieves and all governments because they are invaders, and against all of them he claims the right of self-defense. To call the exercise of this right government is to betray an entire misapprehension of the nature of government. Those who voluntarily associate to exercise this right are as far removed from the institutions called governments, which assume to control the conduct of everybody within their so-called jurisdictions and to make them pay the cost of this control, as the sun is from the earth."

If this betters Mr. Tucker's position in the slightest degree, we are glad of it. We do not want to take an unfair advantage of him. But it would, we believe, be impossible to underrate the reasoning powers of a man who can see in "sneak-thief" or "highway robber" a synonym for "government." When a thief breaks into Mr. Tucker's hallway and takes his overcoat from the rack, is he seeking to govern Mr. Tucker? Rather, is not the thief afraid Mr. Tucker will seek to govern him by shutting him up in jail, and controling his actions for a term of years? We hav been referred to Webster for definitions. Mr. Webster says Anarchy is a "state of society where individuals do what they please with impunity." Is not this thief a practical Anarchist? and in punishing him is not Mr. Tucker acting the part of government? Although Mr. Tucker is physically capable of coping with the strongest thief, yet suppose he were not, and should call to his aid the sinewy "X.," would not their united efforts be a cooperation corresponding to the municipal government? Carrying the simile further, suppose both "X." and Mr. Tucker disliked to engage in physical struggles, and out of their wealth hired their eminent townsman, Mr. John L. Sullivan, to grapple with the purloiner of goods, would they not be exactly in the position of the people of the state, and would not Mr. Sullivan be their executiv officer, precisely as the police and the militia are the excutivs of the state and municipality? Supposing, further, that it became their method or custom (we hav been referred to Webster for definitions) to hire their police work done, would not they then hav an institution, and is not the state an institution?

The whole trouble with these Anarchists is that they will persist in setting up the "state" as something outside of the people, an entity, a governing force in itself, having no connection with the governed beyond collecting its taxes. This, in this country, is all wrong. Government is a means used by the people for performing those things necessary for the good of the whole, and which can be better performed by thus coöperating than individually. When our Boston friends see this, they will stop trying to abolish the state and set about reforming those abuses which hav crept in owing to the grasping propensities of unscrupulous men, which propensities, born of the struggle for existence, and perpetuated by a selfish theology, would make that state of society where individuals did with impunity what they pleased a literal hell on earth—formless chaos and chaotic form.

In an effort for such a reformation we should be pleased to coöperate with these friends to the fullest extent of our power.

Lotteries.

Senator Wilson, of Iowa, has reported favorably, from the committee on post-office and post roads, the bill introduced by him to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisments. It is intended to close the United States mails against the transmission of lottery advertisments of every kind and character. "Without some law," the report says, "the insidious temptations contained in the cunningly devised lottery advertisments will continue to invade every state, family, shop, and office, every place of business or of pleasure, or public and private resorts, in spite of the efforts which the states hav made to prevent it."

"Freedom of the press," the report concludes, "was not guaranteed for the purpose of intrenching in our system an enemy to its better conditions; on the contrary, it was established for the purpose of promoting such conditions. If it be prostituted to the base purposes of crime, and the demoralization of the people, to the swindling devices of the manipulators of lottery schemes, surely Congress may say that it shall not be entitled to use the instrumentality of the mail to effect its needs. Evil agencies in society are sufficiently activ and effectiv of harmful results in spite of all that is done to restrain them, without being reinforced by a doctrin and practice which would intrench them in the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press and assure them immunity in the use of the mail."

It is difficult to say anything against the bill of Mr. Wilson's, for the incompetent reasoners of the press and pulpit will at once clamor that its opponents are friends of the lottery thieves. Yet for all that, it is a bad bill, and should not pass. To admit the principle that Congress has the legal right to inspect the contents of a mail pouch is to open the doors for abuses most widespread and flagrant in character. If a paper may be denied carriage through the mail because of an advertisment of a lottery swindle, it may be denied the privilege because of advertisments of other swindles—land swindles, quack medicin advertisments, bogus investment schemes, and so on to the end of the chapter. Again, such a law would do no good, for the lotteries could seal up advertisments printed on slips, and the law could not reach them. And a Congressional statute that can be thwarted by a two-cent stamp, it must be admitted, is of very little weight.

The leather bags used to convey mail matter are not likely to hav their morals corrupted by the character of their burdens. The people who print and those who receive objectionable matter are the injurers and the injured. If the United States government is constitutionally permitted to regulate the morals of the citizens, let the conductors of lotteries and the fools who spend their money in them be the ones to feel the effects of law.

But we never could find in the Constitution any grant from the states giving the general government, at the instance of a church tool, the right to legislate upon the morality of the people, and the best constitutional lawyers agree that the state is the proper power to restrain vice, if it be a vice for a fool to send his money to a knave.

REFERRING to Remsburg's lecture on "Sabbath-Breaking," in Sarnia, Dr. Pace, the United States consul there, said: "I hav the best of reasons for knowing that many came for the express purpose of preventing the lecture and breaking up the meeting. The speaker, however, was equal to the occasion. His first sentence silenced them, in ten minutes they were applauding him, and throughout the meeting he remained master of the situation."

THE Salt Lake Tribune is opposed to Mormonism, and argues:

"Were a neighbor of Senator Hoar to go to England or France and in a court there renounce his allegiance to the United States government in particular and tender his first fealty to the empire of Great Britain or the republic of France, and then returning to the United States attempt to vote in Massachusetts, Senator Hoar would be among the first to exclaim against it and to point out the absurdity of a man assuming to be a citizen of two countries at the same time. But there is no Mormon who essays to vote in the United States who is any more a citizen than would be that Massachusetts man on his return from Europe."

This is a very good slap at Romanists, yet we doubt if the Senate would entertain a motion to confiscate the property of the Roman Catholic church.

WE are glad to receive such testimony as this to the character of the books the Truth Seeker Company is publishing. J. C. Underhill writes it to John Swinton's Paper: "Please allow me to recommend to your readers J. K. Ingalls's recently published book, 'Social Wealth.' As one who has for years made a special study of political economy, having waded through the principal writings of most of the more noted authors, American and foreign, it is my opinion that Mr. Ingalls has, in this little volume, set forth more sound sense, more bed-rock truth, more real economic science, than is contained in all the dismal volumes written by the regular orthodox school of political economists from Adam Smith down—down to that pigmy of political economy, Professor Sumner, who wrote about 'What Social Classes Owe to Each Other,' and demonstrated therein how much he doesn't know. As an earnest and honest essay toward the coming political economy—or, rather, social or industrial science—which shall harmonize with justice and ethics (which the orthodox political economy does not), 'Social Wealth' is worthy of a place in every social reformer's library, side by side with Henry George's 'Progress and Poverty.' I hope it may hav a great circulation, for it is worthy."

Letters from Friends.

OTTAWA, O, Jan. 12, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased to believe there are but few who can think as our friend J. W. Graham does of THE TRUTH SEEKER's illustrations. For my part, they are immense. Each illustration speaks volumes, and can be read at a glance; they are multum in parvo. Why, my most strait-laced orthodox friends will take time to read the pictures, even a Catholic priest. I am sure to leave the paper lying around my office in such a manner that anyone coming in cannot help seeing, and as stated, reading, the illustrations. Orthodox, as you are aware, are a very peculiar people of a peculiar organization, and cannot be induced, at once, to take strong pabulum as found in every article of T. B. Wakeman and men of that sort. Now, those illustrations are quickly read, easily digested, and in my opinion will reach the comprehension of those outside of our Liberal ranks, quicker and more of them, easily digested and assimilated, than the distribution of one hundred TRUTH SEEKERS unaided by illustrations. C. E. B., a Veteran.

BURR OAK, MICH., Jan. 18, 286.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot keep still any longer. I must write to express my unqualified, enthusiastic approval of your pictorial venture. The illustrations are an immense addition to the attractivness of the paper. When I first see a new one I feel like throwing up my cap and giving three hearty cheers. THE TRUTH SEEKER has never said or done anything that gave me the entire satisfaction that this new feature givs. My hatred of the holy Roman Catholic church is beyond expression in words, and every check to its power givs me a corresponding degree of pleasure. Long life to the artist, Mr. Heston, and "more power to his elbow!" I hope that some good Freethinker of equal artistic ability will be ready to take up the good work when Mr. Heston shall hav to lay it down. No one should begrudge the space, for there is plenty of reading in your paper exclusiv of the first page. Everyone whose reading is not very limited knows that the great illustrated papers wield an immense influence on a variety of subjects. Pictures appeal directly to the feelings, while the reason must be approached by means of the written discourse. Both are required when the most effectiv work is desired.

Michigan, you see, is coming to the front as a new "holy land." A state that can produce salt and lumber and sauerkraut miracles is not to be sneezed at. I see that the Mason News classes sauerkraut among the "delicacies." Perhaps it is a delicacy (though it never happened to strike me that way), and perhaps that is the reason that the Lord forbade it to Mr. Welch, fearing that the holy man might become fastidious and sensual. But this kraut business givs rise to some rather troublesome queries. After this leader of the praying band" had "prayed long and earnestly to be allowed to eat of the kraut," and "arisen with the assurance that his request was granted," why was he "smitten with sore gastronomical distress?" Did the Lord wilfully deceive him—just to hav a little fun with him and see him squirm—or was it a case of violated contract, wherein Mr. Welch devoured half a bushel of kraut when the Lord meant to limit him to a peck? Those who hav been "born again" say they know when their prayers are accepted. Why didn't this reverend, raving, roaring revivalist know how things would work? Either his boasted "assurance" was false or the Lord deceived him. The saints may take which horn they please. What use was it for Mr. Welch to pray "long and earnestly" if he was to be punished just the same as he would hav been if he had taken the kraut without any prayer? Why did he pray to hav his mass of disgusting sauerkraut transferred to that young man's stomach, well knowing that the young man's best girl would be likely to attribute the trouble to forty-rod and giv him the cut in consequence? But a young man who is willing to carry such a "clergyman's load" as that ought to be sleeping quietly under the daisies before another revivalist comes around. The kraut seems to be satisfactorily accounted for, but "our informant" does not state whether or not the young man's dose of whisky and onions was transferred to the preacher's stomach as a substitute for the rejected cabbage.

The Mason News says: "How the pickled cabbage could hav appeared in his stomach except through the intervention of some supernatural agency is the problem." Yes, but did it appear in his stomach? If so, to whom? Who saw that kraut when it was in the young man's stomach? That is question No. 2. A suspicious flimsiness, a sort of looseness of parts, as it were, characterizes the whole story. I think that a colored individual of Herculean proportions will yet be discovered in the fence that surrounds this miracle. If Mr. Welch intends to continue the miracle business, I hope his soul will not "so strongly yearn" for sauerkraut again. He ought to go a little above that when he wants to astonish the nativs with a miracle. Those who hav not seen the account of the miracle should refer to THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 16th. N. G. W.

STEUBENVILLE, O, Jan. 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I was more than pleased with the cartoon in your issue of yesterday the 16th. It strikes at the most impending danger to our republican institutions. The Catholic church is a political association whose primary object is to keep the masses in ignorance; and since the church has instructed its subjects, both male and female, to vote at all elections for the benefit of the church, it will be tenfold more dangerous. They will endeavor to get representativs of the church on school boards, and in every office where they will hav a chance to further the interest and power of the church. I think you would add to the interest of the cartoons if you would, after the style of Puck, write a few lines on the subject of them on the second page, though yesterday's needed nothing to help it along. Generally, however, a few words from your pen might add considerable to its effect. In today's issue of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, I find the following from "Bessie Bramble" on the Edmunds bill to suppress the Mormons. She complains that his bill only disfranchises the Mormon women and not the men, and says:

"As it is, his bill provides for the punishment of the innocent while the chief sinners go free. Is it not plain that the territorial government of Utah should not be controled by the Mormon church? Church and state should be entirely separated. Such separation is one of the foundation principles of the government of the country, and that a church usurps power both political and ecclesiastical in one of the territories under the United States government, shows that strong measures are necessary. Instead of holding allegiance to the government, the thousands of emigrants who now people Utah are bound to support Mormonism and the Mormon church. Should these people be endowed with the privilege of the ballot, to use it for the interest of the church and the perpetuation of polygamy, is the question? The legislature of Idaho seems to hav grasped the situation when it disfranchised all persons of Mormon belief and disqualified them from holding office."

Now, I would ask, does not all this apply to the Catholic church quite as forcibly as to the Mormon? There perhaps is not a genuin Catholic in the country who would not boldly tell you he would obey the church, or in other words the pope, before he would the state. They take the oath of allegiance with that reservation and giv their allegiance to the pope above the state in all countries. Then why pick out a mere handful of Mormons to disfranchise because they set their church above the state, when at the same time we are welcoming hundreds of thousands who giv their allegiance to a church a thousand times stronger and more dangerous, which lets our occasion slip to get an advantage over the Constitution and the state, and wages open warfare against our public schools?

Inclosed find twenty-five cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886. J. DOWNES.

GIDEON, KAN., Dec. 31, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The last of another year has come, and ere this reaches you will be gone forever. Inclosed find $3 to renew me for one year. I could not do without the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. It should be illustrated.

Times are duller than ever, and they seem to get worse. I believe it is due to to the damnable policy of those in power. We people of the West want silver money on an equality with gold.

We hav had several religious revivals in this neighborhood, one by the Methodists, lasting four weeks. They had crowded houses every night, and by hard work managed to gather in fifteen, twelve of these having previously been converted and backslid. In just one week one of their converts went to a dance. His father followed, and vowed if his boy danced he would hav to dance over his dead body. The boy danced, however, but not over the father's corpse. After the revival the citizens had a meeting to express their opinions on religion and dancing, and we must say the Methodists caught a little sheol. Why can't we hav Watts or Putnam to lecture at Lawrence, a town of 10,000 inhabitants?

Keep the torch of reason burning,
For the people they are turning,
Learning every day. J. W. WATKINS.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., Jan. 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please giv me credit for inclosed amount and forward your paper as per address.

It givs me much pleasure to be able to add my mite with the rest toward the support of so able an exponent of Freethought as is your paper; and in connection with the effort now being made to make it an illustrated paper, you may depend on me for $5 for that particular purpose. I know of no better way to reach the masses than through the pictorial press, and the vast amount of good results to be accomplished that way is incalculable. Your issue for January 2d is highly commendable, and should be read and circulated far and near by everyone who subscribes for it.

I hav just finished reading Miss Helen Gardener's book on "Men, Women, and Gods," and can honestly say that it is a book worthy of perusal by every wife and mother in the land. It should be on the center-table and in the library of every family throughout the United States. Miss Gardener handles her subject well, and her logic is sound and her arguments unanswerable. She should be encouraged in her noble endeavor to free her sex from priestly thraldom, for she has dared to "beard the lion in his den" and has come out unscathed. All honor and praise to this brave little woman. May she liv long enough to realize her fondest hopes and may her efforts be crowned with success, is the sincere wish of one who believes in the untrammeled rights and freedom of every man, woman, and child, Gods or no Gods.

MAZZINI SEVERANCE.

THAOKERVILLE, CHICKASAW NATION, Dec. 29, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Grover Cleveland and his cabinet regard the Indian question as a great problem. Thomas Jefferson and Thomas Paine declared all men born free and equal—whites, Indians, and negroes. The first failure in the problem was when George Washington made the treaty with the Indians. He should hav made them citizens. The next was when Andrew Jackson set apart this territory for the Indians (1830). His humane policy was for us to starve. I was here three years before I ever got a full meal—Oklahoma. All that has been said about Payne and Couch is not about Oklahoma at all. I will cite to you the eighth article of the treaty of 1866 between the United States and the Chickasaws and Choctaws. The Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles are the different tribes or nations to which the land is to be divided in severalty. This act should be Secularized by incorporating our Nine Demands. It will be for the general interest of all of the Indians to hold their land in severalty. Holman and Atkins, while on their tour of inspection through the Indian country, if they were sober enough, while standing on the rear platform of a train saw about ten miles of the Chickasaw nation about Colbert Station. Now, I'm not dictating terms to Congress, but will hav to abide by their decision. They profess to deal justly by the Indians. I am a Chickasaw. R. H. LOVE.

NEVINVILLE, IA., Jan. 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav secured a couple of new subscribers for your paper at Cromwell, Ia., to whom you will please send it for one year, and find inclosed $5. I suppose two new ones are as acceptable as one old one. Consequently I gave them the benefit of your offer. I hope to be able to send you some more names ere long, and you can count on me for life. I think the pictures are an improvement, and add to the attractivness of the paper. For the other $2 please send me the inclosed list of books and missionary tracts for the benefit of a Methodist revival under operation at this godly town.

It seems to me as if a list of all the subscribers to your paper would form a more complete Freethought directory than one prepared under H. L. Green's system, in which the names of many are inserted who are not activ Liberals. This difficulty would be avoided in the former, and all would appreciate one of that kind. Yours, F. I. GREEN.

LAURA, O. Jan., 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Yours of recent date at hand, and please find inclosed $5.00, and also accept thanks for waiting. Your illustrations are the best thing yet in Freethought literature. Keep it up by all means if you can afford it. Your pictures stir the blood in the most pronounced Liberals, and they will certainly reach and effect those who will not read.

Yours truly, J. P. BRANDON.

WATERLOO, IND., Jan. 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $5, which implies there is one new subscriber, and one who, I believe, has come to stay. These pictures talk very plainly. They are all that I expected. If I should suggest any improvement in No. 1, it would be to name the limb that elevates and supports the clergy. True, the goddess is placed in a very unfavorable condition. Yet her face indicates more fear of her care from the enemy that hides behind the almighty dollar. In No. 2, Uncle Sam seems sufficient for the present besetment, if Gabriel does not come to their help. He is sound on the goose. Lectures are what are wanted now to let in the truth and light. E. R. SHOEMAKER.

HOPKINTON, R. I., Jan. 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: There is an old Scottish story which commences by saying that "Gilbert Ainslie was a poor man, and he had been a poor man all the days of his life, which were not few, for his thin hair was now waxing gray."

This is an exact description of my own condition, which, I hope, sufficiently explains why I hav received and read your paper a full year without having forwarded the pay. "When my years were few" I learned to practice self-denial, and to enjoy life although compelled to confine myself to its absolute necessities, dispensing with all its luxuries. And yet after all that I hav learned in life's hard school I am not quite equal to the task of denying myself the inestimable privilege of a weekly perusal of your paper. Still, I shall regard it as an act of kindness on your part to discontinue it whenever you become entirely discouraged about ever receiving your pay. I am so frequently amused at the arguments of my Christian friends that were I but capable I should occasionally send you something about these productions. PELEG KENYON.

GIBSON, PA., Jan. 5, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please credit me $5 of the inclosed remittance, $7, on subscription, and for the balance send a copy of A. J. Davis's late work, entitled "Beyond the Valley," one copy of Paine's "Age of Reason." and balance in such tracts for distribution as you consider most efficient for doing missionary work among those who are just beginning to use their reasoning faculties. Captain Case, an old Universalist, and resident of this place half a century ago, used to remark that it would not do to feed babes with strong drink. The Universalists of that time were almost as radical as the Liberals of to-day, but, like the Unitarians, could not endure the odium of being called Infidels. They were sufficiently strong to build a comfortable church here, which is now unoccupied. Many of the old members continue to take the Christian Leader, not yet comprehending that a disbelief in the miraculous conception and vicarious atonement, which they all entertain, utterly divorces them from Christianity. I had delayed renewing my subscription, hoping to be able to induce some of them to subscribe, but conclude to renew now, and afterward distribute the circulars you sent me, and, if possible, get some subscribers. JOSHUA BURROWS.

THE LAST WAS NOT THE LAST.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 14, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am the last man on earth to quarrel with tongue or pen, neither will I, no matter who slings mud at me; my principles stand far above all low manifestations. The honest truth will stand as a wall of adamant, and all the superstitions of earth can never overthrow it; no argument or test is required to firmly establish Materialism. Grand old nature stands at its back, and no powers of men or gods can ignore or refute its undying philosophy.

Thanks to my Materialistic brother, Chas. F. Blackburn, of Idaho Ter., for his able defense of the honest convictions of my true inwardness. His good opinions are highly valued, and I trust thousands of others are blessed with the light of reason to an equal degree to guide them out of the old ruts of supernatural superstitions, one of which is modern Spiritualism founded on that ancient fraud known by the name of sorcery. But, sir, the time must come when all this darkness of mind under the influence of all kinds of religious quackery will vanish, and bright and glorious reason will usher in the only solid truth, Materialism. Then, sir, fraud, hypocrisy, and the many evils springing therefrom will be extinct, and manhood and womanhood will stand erect, and neither bow nor cring to priest craft, medium craft, or any false and blighting craft which robs mankind of mind and money. T. WINTER, Materialist.

P. S.—I do not envy E. T. Slight, of Watsonville, Cal. I regret that his mind is so small and so low down in the dregs of depravity as to make him capable of insulting and abusing a man who never did him a wrong. I hope he will liv to know better. W.

OSBORN, O., Jan. 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: You will find my remittance, to be disposed of as per inclosed. We cannot afford to let THE TRUTH SEEKER die. Our brave men hav to die; another one, Elizur Wright, is gone, and Ingersoll is growing old, and his battles too will soon be over. Oh, that others equally able, earnest, and brave may arise to fill their places! But more important still that THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, and such papers become permanent and lasting institutions.

S. F. WOODWARD.

ALTON, ONT., Jan. 12.

MR. EDITOR: As many of your readers are aware of the fact that during the last six weeks Mr. Charles Watts has been lecturing in Canada, it may be interesting to giv a brief account of some of the good work done by him during that time. His lecture engagements in Toronto and Hamilton hav been marked with all the success that he could wish for. In fact, his Toronto audiences hav increased with a rapidity that is causing some alarm to the goody-goody shepherds of the orthodox folds.

Apart from his lecture on Secularism and its general principles, he delivered two lectures on Home Rule and the British House of Lords that hav been very favorably commented upon by the leading Toronto dailies, and he has been solicited by some of the Irish societies of that city to repeat the same lectures at an early date.

Outside of the two cities aforesaid he has been breaking considerable new ground in the rural districts of Ontario. It was my good fortune to occupy the chair on the occasion of his giving two lectures in the town of Ayr, Waterloo county.

Ayr is a pretty and thriving town on the river Nith, and is the center of one of the finest agricultural districts in Canada. As the name would indicate, the population is mainly Scotch, and the town has upon it the impress of the leading characteristics of the people from the land of the bluebell and the heather. Industry, thrift, and cleanliness are everywhere visible, and there is not another town in Canda where so many men own the houses in which they liv. This fact will account for the air of thrift that surrounds the humble homes of average workingmen in this locality. Ayr is well represented in manufacturing interests, two large iron foundries and two splendid flouring mills (whose products are distributed all over the dominion) giving employment to a large number of mechanics, and assisting in a great measure the prosperity of the town. It is well represented in educational interests.

Its public school is a large and substantial building where a number of excellent teachers are employed to teach the young idea how to shoot. Its mechanics' institute, library, and reading-room are second to none outside of any city in Canada. There are a few Secularists here, who for more than a quarter of a century hav asserted their individuality and maintained their right to do their own thinking, in spite of the strong orthodox tendencies of this truly Presbyterian center. Prominent among those veterans in our cause may be mentioned William Becket, John Rewick, Peter and Thomas Hope, and James Brown. They are all men well-advanced in years, having passed on life's highway the stone that marks the highest point, and the shadows are now falling toward the east. But they are all worthy Secularists, who wear the white flower of a blameless life, and are citizens above reproach.

The most activ Secularist in Ayr is Robert Manson, a man in the prime of life, and a thorough worker in the glorious cause of Secularism and universal mental liberty for the sons and daughters of men. It was through his exertions that arrangements were made for the delivery of the first two lectures on Secularism ever given in Ayr. They were delivered in Reid's Music Hall on the evenings of January 13th and 14th, and, taking all things into consideration, they were the most successful lectures ever given in defense of our common cause outside of a city in Canada. The seating capacity of the hall is about 450. When we left the hotel to go to the hall the evening of the first lecture, we found the Salvation Army kneeling in the snow at the door (cool work with the thermometer at zero) praying for us and warning the people to avoid the devil and Watts.

Notwithstanding this, the hall was fully two-thirds filled, and from the excellent order that prevailed and the frequent applause that greeted the lecturer it was made apparent that "Secularism, Destructiv and Constructiv," found a response in the heart and brain of the majority of those who were present. The subject for the second lecture was, "Unbelief: What It Is and What It Has Done for Humanity." At 8 o'clock the hall was filled, and Mr. Watts seemed to be inspired by his splendid audience. He excelled all his previous efforts and delivered a two-hour lecture that was repeatedly interrupted with rounds of applause. I will not attempt to giv even a brief sketch of the lecture. It must be heard in order to be appreciated. It fairly bristled with logic, and shattered the foundations of orthodoxy in many a brain that previously accepted the old Jewish story without for one moment questioning the palpable absurdities and nonsense that soon become apparent to an inquirer after truth. After the lecture an informal reception was held in one of the parlors of the Hilborn House, and Mr. Watts had an opportunity of making the acquaintance of a number of Secular friends who had come from some of the neighboring villages to hear him. Some had come from Eastwood, a distance of seventeen miles, and were so well pleased with the lecture that they insisted on Mr. Watts delivering a course of lectures in that place in the near future. Arrangements were also made for another lecture in Ayr and one in Galt. If the Secularists of Canada were thoroughly organized and in perfect harmony with the spirit of progress, a good lecturer could be kept in the field constantly and local organizations could be made excellent training schools for the young people that are growing up in Secular homes. Mr. Watts's lectures are well calculated to bring about this desirable object, and it is to be hoped that more new ground will be opened up by him before the month of June, when he intends to return to England to spend the summer months. WILLIAM ALGIE.

LOOKING GLASS, ORE., Jan. 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I send you $8.25, which apply on Ingersoll's Lectures complete and the ANNUAL. Credit me also with one year's subscription to the paper.

As I hav received letters of inquiry from friends about Oregon, I would like to say a few words in reply through the columns of your paper. To persons with moderate means we say, you can secure land at reasonable prices and where the climate is much milder than in the same latitude East. Skilled laborers with capital could find employment here by engaging in some of the many manufacturing industries that hav been so sadly neglected here in the past. The tourist and pleasure-seeker, with time and money to spend, we think would be amply repaid by the change of scenery both here and on the route. As to persons looking for free homes, we think there is little to encourage them in coming West at this late day. It is true, there is some vacant land, but it is mountainous and unfit for settlement. I will say that the writer has been a resident of western Oregon for thirty-three years, but hav not had the benefit of the donation or Homestead law. I hav paid for every foot of land owned by myself, for the simple reason that the good land was all taken when I came here.

There is another class—the common laborer, with a family dependent upon him. Recollect you will meet the Chinaman here; that you will hav to put yourself in competition with him in the field of labor. This you cannot do, of course, unless you adopt his mode of living, which no respectable person can do.

In writing these few lines I hav been actuated only by a desire to benefit that class who expect to help and better their condition by going West, and as much as we would like to see the country settled up with industrious and honest citizens, still we are not justified in deceiving people by false statement, and thereby misleading them, to accomplish that result.

To our Liberal friends who want to come West we say: Do not put too much confidence in the descriptiv circulars that are sent broadcast over the country to encourage emigration, and which generally make very flowery statements. Here I will make an illustration: The statement is made that Oregon has a large area of unoccupied land. This is true so far, but uothing is said about the quality or location of this land. The fact is, this large body of land is embodied in two great ranges of mountains averaging in width from fifty to seventy-five miles and running the entire length of the state.

Yours fraternally, FRAZIER WARD.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Jan. 11, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find one dollar for Helen H. Gardener's book, "Men, Women, and Gods;" "Common Sense," by Thomas Paine, and the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 286.

Well, I went to church last evening, as my wife was gone to visit a sick lady some distance away. The Free Methodists hav just put up a brand-new church only a few blocks from my house, so I went there. Now please tell me what is a Free Methodist, for I never heard of a Methodist being free, or anyone else that belonged to any of the churches, for that matter. Well, in his sermon, the preacher told us that any man or woman who was not a Christian was a slave. Now, how did he come to know so much about slavery—and he did not seem to be overstocked with brains either? His text was from the 11th chapter of Matthew, 28th, 29th, and 30th verses, which says, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart." Now, would it not look more meek if some one else had said that for him? But there was one thing I liked about that preacher—his sermon was only half an hour long. I counted every person in the house, and there were twenty-nine of the male persuasion and twenty-one of the female persuasion, and about twelve of the men were Freethinkers. I had only got comfortably seated when they passed the hat around for a collection, and yet the preacher said he was independent, for God took care of him and his family, body and soul. Well, after the meeting was over, I saw some of my Liberal friends there, and while we stood in a little knot, shaking hands with each other, the two preachers came around, and one put out his hand to me and said, "What is your name?" I told him it was Hare. "Do you know the Lord?" said he. "No, sir, I hav not the pleasure of his acquaintance." Then he took the hand of a saloon-keeper and also asked his name, but the saloon-keeper said: "You hav no use for me, for I sell whisky." "Why do you sell whisky?" said the preacher. "I hav to or go to the poorhouse," said the other. "Well," said the preacher, "I should rather go to the poorhouse than to sell whisky." "Well. that is a matter of taste," said the other. Then the preacher said he would rather hav religion than be president of the United States. "But," said I, "there is not so much money in it. and money makes the mare go. Do you read the New York TRUTH SEEKER?" said I. "No," said he. "Well," said I, "you ought to read it, for it is the best paper in the country, for it keeps you posted in everything." Then he invited us to come again, and we all started home. I am throwing your paper around wherever I think it will be read, and what few books I hav are loaned out all the time. I think those pictures are just grand. I notice that Mr. M. E. Rose says in his letter, "Put them in once in a while," but I will go him one better and say twice in a while.

Happy New Year to you all. GEO. M. HARE.

SWEETLAND, IOWA, Jan. 12, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find postal order for $5—$2.50 to renew my covenant with you; $2.50 for one new subscriber. I was born and reared near Blairstown, N. J., a country that has more superstition and ignorance to the square mile than any other country I hav any knowledge of—the home of the late Rev. Jacob S. Harden, who has preached in my father's house, and who murdered his wife and was executed at Belvidere, N. J. So you see if I am not a devout Christian it is not on account of my early training. I was at one time elected school director. The Bible was used for the first lesson every day. I politely requested the teacher (who, by the way, was a clergyman's daughter) not to instruct my children in Bible lessons. That brought down the church people's indignation. They said they would meet and kick me out. I said, "Gentlemen, just kick me out," and I held the fort. They concluded that what could not be cured must be endured, and we had no Bible in our school for over four years. I did not start to write my autobiography, but I want to keep before the people the idea that our public schools must be kept free from religious creeds. JOHN N. NEWMAN.

BRAMPTON, Jan. 6, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hope you will excuse me for troubling you with these few remarks respecting your paper. As a rule I am much pleased with it; still, there are exceptions. There has been much correspondence concerning Spiritualism that, I think, cannot be anything but objectionable to the majority of your readers. There are two letters in your issue of January 2d—one by L. S. Burdick, the other by C. F. Blackburn—which surely can be of but little interest to the general reader. The latter one, I think you will admit, is in part in very unsuitable language. I sometimes put my paper in the hands of Methodists, but such as this I cannot use in that way, as it would be sure to cause much prejudice, and make them worse enemies. I believe Blackburn's remarks as regards God and the devil, or any such language, will do the cause of Freethought much harm, and, in my opinion, your valuable space might be more profitably used. As regards your illustrations, I fully agree with your correspondent S. J. Lenont, in your paper of January 2d, and conclude with his finishing remarks. EDWARD DALE.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Jan. 10, 1886.

QUESTIONS FOR CONSERVATIVS: Are you who claim men represent women politically dishonest, or are you ignorant? Do you know it is not, nor can it be, done, and yet talk the reverse for effect, or are you so stupid that you suppose our government is based upon the principle of proxy representation, and if so, will you please inform us how many persons one ballot can represent?

Will you who are so anxious to advertise yourselvs as not believing in Freelove please inform us what kind of love you do believe in? If you hav any love and it is not free of course it is for sale, hence we can but infer that men and women who disbelieve in freedom of the affections must believe that it is a merchantable commodity.

I, for one, am proud to write myself down as believing in the broadest possible freedom in every department of being, and that my liberty can be justly limited only by the equal liberty of some other individual, said individual being the proper person to make complaint of infringement. If I use my liberty unwisely, I must suffer the consequences of a violation of natural law. Freedom and responsibility are commensurate. JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

FORT WAYNE, IND., Jan. 9, 1886.

Mr. EDITOR: Within please find $5, to apply as directed.

Talmage has been to our place this winter. He came, he saw, he captured (that is, the money). After weeks and weeks of advertising through our dailies, the enterprise failed. The gentleman that brought him here has lost money. So much for the great light of the cross. A few nights following there was a pugilistic contest, and the management cleared some $500. How is that?

I would like to do more by getting subscribers for your paper, but times are so hard. I send you one name, and hav the promis of more for the future. J. S. F.

ATLANTA, ILL., Jan. 18, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: We hav been having a grand meeting here. A few of the old patriarchs of Liberalism and defenders of that man who proclaimed the world his country and "to do good his religion," hav been gathered together to listen to that which is not repugnant to their reason nor offensiv to their sense of justice. Prof. W. S. Bell, of Chicago, was our exponent. Mr. Bell has been fortified in his position by an experience of five years in the ministry—an experience that certainly better fits him for an expounder of the truth of Liberalism. His lectures were largely attended, and by very orderly and attentiv audiences. Friday night's theme was "Liberty and Morality;" Saturday, "Common Sense;" Sunday afternoon, "The Author-hero—Thomas Paine," and at night, "The Gods." All of these different subjects were handled argumentativly, courteously, and ably. No offense was given to saint or sinner, and the result is, Liberalism will grow in Atlanta. B. H. GARDNER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Boy Lost.

Hav you seen my boy around this way?
He slipped from my arms one summer day,
But I never dreamed he was going to stay.

The skies were bright, 'twas early June,
And earth was glad with the birds in tune—
They caught the airs of its mystic Rune.

A wonderful child, or so we thought him,
And many clever things we taught him
When to our hearts in joy we caught him.

His sisters, Polly and Geraldine
(Two sweeter fairies never were seen),
Played on the grass the trees between.

And infant strife arising there,
He sought me at my rocking-chair
With a light hand laid upon my hair,

Or upon my neck, if the cloud stayed long,
Craving the boon of a baby song,
And his heart was healed, and naught was wrong.

How well I remember his childish ruse
Of made-up frowns when told the news
That Jamie usurped his waiting shoes!

That he was surprised was plainly true,
And we looked for the tears like morning dew,
But the mist cleared up and he laughed anew.

And gazing down on this tiny prize,
A new light shone in his baby eyes—
Pride of ownership without disguise.

"It isn't our baby, we needn't cry,"
He wisely said when a hearse passed by—
He counted the cost with an older sigh.

Can you giv no trace of this boy of mine?
You'll surely know him by this sign—
His lips were red as the autumn wine,

While his eyes were blue, and his hair was gold,
His hands might serve as the sculptor's mold,
And his breath was sweet as a rose-leaf's fold.

"Grown," do you say? How strange it seems!
Ah, well! the world with sorrow teems,
And time dispels our dearest dreams.

Clearwater, Neb. MARY BAIRD-FINCH.

"Jack."

He wore a pair of tattered pants,
A ragged round-about,
And through the torn crown of his hat
A lock of hair stuck out;
He had no shoes upon his feet,
No shirt upon his back;
His home was on the friendless street,
His name was "Little Jack."

One day a toddling baby boy,
With head of curly hair,
Escaped his loving mother's eye,
Who, busy with her care,
Forgot the little one, who crept
Upon a railroad near,
To play with the bright pebbles there,
Without a thought of fear.

But see! around a curve there comes
A swiftly flying train;
It rattles, roars! the whistle shrieks
With all its might and main;
The mother sees her child, but stands,
Transfixed with sudden fright;
The babe clasps his little hands,
And laughs with low delight.

Look! look! a tattered figure flies
Adown the railroad track!
His hat is gone! his feet are bare!
'Tis ragged "Little Jack!"
He grasps the child, and from the track
The babe is safely tossed—
A slip! a cry! the train rolls by—
Brave "Little Jack" is lost!

They found his mangled body there,
Just where he slipped and fell;
And strong men wept who never cared
For him when he was well.
If there be starry crowns in heaven
For little ones to wear,
The star in "Little Jack's" shall shine
As bright as any there!—Eugene J. Hall.

A Great Hero.

On the 29th of January, 1737, there was born in Thetford, Norwalkshire, England, one of the greatest and noblest men that has ever breathed the breath of life—Thomas Paine. He grew from babyhood to boyhood, went to school, studied the usual common branches, learned to "read, write, and cipher," and left school at thirteen. Then he worked in his father's shop at stay-making for three years, when, becoming tired of the dull routine of his life, he went to London—ran away from home, perhaps. Boy-like, he rambled about the city, seeing the sights and working occasionally, until finally he shipped on board a privateering vessel.

At twenty-two he went into business on his own account, and then married handsome Mary Lambert, but she died within a year, and parting with her was the first great sorrow of his life. Atfer this he became a teacher, as well as a close student of the natural sciences.

Time ran on, until he met with Benjamin Franklin, then embassador from this country to the English government, who advised him to go to America, which he did at a time when the young American colonies were dissenting from the oppressiv yoke of British rule.

Paine took sides with the colonies, and wrote his pamphlet, "Common Sense," which struck the key-note of our American Independence. The young heart of the nation was thrilled by his brave words as it had never been thrilled before.

It was this wonderful man who first wrote the words "The Free and Independent States of America," who first roused the people to a sense of their situation, and to an understanding of what this country might become freed from the thraldom and tyranny of kingly rule.

When the Revolutionary war was fairly begun he wrote leaflets entitled "The Crisis," inspiring and encouraging the soldiers as nothing else had done or could do. The first number commenced: "These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country, but he that stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman."

He was generous in money as well as in mind, and when the troops were suffering for supplies, and General Washington himself was almost discouraged, this brave, wholesouled philanthropist headed a subscription for the soldiers with five hundred dollars, his entire salary for a year as clerk of the general assembly of Pennsylvania.

It is thought by some, and not without reason, that Paine was the Author of the Declaration of Independence, as that document would seem to indicate that the same mind that evolved "Common Sense," "Crisis," and the "Rights of Man," and first suggested independence, also framed and constructed the sentences of its declaration.

When peace was at length secured in America, this noble man, learning that France was in need of patriots in her defense, immediately offered his service in her behalf. Franklin asked why he should leave so soon the land he helped to make free, and said, "Where liberty is is my home." Paine at once replied, "Where Liberty is not, is my home," meaning that where it was not he would assist in securing it. He was elected a member of the National Assembly of France, and because he opposed the death of the king (Louis XVI.) he incurred the displeasure of the other members, and they contrived to hav him arrested and confined in jail at Luxembourg. The Americans in Paris demanded his releasc and styled him "the Apostle of Liberty in America." Robespierre intended that he should die by the guillotin, but, by an unforeseen circumstance, his life was saved, though it was nearly a year before he was liberated from prison.

He wrote the "Age of Reason," a part of it in prison. This work was denounced as Atheistic, but it is not so. More properly, it is Deistical, announcing his belief in a God and a future existence. On account of this book he has been abused, traduced, slandered more cruelly than any other person that has lived. He has not deserved the wanton and wicked assaults upon his name and character, for he was a truly good, true, and noble-hearted man, and one of the best friends America or any country in distress ever had.

He said, "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." He returned to this country in 1802, and, after spending a few days with his friend, Thomas Jefferson, he retired to his farm at New Rochelle, which had been presented to him by government. He died in 1809, calmly, peacefully, as he had lived, the same faith cheering him in death that had helped him in life.

He was twice married, but was the father of no children. That he loved children we may know by his endeavors in securing political peace and justicc for them, and also by his trying to erase a cruel and barbarous religion from the world. He said, "Any system of religion which shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system."

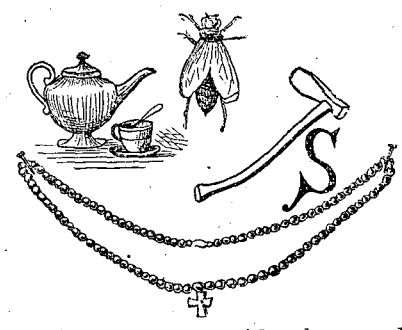
A beautiful memorial buildiug was dedicated to his memory in Boston, Mass., on the 29th of January, 1875. It is called the "Paine Memorial and Home of the Boston Investigator."

People are slowly learning the virtues of this great reformer and friend of humanity, and when his vast work for America is duly recognized, a monument will be raised to his memory higher than that of Washington, more glorious than that proposed for General Grant. But more beautiful and enduring than marble or granit is the deep appreciation of his services and worth in the heart of every truth-loving and patriotic citizen of this country or any other. S. H. W.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PECULIAR SENTENCE.

What is peculiar about this sentence: Evil did I ere I did live? WM. SCOTT.



2.—ARITHMETICAL.

What principal sum, payable in three annual payments at 8 per cent. interest, having each year's payment of principal and interest alike, will produce $332.96 for the interest? ISAAC A. POOL.

3.—GEOGRAPHICAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

There is a volcano spelled with eight letters. The first, second, and third spell something familiar to Irishmen. The third and fourth spell a verb in the imperativ mode. The second, fourth, and seventh are interjections. Where is it, and what is its name?
RALPH E. WEYBRIGHT.

4.—EASY DIAMOND.

Central word the same either downward or across.

5.—CONUNDRUM.

Come guess what sport is meant,
Which these three girls do represent?

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 16, 1886.

1.–T—affy. 2.–Ingersoll. 4.–Endearment. 5.–1. Redstart. 2. Men. 3. Weaver. 4. Robin. 5. Pelican. 6. Owl, Sandpiper. 7. Pewit. 8. Sparrow. 9. Heron. 10. Plover. 11. Macaw. 12. Martin. 6.–Because it is going to abate (a bait).

7.—T I E
I C E
E E L

8.—'Tis plain enough to anyone
Whose mind is not confused,
Both ax and coffee must be ground
Before they can be used.

[We are obliged to decline several good articles on account of their extreme length. Communications for the Children's Corner should be "short and sweet," wise and bright.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

BALLSTON SPA, Jan. 18, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write you for the first time, as I see other little girls write. Well, what I hav to say is that we are all Liberal at our house. Pa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and H. L. Green's Magazine, and ma takes the Ironclad Age. Pa has got D. M. Bennett's library, so we hav lots of Liberal books. Mr. Reynolds was here week before last, and we had a grand time. We think he is a nice man and is doing great good. I am twelve years old and hav a little sister who is nine years old, and we read "The Story Hour." Pa says when times are better he will get us the "Apples of Gold," which I hope will be very soon. I send you a card with my name on and my love, if you will please accept them. I made out to sell five copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with a good deal of trouble and many times going.
Yours truly, SADIE THORPE.

[The world will see some splendid women by and by, when our little girls are grown. Meta, Katie, Sadie, and the others whose letters hav appeared in the Corner show that they are being well brought up. We hav often heard of Sadie's papa—that he is a brave, true man. Her mamma, too, we feel sure is good and true, and we wish to be remembered to them. Thanks for the pretty card and remembrance. Love to little sister, also.—ED. C. C.]

SCANDIA, KAN., Jan. 3, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to you for the first time. We do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, so it is very seldom that I get to see a copy of that good paper. My pa takes the Boston Investigator. I love to read the children's department in it. I like to read the pieces and letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER, too. Mr. J. L. Andrew lectured here two nights. He was thought a very able speaker among the many Liberals here. I would love to hav your picture very much, but do not know how much it costs. We hav many pictures of Liberals. I go to school and study reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography. My teacher's name is G. M. Culver. He is a graduate from the state university of California. Well, I will close for this time.

Hoping you had a merry Christmas, I remain, Yours truly, META L. TAYLOR.

DODGE CITY, KAN., Jan. 11, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I see all the other little girls are writing, and I thought I would write, too. Papa has a timber claim out on Duck Creek—has lots of trees on it. Once papa, mamma, my little sisters, and myself went out there, and coming back the carriage upset and all fell out, but no one was hurt. Papa has been here quite a while, and says we hav had the biggest snow-storm ever was. We could walk on top of the barn yesterday. Some gentlemen, young ladies, boys, and girls went coasting. We did it just the same as pictured in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. The ice is fourteen inches; it was never so thick before. I will be ten years old tomorrow. Two men froze—one family and five children.

Papa says he wants to see me in the Correspondence. Ever your friend,
KATIE COLLAR.

OMAHA, NEB., Jan. 11, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Mamma got me the "Story Hour" for Christmas. She, and papa, and I, and sister think it is very nice. My favorit story is the "Bumble Bee's Thanksgiving."

Papa says he likes THE TRUTH SEEKER best of any paper he takes.

I am in the fifth grade at school, class B. My teacher's name is Miss Briggs; she is very kind. She lives right across the street from us. School begins at nine o'clock in the morning, and half-past one in the afternoon. We do not hav recess in the afternoon and we get out at half-past three.

I hav learned "Mr. Tubb's Christmas," and the "Children's Hour." Nothing more at present, only I remain your friend as ever,
MAGGIE GRIFFITH.

[We are glad you are pleased with the "Story Hour," Maggie, and we are glad, too, that you hav a kind teacher in Miss Briggs. Children learn faster with an agreeable teacher than with one who is disagreeable.—ED. C. C.]

B. F. Robbins writes: "I notice the Children's Corner is as bright as ever. Yours is a great work, inasmuch as you giv shape and tone to the young mind that in the future will 'pan out' immensely, and save many from the bonds of superstition. Not that you should choose for them their religion; for they should be left to do that themselvs, and, in nine cases out of ten, they would repudiate all forms of superstition. Without flattery, your thoughts and methods, as seen in THE TRUTH SEEKER, cannot be bettered. I always read the Corner with profit. My little girl is pleased enough with the 'Story Hour,' and learns verses from it for recital in school." [We are grateful to our friend for appreciation, and will only say that our heart is in the work we are doing, and we hope always to deserve the commendation of our friends and readers.—ED. C. C.]

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.
SECOND EDITION.
Price, 25 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy
A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.
Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav these busts.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Weland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chap[illegible] Astoria.
A. Erw[illegible] Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 4-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

PERSONAL.

A man 42 years of age, a Liberal, not wealthy, but having some means, would like to correspond with some lady who is also a Liberal, not over 35, of good family, fair education, and willing to work. Best of references given and required. Object, marriage. Address C. W. P.,
Care TRUTH SEEKER office,
2t4 33 Clinton Place, New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

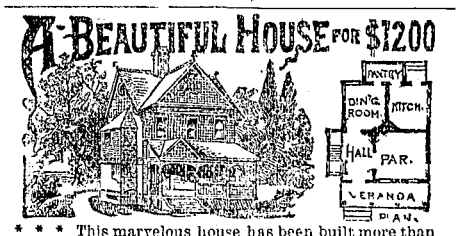
Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-paged colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents by



THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl or shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single Copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF

INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.' "—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christ an Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress: Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WOMAN,
In the Past, Present, and Future.

BY A. BEBEL.

Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.

"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 2 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.

"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.

LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,
Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By Mrs. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents: cloth, 75 cents.

Poetry.

There Is No Rest.

"There is no death," the poet sings,
As lofty dreams inspire his breast;
O spirit of the tuneful strings,
I answer—neither is there rest!

There is no rest! the mills of change
Grind on—the gods are at the wheels!
The same fierce impulse, swift and strange,
We feel, that every planet feels.

There is no rest! not even sleep
Is shorn of its mobility;
The red floods through the body sweep
Forever, like a tided sea.

There is no rest! the granit grinds
To dust, within its marble glooms;
Decay's pale worm incessant winds
Its way through Fame's emblazoned tombs.

There is no rest! e'en Love hath wings
That wearilessly fan the air
In his leal-hearted wanderings,
So fetterless, so free from care.

There is no rest! the long gray caves
Of death are rife with force and heat,
Nor Fancy pauses till she paves
The floors of heaven with flying feet.

There is no rest! no sure repose
For souls above, nor souls below;
Life's tide forever ebbs and flows,
And man must either come or go.

And so, through all the universe,
A rhythmic motion, faint expressed,
Runs onward like an epic verse,
Voluminous—there is no rest!

—J. N. Matthews.

An Unfortunate Fanatic.

"Well, Jen, be you a-goin' to take in the circus to-night?"

"Where's it to be, Jim? I hadn't heard nothin' of it."

Jenny put a smoking dish in front of Jim, and then sat down opposit, while he looked with great satisfaction from the plate upon which he had already deposited a fuming heap of the savory stew, to his wife's pretty, sensitiv face. No man was better contented with his lot than Jim Ayer, painter and plasterer, carpenter and tinker in general. No man with more reason to be, either. There was not a thriftier housewife than Jenny there, in her neat navy blue print dress, and the pink bow at her throat, in all the village, nor a tastier, either.

"By gosh!" Jim would observe, with a shining face that would hav served excellently to adorn the advertisment of some patent stove polish, or other highly reflectiv and luminous agent, "the way that little woman makes them there zeraniums and things bloom in them pots, and the way she just makes the house look as cheery and neat as a —as a bird's nest"—at a loss for a comparison —"do beat all!"

Jim had had his day when the public house of an evening had received him oftener than could hav been accounted for his good. Still his transgressions of that kind had sprung more from a love of jovial good fellowship than from anything more serious, and since his marrying and "stiddying down" no more hard-working, sober, pure-living fellow was there to be found in all the township. Jenny had not only made him comfortable and happy, but her pretty home instincts had refined him as well. She had an untutored refinement herself. You might see it by the expression of her delicate, somewhat dreamy face.

"Well, t'aint a reg'lar circus," explained Jim. "It's the new parson, or whatever he be. Dunno but he's one o' them Salvation fellers. He's goin' to preach, and they do say he's got the gift o' the gab, powerful; so I thought if you was minded, we'd take it in."

Jenny thought she was minded, and then she "tidied up" while Jim smoked his pipe. When she came out with her little new hat on her head she looked so pretty and bright that the happy Jim caught her and gave her a sounding embrace.

The revival meeting was presided over, as it turned out, by neither a "parson" nor a "Salvation Army" disciple. The man was a dark, strenuous figure, in the vigor of maturity, with a decided, albeit wholly untrained, natural eloquence. He had personal magnetism, and that force of religious enthusiasm—or is it frenzy?—which, different in degree, has under other circumstances brought forth Savonarolas, Arbueses, John of Leydens. His exhortations led not in the way of merciful promises. They thundered out anathemas and such visions of avenging black pits as the uncultured human mind has in all times grasped at with a marvelous mingling of fear and morbid, excited avidity.

Reuben Cane had many rapt and perchance trembling listeners that night, but none more powerfully moved than Jenny Ayer.

She was very silent as they walked home. When Jim suggested jovially that they round off the evening's "spree" by his fetching a jug of ale, she, for the first time, entered a species of demur.

"That preacher said, you know," she began, "that we eat and drink too much, to the—to the damnation of our souls, Jim."

"Oh, come, now!" exclaimed Jim. "You ain't a goin' to be takin' everything them preachers says so dead serious? It can't be done, nohow. Preachin' and listenin' be one thing and livin' is another."

"Well, I dunno as we're right," said Jenny; dubiously, and with some rigidity, looking pensivly before her.

Jim was a little annoyed. He didn't care about the ale, but, in a vague and indistinct way, he was made uneasy, and, as he would hav expressed it, he was "rasped" by his wife's tone. It was quite new. He stamped about a little and then broke out, trying to laugh it off:

"If goin' to that feller's preachin's goin' to kinder upset you so, Jen, I guess you'd better stay away next time. He ain't a bad lookin' chap, and if so be you've taken such a shine to his holdin' forth, you'll be takin' a shine to his phiz next thing!"

It was not a delicately expressed joke, but it was not an indelicately meant one, as Jenny well knew. Rather was it a jocose effort to restore the harmony which somehow seemed to hav suffered a jar between them for the first time. But Jenny appeared absent-minded, and failed suitably to respond.

She did not take her husband's advice about going to the revival meeting another time. Rather did she return again and again. To be sure, she was one of many. The men of the village, those who had not yet come under Reuben Cane's strong influence, grumbled that the "women folks had gone clean daft."

Jim did not say much. He had wanted to broach the subject a hundred times, but something always seemed to freeze his tongue. He was palpably growing less and less at ease. He had the thwarted, estranged, defrauded sensation which creeps benumbingly over us all when we look on and see one near and dear to us changing subtly into something unfamiliar. For Jenny was changing in these days. She began neglecting little housewifely duties in order that not one of Reuben Cane's denunciatory utterances might be missed. Once or twice, when Jim came home tired and in want of her gentle customary welcome, good fare, and well-cooked dinner, he had been left begging for all three, owing to unusually prolonged sessions in the hall where Cane gathered together potentially repentant sinners.

One evening that this occurred the brewing storm suddenly broke. Not that Jim was abusiv at first. All provocation considered, he bore himself very patiently. But when he spoke of the exhorter Jenny's face grew cold.

"It ain't for sinners such as you be, Jim, to be judgin' such a holy man."

"Holy man be ——!" cried Jim, now fairly exasperated. "I ain't a-goin' to hav him and his jaw comin' between husband and wife, and upsettin' things."

"He ain't a-comin' between us."

"He be just that! Kin you say that you've bin just—just the same since he come?"

"'If I ain't it's because you ain't willin' to come with me in this new life. It's because you're sot in your sin. If you'll come with me to Brother Cane and find religion, we can be as we was before. But if you won't—"

"Well, what if I won't?" jeered Jim, taking up the phrase in her pause.

"Then we can't be," concluded Jenny.

"And is that the last word you've got to say on this ere subject?" queried Jim, ironically. Alas! poor, foolish Jenny! Could she hav chosen a more inopportune moment to push her proselytizing or done it more clumsily?

"I ain't got nothing more to say," she replied, and with that Jim raged from the house, banging the door after him.

In their four years of married life they had had no quarrel before. It set Jim's blood on fire. He was a headstrong, impetuous fellow, but he loved his wife dearly, and the thought of the influence that "jawin' ass of a parson" had obtained over her drove him nearly wild. His mind was quickly made up as to the course he should pursue. He would go to Brother Cane (he brought the name out even in his thoughts with a satirical intonation) and tell him to quit, right then, cramming any more of his religion down his wife's throat. Untutored as Jim was in the reading of motivs, and all at sea in this new disturbing element in which he found himself launched, his instinct told him correctly that it was this morbid, emotional religionism which had turned Jenny's brain, and not any attraction toward the exhorter as a man.

"Brother Cane," as it chanced, was not at home. He had gone four miles out to see a man "as was took bad," said the old woman who opened the door. He would be back in a couple of hours.

Jim had no mind to relinguish his purpose of seeing the brother that very night. He could wait. But neither did the idea of going home attract him. He remembered his neglected dinner, and the cold hearth, and Jenny's colder face when she had called him a sinner, with a too vivid sense of retrospectiv grievance. The public house stood hospitably open, and he was sure of a warm welcome there anyway. Moreover, he took a perverse pleasure in thinking that Jenny would know he had gone in—would reflect that, indirectly, his lapse was of her doing.

The warm welcome was not wanting, and when Jim came out again the two hours had passed. Other things had passed, too, by the way of his lips, and although it cannot be said that Jim Ayer was drunk, he was distinctly in that condition when to trifle with him became a more or less dangerous thing.

He reached Reuben Cane's door just as a buggy drove up and the latter got out. In the dark he stumbled against Jim, and then looked at him keenly as the light of the opening door illuminated the painter's flushed face and hot eyes. Jim Ayer felt himself at a disadvantage under that look, and no more was needed to break down the last barrier of restraint. He stepped menacingly nearer.

"What do you want?" said Reuben Cane.

"What do I want? What do I want? I want you to stop a-settin' my wife against me, and fillin' her head with notions that ain't got no sense in them! I want you," his voice rising higher and higher, "to let her alone, do you hear?"

"You're drunk, my good fellow," said Brother Cane, coolly; "I'll talk to you at some other time, when you're sober."

He made as though to go into the house. Like lightning Jim's brawny hand was on his coat collar.

"You ain't goin' to get off like this," he hissed, his eyes starting ominously out of his livid face.

Cane was as powerful a man as his antagonist. The spiritual life had not yet tamed every human impulse in him. He wrenched himself away with flaming eyes. Then—who knows how such things happen?—Jim Ayer had raised the heavy stick in his hand, the blow had crashed down on Reuben Cane's temple, and a dark form lay stretched upon the steps of the house.

Jim Ayer stood there as though bereft of sense, hearing, or power of locomotion. The animal instinct to run, to hide, the impulse of the criminal, did not even assert itself. They made a good deal out of this in the defense afterward. It was a strong argument in favor of his having been temporarily crazed, that he should hav stood there motionless, looking down on the man he had murdered, while the old woman, who had been Cane's housekeeper, drew the whole village about her with her frantic shrieks.

It was not adjudged murder in the first degree, after all. The sentence was imprisonment for life, instead.

"That won't be long," said Jim Ayer's counsel, when it was all over. "The man won't liv the year out, or he'll be transplanted to the insane asylum, if he does."

He was a rising young lawyer with a relentless passion, and he had taken a strong liking to the criminal.

"By Jove," he exclaimed, with a sort of fury, "when I think of all the circumstances —of a happy, peaceful house, of a fine, honest fellow ruined, disgraced—damned, by heaven —by the idiotic emotionality of an ignorant woman, I—"

He set his teeth. The sentence would not complete itself.

"These are the things that make me believe in a hereafter," he subjoined brusquely. "There is a time when the complexity of such things is made clear—when the guiltless are found more guilty than those who do the deed—or there is no justice in this whole scheme of life."

You will perceive that this young lawyer was indeed very young, as I hav said.

He was right about Jim Ayer. In less than a year the murderer of "that powerful preacher, Brother Reuben Cane," was removed to the asylum for the insane, and there, after a somewhat longer lapse of time, died.

It is more than doubtful if Jenny Ayer, even in a degree, ever appreciated to its full the unconscious part that had been hers in the fearful tragedy of that wrecked life. She mourned for Jim, but with an appalling sense that he had been stricken down by heaven directly in outraged vengeance for his sins. This feeling seemed to creep in and chill even the springs of retrospectiv tenderness. Gradually she came to think, perhaps, more of the martyred saint, Reuben Cane, than of the once loving and beloved husband, by whose hand the martyrdom had been consummated.

If she had been a great lady she would hav been a bigot and a devotee. As it was, Jenny Ayer went about a gentle, dreamy, abstracted figure, punctual in attendance on all religious services, surrounded at all times with a sort of Sabbatarian stillness. Her atmosphere suggested a faint chill. When she went by, though she sometimes smiled upon them, the children would shrink a trifle away, and nearer to their mother's skirts.—Selected.

Book Notices.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and Other Lectures. By Helen H. Gardener. With an Introduction by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. 12mo, 158 pp. Yew York: Truth Seeker Co.

This book is very neatly printed and bound, and typographically does credit to the art preservativ. But the outside of the platter is not where the attraction lies. That is between the covers, on every page sparkling with brilliancy and cutting deep with keen sarcasm and effectiv wit, with vigorous attack on sacred things and unsparing exposure of the weak points in theological dogmas and scripture inspiration. It is a remarkably brilliant book, by a woman with a mission, which she executes with unrestrained ridicule and onslaught upon the Bible, especially its teachings regarding women.—Day Star.

Miss Susan H. Wixon's "All in a Lifetime" is a splendid book, full of incident and dramatic situations following closely upon each other. The fidelity to New England dialect and characteristics show the writer to hav been a close observer of the habits and manners of those among whom she is living. Her descriptions, therefore, are exceedingly interesting. But the interest it may excite in the reader is the least valuable part of the book, unless we may consider that that interest is the vehicle by which may be conveyed to minds not otherwise receptiv many a wise lesson.

The author's purpose manifestly is to arouse thought upon important subjects without exciting antagonism, and she touches cleverly all the vital reforms of the day with great ingenuity, weaving them into her charming story. The humane purpose of the book can not be too highly applauded. While the most important problems are discusssed in an attractiv way, the reader cannot fail to be fascinated with a splendid romance as well as with the keen insight of the author and the choice literary merit of her work. As a means of broadening the mind of a young person little disposed to earnest thought the book is of great value. I take it this was the author's motiv in the writing, and this is the point which she has achieved with eminent success. It is especially a work which Liberal-minded people should select for holiday reading for their young friends.—Ed. W. Chamberlain, in the Investigator.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS
AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Stenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Perpetual Calendar.
Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson and Unbeliever-Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.;

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

FREETHINKERS' MAGAZINE

for January is out, and the contents are as follows: An Address, by A. B. Bradford.—The Church, by J. J. McCabe.—Spiritualism, by William Henry.—A Plea for Anarchy, by John A. Broadbeck.—Christmas, Original Poem. By J. J. McCabe.—A Modern Queen of Reason, by Uncle Lute.—Extracts from Letters.—This Magazine, by the Editor.—Elizur Wright Dead, editorial.—Consolation, editorial.—Book Review, by the editor.—All Sorts, by the editor.—Freethought Directory.—Advertising pages. This magazine is to be published as a monthly. Price, 25 cents a single number; $2 per year. tt51t5

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address 6t24
W. A. Collins, Scottsville, Jefferson Co., N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Friendship Liberal League No. 257, of Philadelphia, will celebrate the 149th anniversary of the birth of the Author-hero,

THOMAS PAINE,

January 31st, 1886, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets, at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M., to consist of addresses, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. Entertainments free.

Supper at 5:30 P.M. Tickets for supper, 25 cents.

Liberals throughout the state invited.

3t2

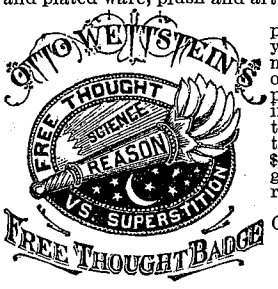
THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

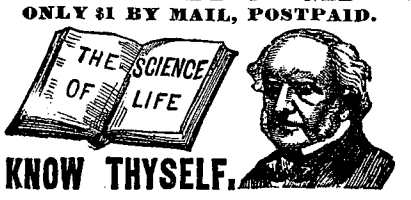


PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

THE CANARY. A New and Remarkable Work on the Care of the Pet Canary. By mail, 50 cents. Contents table mailed free. Lady Agents Wanted. Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th Street, New York.
3t4

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
Price, 25 cents.

Holiday Goods!



All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged, and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50 or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price, only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissel, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bullfinch St., Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

KNOW THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

News of the Week.

THE poorhouse at Jackson, Mich., burnt on the 24th, with fatal results to five inmates.

THE police of London are exercising extraordinary vigilance in expectation of dynamite outrages.

MR. JOACHIM PECCI'S health is said to be improving. Pecci is an Italian gentleman doing business as pope of Rome.

THE Grant monument fund grows slowly. Less than $200 was subscribed last week, making the total about $114,200.

THIRTY-NINE employees in the Orrell coal mine at Newburgh, W. Va., were killed by an explosion of gas on the 21st inst.

JUDGE BREWER, of Kansas, has decided that the state must pay for a brewery made worthless by the passage of a prohibitory law.

THE cold wave reached Virginia the latter part of last week, and there is great suffering among the poor, who are ill provided with winter clothing.

THE Rev. Jacob Freshman last Sunday baptized into the Christian faith two men alleged to hav been Jews. Mr. Freshman is himself a converted Jew.

JAMES FANNING, a compositor in this city, having consumption and knowing he could liv but a few weeks, shot himself last Saturday in a philosophical manner.

THE Hartford Courant reports that the Yale College boys hav voted to hav college prayers at 7:30 instead of 8:10, in order to "facilitate the athletic interests."

THE Rev. John O. Bache of this city, has sued the Rev. D. Brainerd Ray for $50,000. The charge is slander, Mr. Ray having said in three different places that Mr. Bache is a licentious and immoral person.

QUEEN VICTORIA opened Parliament one day last week, and her speech was read. She opposes the granting of home rule to Ireland. It is thought this may lead to violent outbreaks among her disaffected subjects.

JOHN H. POWELL, the newly elected mayor of Newport, R. I., is enforcing the Blue Laws of that city. He has closed all the places of business except the churches, and will not even allow the newsboys to vend their papers.

THE members of St. Luke's Episcopal church in Baltimore are scandalized to hear that their curate, the Rev. Mr. Sylvester, recently left Halifax, N. S., between two days, leaving a large number of unpaid bills at his tailor's and other places.

PROFESSOR DANA lectured again before the young men of Yale College last Saturday on evolution. He claimed that evolution was not necessarily Atheistic, but devoted considerable of his time to explaining the necessity for a God as an assistant to nature.

THE recent big freeze extended over nearly all of the orange-growing portion of Florida, and totally destroyed the crops, as well as young trees. There are fears that the bearing trees are also killed, which would be a death blow to the industry of the state. Much sickness is caused by the cold weather.

GOVERNOR MCENERY, of Louisiana, has just pardoned from the penitentiary the Rev. Ben. Jenkins, who was serving a life term for the murder of the Rev. J. Lane Borden two years ago. Jenkins alleged at the trial that Borden, who was principal of a female seminary, had seduced a young woman to whom he (Jenkins) was engaged to be married.

SOME weeks ago the Rev. Andrew Gray, of Millerton, N. Y., and Miss Rachel Nicolson, of Fox Harbor, N. S., came to this city and took rooms at a hotel. In the morning the young woman was found unconscious from having inhaled gas. She was taken to a hospital and has recovered. The preacher says they came to New York to be married, but now that Miss Nicolson is well again he seems to be in no hurry to hav the ceremony performed.

FREDERICK P. BUDDEN, of Jersey City, N. J., who has just given up his position as keeper in the state reform school for boys at Jamesburg, says that the institution is a college of crime, that the elder boys teach the younger ones all kinds of vices, and that when the boys leave the institution at the expiration of their terms they are weak in mind and body and morally corrupt. "If I had a boy ten years old," he said, "and had the choice of sending him to the Jamesburg reform school or burying him, I would send him to the grave."

JESUS AND THE MONEY-CHANGERS.

Turn the rascals out.

Odds and Ends.

THE man who can write love letters without making an ass of himself has kept the matter very quiet.

WHEN a Chinese laundryman becomes a member of the Sunday-school, he does it that his sins may be washed away.

A PAPER in Oswego mentions that James Clark and wife "were born, died, and were buried on the same day." The life of this remarkable couple must hav been exceedingly brief.

"WHAT is the first thing you would do, Jones, if you were stung by a hornet?" asked Smith, who had been reading an article on the treatment of stings. "Howl," replied Jones, solemnly. And the conversation abruptly ended.

"UPON what peculiar feature are your principal colleges in the United States founded?" asked an English tourist of an American; "I see that President McCosh has resigned from Princeton." "It is copied closely from the English system of government." "How so?" "Why, when your government finds itself beaten in a Parliamentary division, it gracefully resigns, don't it?" "Yes." "Well, when one of our college base or foot ball teams is vanquished, the whole faculty resign, throw up the sponge, and step a good way down and a long way out. See?"

LONG and wearily had his anxious wife waited, when at last the husband entered, and, with his frame convulsed with anguish, threw himself into a chair, and, burying his face in his hands, groaned, "We are ruined; to-morrow's sun will see the proud name of Jenkins among the list of bankrupts!" Then out spoke the noble wife: "Say not so, my dear Peter; all is not lost. We hav gone without ice for the last three months, and here is the money you gave me for the iceman," and she placed fifty thousand dollars on the table. The worn, weary face of the husband lighted up with joy as he exclaimed, "Maria, you are a daisy; if we had gone without gas for the same time, I would hav retired from business."

THE DAYS OF FORGETTING.

"Traveling along in the rural districts of 'old Kaintuck,' said the preacher, "I stopped over night at the house of a good widow. She, being informed that I was a preacher, invited or called on me for family prayer. Selecting an easy lesson in the scripture, and reading it in my clearest accent, I offered a short prayer. There is always a solemn interval between a 'family' prayer and the resumption of conversation. During this interesting interval my good sister thought she ought to say something bordering on religion, therefore began as follows:

"'Brother Jay, don't you think them fellers in the time of our savior was mighty fergitful?'

"'Don't know that I call to mind anything so very forgetful on the part of our forefathers,' said I.

"'Well,' said she, 'just you turn to the first chapter of Matthew; don't it say as plain as can be that Abraham forgot Isaac, and Isaac forgot Jacob, and Jacob forgot Judas and his brethren, and so on through a great long list?'

"'You are right, sister, there does seem to be a wholesale forgetting along there,' and I did not stop to correct her idea of the genealogy.

THE CHURCH CHOIR.

(Some distance after Tennyson.)

Half a bar, half a bar,
Half a bar onward!
Into an awful ditch
Choir and preceptor pitch;
Into a mess of pitch
They led the Old Hundred.

Trebles to right of them,
Trebles to left of them,
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh, that preceptor's look
When the sopranos took
Their own time and hook
From the Old Hundred!

Screeched all the trebles here,
Boggled the tenors there,
Raising the parson's hair,
While his mind wandered.
Theirs not to reason why
This psalm was pitched too high;
Theirs but to gasp and cry
Out the Old Hundred.

Trebles to right of them,
Tenors to left of them,
Basses in front of them,
Bellowed and thundered.
Stormed they with shout and yell;
Not wise they sang, nor well,
Drowning the sexton's bell,
While all the church wondered.

Dire the precentor's glare,
Flashed his pitchfork in air,
Sounding fresh keys to bear
Out the Old Hundred.
Swiftly he turned his back,
Reached he his hat from rack,
Then from the screaming pack
Himself he sauntered.

Tenors to right of him,
Trebles to left of him,
Discords behind him,
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh, the wild howls they wrought!
Right to the end they fought;
Some tune they sang, but not,
Not the Old Hundred.

—Lapeer Ledger.

Gems of Thought.

UNTIL the religion of humanity shall pervade the world, persecution will never cease.—D. M. Bennett.

THE greatest sacrifices ever made are offered in the name of religion. For this a man will forego ease, peace, friend, society, wife, and child, all that mortal flesh holds dearest; no danger is too dangerous, no suffering too stern, to bear, if religion say the word. Simeon the Stylite will stand years long on his pillar's top; the devotee of Buddha will tear off his palpitating flesh, to serve his god. The pagan idolater, bowing down to a false image of stone, renounces his possessions, submits to barbarous and cruel rites, shameful mutilations of his limbs; givs the first-born of his body for the sin of his soul; casts his own person to destruction, because he dreams Baal or Saturn, Jehovah or Moloch, demands the sacrifice. The Christian idolater, doing equal homage to a lying thought, givs up common sense, reason, conscience, love of his brother, at the same fancied mandate; is ready to credit most obvious absurdities; accept contradictions; do what conflicts with the moral sense; believe dogmas that make life dark, eternity dreadful, man a worm, and God a tyrant.—Theodore Parker.

O JESUS! if thou wilt nót save my soul,
Who may be saved? Who is it that may be saved?
Who may be made a saint if I fail here?
Show me the man hath suffered more than I.
For did not all thy martyrs die one death?
For either they were stoned, or crucified,
Or burnt in fire, or boiled in oil, or sawn
In twain beneath the ribs; but I die here
To-day, and whole years long, a life of death.
Bear witness, if I could hav found a way
(And heedfully I sifted all my thoughts)
More slowly-painful to subdue this home
Of sin, my flesh, which I despise and hate,
I had not stinted practice, O my God!

—Tennyson's Stylites.

WE are born to be, if we please, rational creatures, but it is use and exercise only that make us so, and we are indeed so no further than industry and application hav carried us.—Locke.

I SAY, deliberately, of everyone who does realize the misery there is in this world and remains indifferent to it; who enjoys his own share of the good things of this life, without helping his brother; who does not stretch out his hand to lift the fallen or raise his voice on behalf of the downtrodden and oppressed, that that man is living a life which is the very antithesis [opposit] of a divine life—a life which has in it no beauty and no nobility, but is selfish, despicable, and mean.—Mrs. A. Besant.

If such there breathe, go, mark him well!
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim,
The wretch concentered all in self
Living shall forfeit fair renown
And doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

—Sir Walter Scott.

THE prevailing theology represents God as a being whom a good man must hate; religion is something alien to our nature, which can only rise as reason falls. A despair of man pervades our theology. Pious men mourn at the famin in our churches; we do not believe in the inspiration of goodness now, only in the tradition of goodness long ago. For all theological purposes, God might hav been buried after the ascension of Jesus. We dare not approach the infinit one face to face; we whine and whimper in our brother's name, as if we could only appear before the omnipotent by attorney.—Parker.

CAN it be that the cause of truth requires so many falsehoods and contradictions to sustain it?—D. M. Bennett.

JOHN SELDEN (1584-1654) was an illustrious English scholar, lawyer, and antiquarian contemporary of Milton's. The only one of his works that is now valued or read, except by specialists, is his "Table Talk," of which Coleridge says: "There is more weighty bullion sense in this book than I can find in the same number of pages of any uninspired writer." This is rather an exaggeration. Like Coleridge's own "Table Talk," Selden's has many hits, palpable hits, but also many misses. Luther's "Table Talk" is the only other work under the same title; it is still worth reading, though he spends too much time with the devil!—Hylax.

CHRISTIANITY did not bring high moral precepts into the world, nor will they disappear from the world along with it. We shall retain all that was really achieved by Christianity, as we hav retained what was accomplished by Greece and Rome, without the form of religion in which that kernel reposed as in its husks. Thus only shall we succed in discarding at the same time the narrowness and the partiality which adhered throughout to the doctrines of Christianity.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

YOU attribute personality and consciousness to God, but what, then, do you call personality and consciousness? That, no doubt, which you hav found in yourselves, become cognizant of in yourselvs, and distinguished by that name. But if you will only giv the slightest attention to the nature of your conception, you will see that you do not and cannot conceive of this without limitation and finality. By attributing that predicate to this being you in consequence make of it a finite one, a creature like yourselvs; you hav not, as was your wish, conceived God, but merely the multiplied [enlarged or amplified?] representation of yourselvs.—Fichte.

SHAKSPERE and Bacon were not independent phenomena, brought together by an accidental coincidence. They were rooted in the same soil, and the impulse, though it led to different manifestations, was ultimately derived from the same sources.—Leslie Stephen.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York. N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 6. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, February 6, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PANDORA'S BOX.

It is fabled that a box containing innumerable evils was presented to Pandora by Jupiter, from which, when opened, countless ills and diseases issued forth to afflict mankind, Hope alone remaining for the consolation of the race.

Notes and Clippings.

THE divorce cases in Lane county, Oregon, for 1885, outnumber the list of marriages twelve to one, according to the San Francisco Bulletin.

THE Rev. Dr. Hunt has been dropped out of the pulpit of the First Baptist church of Hoboken, N. J. The flesh was willing and the spirit was weak, and the Rev. Mr. Hunt got involved in a scandal.

"DID you ever see anything like this?" said a young lady to her escort, at a church fair where raffling was in progress. "Only once." "When was that?" "Well, I was on a Western train one time when it was robbed."

THE Burlington Free Press relates that a philanthropist asked the daughter of a rich manufacturer, who employs hundreds of men, if she ever did anything for her father's hands. "No," was the reply, "but I rub mine with glycerin and oatmeal every night."

"RUFUS, wuz yer to de chu'ch dis mornin'?" "Dar's jis whar I wuz, Clem." "I hope yo' drawed in much profit f'om de sarbice, Rufus." "What yo' mean, sah? Jes' yo' take notice, Mr. Clem, dat w'en we plays keards in de quiah durin' sarbice we jes' plays fo' 'musement, an' nuffin' mo'."

ANOTHER victim has been sacrificed upon the altar of the Christian idol—the Bible. Mrs. Maiden, the wife of a young farmer near Decatur, Ill., about the middle of last month began reading the Bible, under the delusion that it was true. In one week the book had done its perfect work, and Mrs. Maiden was insane. Her first act of violence was to attempt the destruction of her two children by dashing them upon the floor. Her husband subdued her after a violent struggle, and she was taken to Decatur for treatment. The portion of the Bible which crazed Mrs. Maiden was Jeremiah.

"AND now, my dears," said the Sunday-school teacher, "I hav explained to you all the different forms of religion; tell me which of them you like the best?" There was a long pause and then Master Johnny said: "Well, I'd rather be a Baptist in summer and a Mormon in winter." "I'm afraid we should hav to call you an Optimist, then," replied the teacher. And so Master Johnny went home and said: "Pa, what's an Optimist?" "An Optimist? Well—er—hum; an Optimist is a sort of—er—well, perhaps you had better look in the dictionary for a concise answer." And so they hunted up the dictionary and at last found: Optimist, a believer in Optimism. And Master Johnny thanked his papa and said he was so glad to know!

THE Gananoque, Ont., Reporter says: "The Rev. J. W. Jeffrey gets off some queer ideas in the course of his speeches. Last Monday evening, at Kingston, he told his audience that some years ago he arrived in Kingston, and was at that time 'seriously debating in his mind whether to remain a Christian or go back to Infidelity.' If he had said he had debated as to whether he could make more money while living a Christian life, or by following practices which he knew to be wicked, his state of mind could be understood; especially as he added that the receipt of favors from his Christian friends decided him to remain 'steadfast to the faith.' It is nonsense to say that a man can choose deliberately whether he shall believe in Christianity or be an Infidel. If the evidences of Christianity convince his mind of its truth he will believe and cannot help himself; and if he is not convinced he cannot believe, let him 'deliberate' as much as he will. But when it comes to profession and practice, many men can, and do, make it a matter of policy."

THE Syracuse Standard relates that recently Roscoe Conkling and Colonel Ingersoll took a walk during the court's recess. They intended to bring up at Louis Windholz's for lunch, but missed the place, and strolling on in East Washington street they entered another restaurant, which is one of the cheapest of the cheap. It is so cheap, in fact, that Superintendent of the Poor White sends impecunious individuals to it for meals at the expense of the county. Just after Mr. Conkling and Colonel Ingersoll had sat down and called for oysters, Superintendent White walked in with the most woebegone and altogether wretched tramp that ever set foot in the city. The tramp took a seat at the next table to that used by the distinguished lawyers, and ate a plate of beans, supplemented by a bowl of soup. He gleaned from their conversation who his neighbors were, and as they rose he turned and said: "Gentlemen, won't you join me in something?" "I'll join my friend in giving you a quarter," said Ingersoll. "Thanks, gentlemen, thanks. Ah! When shall we three meet again? Senator Conkling and myself may possibly meet in heaven. But as for you, Mr. Ingersoll, ah! who can tell?" The tramp had forgotten the words of Christ: "Inasmuch as ye hav done it unto the least of one of these, my brethren, ye hav done it unto me. Come, ye blessed of my father; inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." But then a good many ministers commit the same oversight.

THE Boston Evening Record is informed that the faith cure is showing some remarkable developments in Chicago. One woman has been cured of a tumor by having a verse of scripture read to her once a day. They are now experimenting on a broken leg with more heroic doses—half a chapter twice a day—and are confident of final success.

PERSONS calling themselvs "Daniel's Band" hav been engaged in revival work at Windfall, Ind., for a few weeks past. The result is given in the Indianapolis Sentinel by a correspondent from Windfall: "Harmon Haxton, a man about forty years of age, having a family, began to take part in the meetings about a week ago, and fell in a trance, as they said. He never entirely recovered his mind. He was taken to his home, where he remained a few days, growing worse, became insane, and is now confined in the Tipton county jail for safety. A lady by the name of Hankins, living near Tipton, attended a meeting last night, went into a trance, became wild and unmanageable, taking three or four to hold her, and she left town in a wagon in that condition. A Mrs. Mary A. Brown, a widow lady of this place, who has long been a member of the Methodist church, went into a trance at her home while the meeting was in progress yesterday. She remained several hours in that condition. It is reported that she is not in her right mind, and has to be watched."

Selection.

The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature.

A REPLY TO MR. GLADSTONE'S "DAWN OF CREATION AND OF WORSHIP."

From the Nineteenth Century.

Our fabulist warns "those who in quarrels interpose" of the fate which is probably in store for them; and, in venturing to place myself between so powerful a controversialist as Mr. Gladstone and the eminent divine whom he assaults with such vigor in the last number of this Review, I am fully aware that I run great danger of verifying Gay's prediction. Moreover, it is quite possible that my zeal in offering aid to a combatant so extremely well able to take care of himself as M. Réville may be thought to savor of indiscretion.

Two considerations, however, hav led me to face the double risk. The one is that though, in my judgment, M. Réville is wholly in the right in that part of the controversy to which I propose to restrict my observations, nevertheless, he, as a foreigner, has very little chance of making the truth prevail with Englishmen against the authority and the dialectic skill of the greatest master of persuasiv rhetoric among English-speaking men of our time. As the queen's proctor intervenes, in certain cases, between two litigants in the interests of justice, so it may be permitted me to interpose as a sort of uncommissioned science proctor. My second excuse for my meddlesomeness is that important questions of natural science—respecting which neither of the combatants professes to speak as an expert—are involved in the controversy; and I think it is desirable that the public should know what it is that natural science really has to say on these topics, to the best belief of one who has been a diligent student of natural science for the last forty years.

The original Prolégomènes de l'histoire des Religions has not come in my way; but I hav read the translation of M. Réville's work, published in England under the auspices of Prof. Max Müller, with very great interest. It puts more fairly and clearly than any book previously known to me the view which a man of strong religious feelings, but at the same time possessing the information and the reasoning power which enable him to estimate the strength of scientific methods of inquiry, and the weight of scientific truth, may be expected to take of the relation between science and religion.

In the chapter on "The Primitiv Revelation," the scientific worth of the account of creation given in the book of Genesis is estimated in terms which are as unquestionably respectful as, in my judgment, they are just; and, at the end of the chapter on "Primitiv Tradition," M. Réville appraises the value of pentateuchal anthropology in a way which I should hav thought sure of enlisting the assent of all competent judges, even if it were extended to the whole of the cosmogony and biology of Genesis:

> As, however, the original traditions of nations sprang up in an epoch less remote than our own from the primitiv life, it is indispensable to consult them, to compare them, and to associate them with other sources of information which are available. From this point of view, the traditions recorded in Genesis possess, in addition to their own peculiar charm, a value of the highest order; but we cannot ultimately see in them more than a venerable fragment, well deserving attention, of the great genesis of mankind.

Mr. Gladstone is of a different mind. He dissents from M. Réville's views respecting the proper estimation of the pentateuchal traditions no less than he does from his interpretation of those Homeric myths which hav been the object of his own special study. In the latter case, Mr. Gladstone tells M. Réville that he is wrong on his own authority, to which, in such a matter, all will pay due respect; in the former, he affirms himself to be "wholly destitute of that kind of knowledge which carries authority," and his rebuke is administered in the name and by the authority of natural science.

An air of magisterial gravity hangs about the following passage:

> But the question is not here of a lofty poem, or a skilfully constructed narrativ; it is whether natural science, in the patient exercise of its high calling to examin facts, finds that the works of God cry out against what we hav fondly believed to be his word, and tell another tale; or whether, in this nineteenth century of Christian progress, it substantially echoes back the majestic sound, which, before it existed as a pursuit, went forth into all lands.
>
> First, looking largely at the latter portion of the narrativ, which describes the creation of living organisms, and waiving details, on some of which (as in verse 24) the Septuagint seems to vary from the Hebrew, there is a grand fourfold division, set forth in an orderly succession of times as follows: on the fifth day.
>
> 1. The water-population,
> 2. The air-population,
>
> and, on the sixth day,
>
> 3. The land-population of animals,
> 4. The land population consummated in man.
>
> Now, this same fourfold order is understood to hav been so affirmed in our time by natural science that it may be taken as a demonstrated conclusion and established fact (p. 696).

"Understood?" By whom? I cannot bring myself to imagin that Mr. Gladstone has made so solemn and authoritativ a statement on a matter of this importance without due inquiry—without being able to found himself upon recognized scientific authority. But I wish he had thought fit to name the source from whence he has derived his information, as in that case I could hav dealt with his authority, and I should hav thereby escaped the appearance of making an attack on Mr. Gladstone himself, which is in every way distasteful to me.

For I can meet the statement in the last paragraph of the above citation with nothing but a direct negativ. If I know anything at all about the results attained by the natural science of our time, it is "a demonstrated conclusion and established fact" that the "fourfold order" given by Mr. Gladstone is not that in which the evidence at our disposal tends to show that the water, air, and land populations of the globe hav made their appearance.

Perhaps I may be told that Mr. Gladstone does giv his authority—that he cites Cuvier, Sir John Herschel, and Dr. Whewell in support of his case. If that has been Mr. Gladstone's intention in mentioning these eminent names, I may remark that, on this particular question, the only relevant authority is that of Cuvier. But, great as Cuvier was, it is to be remembered that, as Mr. Gladstone incidentally remarks, he cannot now be called a recent authority. In fact, he has been dead more than half a century, and the paleontology of our day is related to that of his very much as the geography of the sixteenth century is related to that of the fourteenth. Since 1832, when Cuvier died, not only a new world, but new worlds, of ancient life hav been discovered; and those who hav most faithfully carried on the work of the chief founder of paleontology hav done most to invalidate the essentially negativ grounds of his speculativ adherence to tradition.

If Mr. Gladstone's latest information on these matters is derived from the famous discourse prefixed to the Ossemens Fossiles, I can understand the position he has taken up; if he has ever opened a respectable modern manual of paleontology or geology, I cannot. For the facts which demolish his whole argument are of the commonest notoriety. But before proceeding to consider the evidence for this assertion we must be clear about the meaning of the phraseology employed.

I apprehend that when Mr. Gladstone uses the term "water-population" he means those animals which in Genesis i, 21 (Revised Version) are spoken of as "the great sea monsters and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind." And I presume that it will be agreed that whales and porpoises, sea fishes, and the innumerable hosts of marine invertebrated animals, are meant thereby. So "air-population" must be the equivalent of "fowl" in verse 20, and "every winged fowl after its kind," verse 21. I suppose I may take it for granted that by "fowl" we hav here to understand birds—at any rate, primarily. Secondarily, it may be that bats, and the extinct pterodactyls, which were flying reptils, come under the same head. But whether all insects are "creeping things" of the land-population, or whether flying insects are to be included under the denomination of "winged fowl," is a point for the decision of Hebrew exegetes. Lastly, I suppose I may assume that "land-population" signifies "the cattle" and "the beast of the earth," and "every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth," in verses 25 and 26; presumably it comprehends all kinds of terrestrial animals, vertebrate and invertebrate, except such as may be comprised under the head of the "air-population."

Now, what I want to make clear is this, that if the terms, "water-population," "air-population," and "land-population," are understood in the senses here defined, natural science has nothing to say in favor of the proposition that they succeeded one another in the order given by Mr. Gladstone; but that, on the contrary, all the evidence we possess goes to prove that they did not. Whence it will follow that, if Mr. Gladstone has interpreted Genesis rightly (on which point I am most anxious to be understood to offer no opinion), that interpretation is wholly irreconcilable with the conclusions at present accepted by the interpreters of nature—with everything that can be called "a demonstrated conclusion and established fact" of natural science. And be it observed that I am not here dealing with a question of speculation, but with a question of fact.

Either the geological record is sufficiently complete to afford us a means of determining the order in which animals hav made their appearance on the globe or it is not. If it is, the determination of that order is little more than a mere matter of observation; if it is not, then natural science neither affirms nor refutes the "fourfold order," but is simply silent.

The series of the fossiliferous deposits, which contain the remains of the animals which hav lived on the earth in past ages of its history, and which can alone afford the evidence required by natural science of the order of appearance of their different species, may be grouped in the manner shown in the left-hand column of the following table, the oldest being at the bottom:

FORMATIONS.	FIRST KNOWN APPEARANCE OF Quaternary.
Pliocene.
Miocene.
Eocene.	Vertebrate air-population (bats).
Cretaceous.
Jurassic.	Vertebrate air-population (birds and pterodactyls).
Triassic.
Upper Paleozoic.
Middle Paleozoic.	Vertebrate land-population (amphibia, reptilia[?]).
Lower Paleozoic.
Silurian.	Vertebrate water-population (fishes).
	Invertebrate air and land population (flying insects and scorpions).
Cambrian.	Invertebrate water-population (much earlier, if eozoon is animal).

In the right hand column I hav noted the group of strata in which, according to our present information, the land, air, and water populations appear for the first time; and, in consequence of the ambiguity about the meaning of "fowl," I hav separately indicated the first appearance of bats, birds, flying reptils, and flying insects. It will be observed that, if "fowl" means only "bird," or at most flying vertebrate, then the first certain evidence of the latter, in the Jurassic epoch, is posterior to the first appearance of truly terrestrial amphibia, and possiby of true reptils, in the Carboniferous epoch (Middle Paleozoic) by a prodigious interval of time.

The water-population of vertebrated animals first appears in the Upper Silurian. Therefore, if we found ourselvs on vertebrated animals, and take "fowl" to mean birds only, or at most flying vertebrates, natural science says that the order of succession was water, land, and air-population, and not—as Mr. Gladstone, founding himself on Genesis, says—water, air, land-population. If a chronicler of Greece affirmed that the age of Alexander preceded that of Pericles, and immediately succeeded that of the Trojan war, Mr. Gladstone would hardly say that this order is "understood to hav been so affirmed by historical science that it may be taken as a demonstrated conclusion and established fact." Yet natural science "affirms" his "four-fold order" to exactly the same extent—neither more nor less.

Suppose, however, that "fowl" is to be taken to include flying insects. In that case the first appearance of an air-population must be shifted back for long ages, recent discovery having shown that they occur in rocks of Silurian age. Hence there might still hav been hope for the fourfold order were it not that the fates unkindly determined that scorpions—"creeping things that creep on the earth" par excellence—turned up in Silurian strata nearly at the same time. So that if the word in the original Hebrew translated "fowl" should really after all mean "cockroach"—and I hav great faith in the elasticity of that tongue in the hands of biblical exegetes—the order primarily suggested by the existing evidence:

2. Land and air-population,
1. Water-population,

and Mr. Gladstone's order:

3. Land-population,
2. Air-population,
1. Water-population, can by no means be made to coincide. As a matter of fact, then, the statement so confidently put forward turns out to be devoid of foundation and in direct contradiction of the evidence at present at our disposal.*

If, stepping beyond that which may be learned from the facts of the successiv appearance of the forms of animal life upon the surface of the globe, in so far as they are yet made known to us by natural science, we apply our reasoning faculties to the task of finding out what those observed facts mean, the present conclusions of the interpreters of nature appear to be no less directly in conflict with those of the latest interpreters of Genesis.

Mr. Gladstone appears to admit that there is some truth in the doctrin of evolution, and indeed places it under very high patronage:

> I contend that evolution in its highest form has not been a thing heretofore unknown to history, to philosophy, or to theology. I contend that it was before the mind of St. Paul when he taught that in the fulness of time God sent forth his son, and of Eusebius, when he wrote the "Preparation for the Gospel," and of Augustine when he composed the "City of God" (p. 706).

Has any one ever disputed the contention thus solemnly enunciated that the doctrin of evolution was not invented the day before yesterday? Has any one ever dreamed of claiming it as a modern innovation?

* It may be objected that I hav not put the case fairly, inasmuch as the solitary insect's wing which was discovered twelve months ago in Silurian rocks, and which is at present the sole evidence of insects older than the Devonian epoch, came from strata of Middle Silurian age, and is therefore older than the scorpions which within the last two years hav been found in Upper Silurian strata in Sweden, Britain, and the United States. But no one who comprehends the nature of the evidence afforded by fossil remains would venture to say that the non-discovery of scorpions in the Middle Silurian strata up to this time affords any more grounnd for supposing that they did not exist than the non-discovery of flying insects in the Upper Silurian strata up to this time throws any doubt on the certainty that they existed, which is derived from the occurrence of the wing in the Middle Silurian. In fact, I hav stretched a point in admitting that these fossils afford a colorable pretext for the assumption that the land and air-population were of contemporaneous origin.

Is there any one so ignorant of the history of philosophy as to be unaware that it is one of the forms in which speculation embodied itself long before the time either of the Bishop of Hippo or the Apostle to the Gentiles? Is Mr. Gladstone, of all people in the world, disposed to ignore the founders of Greek philosophy, to say nothing of Indian sages to whom evolution was a familiar notion ages before Paul of Tarsus was born? But it is ungrateful to cavil at even the most oblique admission of the possible value of one of those affirmations of natural science which really may be said to be "a demonstrated conclusion and established fact." I note it with pleasure, if only for the purpose of introducing the observation that if there is any truth whatever in the doctrin of evolution as applied to animals, Mr. Gladstone's gloss on Genesis in the following passage is hardly happy:

> God created—
> (a) The water-population;
> (b) The air-population.
> And they receive his benediction (verses 20–23).
> Pursuing this regular progression from the lower to the higher, from the simple to the complex, the text now givs us the work of the sixth "day," which supplies the land population, air and water having been already supplied (pp. 695, 696).

The gloss to which I refer is the assumption that the "air-population" forms a term in the order of progression from lower to higher, from simple to complex—the place of which lies between the water-population below and the land-poplation above—and I speak of it as a "gloss" because the pentateuchal writer is nowise responsible for it.

But it is not true that the air-population, as a whole, is "lower" or less "complex" than the land-population. On the contrary, every beginner in the study of animal morphology is aware that the organization of a bat, of a bird, or of a pterodactyl, presupposes that of a terrestrial quadruped, and that it is intelligible only as an extreme modification of the organization of a terrestrial mammal or reptil. In the same way, winged insects (if they are to be counted among the "air-population") presuppose insects which were wingless, and therefore, as "creeping things," were part of the land-population. Thus theory is as much opposed as observation to the admission that natural science indorses the succession of animal life which Mr. Gladstone finds in Genesis. On the contrary, a good many representativs of natural science would be prepared to say, on theoretical grounds alone, that it is incredible that the "air-population" should hav appeared before the "land-population," and that if this assertion is to be found in Genesis, it merely demonstrates the scientific worthlessness of the story of which it forms a part.

Indeed, we may go further. It is not even admissible to say that the water-population, a sa whole, appeared before the air and the land-populations. According to the authorized version, Genesis especially mentions among the the animals created on the fifth day "great whales," in place of which the revised version reads "great sea monsters." Far be it from me to giv an opinion which rendering is right, or whether either is right. All I desire to remark is, that if whales and porpoises, dugongs and manatees, are to be regarded as members of the water-population (and if they are not, what animals can claim the designation?), then that much of the water-population has as certainly originated later than the land-population as bats and birds hav. For I am not aware that any competent judge would hesitate to admit that the organization of these animals shows the most obvious signs of their descent from terrestrial quadrupeds.

A similar criticism applies to Mr. Gladstone's assumption that, as the fourth act of that "orderly succession of times," enunciated in Genesis, "the land-population consummated in man."

If this means simply that man is the final term in the evolutional series of which he forms a part, I do not suppose that any objection will be raised to that statement on the part of students of natural science. But if the pentateuchal author goes farther than this, and intends to say that which is ascribed to him by Mr. Gladstone, I think natural science will hav to enter a caveat. It is not by any means certain that man—I mean the species Homo sapiens of zoological terminology—has "consummated" the land-population in the sense of appearing at a later period of time than any other. Let me make my meaning clear by an example. From a morphological point of view, our beautiful and useful contemporary—I might call him colleague—the horse (Equus caballus), is the last term of the evolutional series to which he belongs, just as Homo sapiens is the last term of the series of which he is a member. If I want to know whether the species Equus caballus made its appearance on the surface of the globe before or after Homo sapiens, deduction from known law does not help me. There is no reason that I know of why one should hav appeared sooner or later than the other. If I turn to observation, I find abundant remains of Equus caballus in Quaternary strata, perhaps a little earlier. The existence of Homo sapiens in the Quaternary epoch is also certain. Evidence has been adduced in favor of man's existence in the Pliocene, or even in the Miocene epoch. It does not satisfy me; but I hav no reason to doubt that the fact may be so, nevertheless. Indeed, I think it is quite possible that further research will show that Homo sapiens existed, not only before Equus caballus, but before many other of the existing forms of animal life; so that, if all the species of animals hav been separately created, man, in this case, would by no means be the "consummation" of the land-population.

I am raising no objection to the position of the fourth term in Mr. Gladstone's "order"—on the facts, as they stand, it is quite open to anyone to hold, as a pious opinion, that the fabrication of man was the acme and final achievement of the process of peopling the globe. But it must not be said that natural science counts this opinion among her "demonstrated conclusions and established facts," for there would be just as much, or as little, reason for ranging the contrary opinion among them.

It may seem superfluous to add to the evidence that Mr. Gladstone has been utterly misled in supposing that his interpretation of Genesis receives any support from natural science. But it is as well to do one's work thoroughly while one is about it; and I think it may be advisable to point out that the facts, as they are at present known, not only refute Mr. Gladstone's interpretation of Genesis in detail, but are opposed to the central idea on which it appears to be based.

There must be some position from which the reconcilers of science and Genesis will not retreat, some central idea the maintenance of which is vital and its refutation fatal. Even if they now allow that the words "the evening and the morning" hav not the least reference to a natural day, but mean a period of any number of millions of years that may be necessary; even if they are driven to admit that the word "creation," which so many millions of pious Jews and Christians hav held, and still hold, to mean a sudden act of the deity, signifies a process of gradual evolution of one species from another, extending through immeasurable time; even if they are willing to grant that the asserted coincidence of the order of nature with the "fourfold order" ascribed to Genesis is an obvious error instead of an established truth—they are surely prepared to make a last stand upon the conception which underlies the whole, and which constitutes the essence of Mr. Gladstone's "fourfold division, set forth in an orderly succession of times." It is, that the animal species which compose the water-population, the air-population, and the land-population, respectivly, originated during three distinct and successiv periods of time, and only during those periods of time.

This statement appears to me to be the interpretation of Genesis which Mr. Gladstone supports, reduced to its simplest expression. "Period of time" is substituted for "day;" "originated" is substituted for "created;" and any order required for that adopted by Mr. Gladstone. It is necessary to make this proviso, for if "day" may mean a few million years, and "creation" may mean evolution, then it is obvious that the order (1) water-population, (2) air-population, (3) land-population, may also mean (1) water-population, (2) land-population, (3) air population; and it would be unkind to bind down the reconcilers to this detail when one has parted with so many others to oblige them.

But even this sublimated essence of the pentateuchal doctrin (if it be such) remains as discordant with natural science as ever.

It is not true that the species composing any one of the three populations originated during any one of three successiv periods of time, and not at any other of these.

Undoubtedly, it is in the highest degree probable that animal life appeared first under aquatic conditions; that terrestrial forms appeared later, and flying animals only after land animals; but it is, at the same time, testified by all the evidence we possess that the great majority, if not the whole, of the primordial species of each division hav long since died out and hav been replaced by a vast succession of new forms. Hundreds of thousands of animal species, as distinct as those which now compose our water, land, and air populations, hav come into existence and died out again, throughout the eons of geological time which separate us from the lower Paleozoic epoch, when, as I hav pointed out, our present evidence of the existence of such distinct populations commences. If the species of animals hav all been separately created, then it follows that hundreds of thousands of acts of creativ energy hav occurred at intervals throughout the whole time recorded by the fossiliferous rocks; and, during the greater part of that time, the "creation" of the members of the water, land, and air populations must hav gone on contemporaneously.

If we represent the water, land, and air populations by a, b, and c respectivly, and take vertical succession on the page to indicate order in time, then the following schemes will roughly shadow forth the contrast I hav been endeavoring to explain:

Genesis (as interpreted by Mr. Gladstone).	Nature (as interpreted by natural science).
b b b	$c^1\ a^3\ b^2$
c c c	$c\ \ a^2\ b^1$
a a a	$b\ \ a^1\ b$
	$a\ \ a\ \ a$

So far as I can see, there is only one resource left for those modern representativs of Sisyphus, the reconcilers of Genesis with science; and it has the advantage of being founded on a perfectly legitimate appeal to our ignorance. It has been seen that, on any interpretation of the terms "water-population" and "land-population," it must be admitted that invertebrate representativs of these populations existed during the lower Paleozoic epoch. No evolutionist can hesitate to admit that other land animals (and possibly vertebrates among them) may hav existed during that time, of the history of which we know so little; and, further, that scorpions are animals of such high organization that it is highly probable their existence indicates that of a long antecedent land-population of a similar character.

Then, since the land-population is said not to hav been created until the sixth day, it necessarily follows that the evidence of the order in which animals appeared must be sought in the record of those older Paleozoic times in which only traces of the water-population hav as yet been discovered.

Therefore, if anyone chooses to say that the creativ work took place in the Cambrian or Laurentian epoch in exactly that manner which Mr. Gladstone does, and natural science does not, affirm, natural science is not in a position to disprove the accuracy of the statement. Only one cannot hav one's cake and eat it too, and such safety from the contradiction of science means the forfeiture of her support.

Whether the account of the work of the first, second, and third days in Genesis would be confirmed by the demonstration of the truth of the nebular hypothesis; whether it is corroborated by what is known of the nature and probable relativ antiquity of the heavenly bodies; whether, if the Hebrew word translated "firmament" in the Authorized Version really means "expanse," the assertion that the waters are partly under this "expanse" and partly above it would be any more confirmed by the ascertained facts of physical geography and meteorology than it was before; whether the creation of the whole vegetable world, and especially of "grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit," before any kind of animal is "affirmed" by the apparently plain teaching of botanical paleontology, that grasses and fruit-trees originated long subsequently to animals—all these are questions which, if I mistake not, would be answered decisivly in the negativ by those who are specially conversant with the sciences involved. And it must be recollected that the issue raised by Mr. Gladstone is not whether, by some effort of ingenuity, the pentateuchal story can be shown to be not disprovable by scientific knowledge, but whether it is supported thereby.

> There is nothing, then, in the criticisms of Dr. Réville, but what rather tends to confirm than to impair the old-fashioned belief that there is a revelation in the book of Genesis (p. 694).

The form into which Mr. Gladstone has thought fit to throw this opinion leaves me in doubt as to its substance. I do not understand how a hostil criticism can, under any circumstances, tend to confirm that which it attacks. If, however, Mr. Gladstone merely means to express his personal impression, "as one wholly destitute of that kind of knowledge which carries authority," that he has destroyed the value of these criticisms, I hav neither the wish nor the right to disturb his faith. On the other hand, I may be permitted to state my own conviction that, so far as natural science is involved, M. Réville's observations retain the exact value they possessed before Mr. Gladstone attacked them.

Trusting that I hav now said enough to secure the author of a wise and moderate disquisition upon a topic which seems fated to stir unwisdom and fanaticism to their depths, a fuller measure of justice than has hitherto been accorded to him, I retire from my self-appointed championship, with the hope that I shall not hereafter be called upon by M. Réville to apologize for damage done to his strong case by imperfect or impulsiv advocacy. But perhaps I may be permitted to add a word or two, on my own account, in reference to the great question of the relations between science and religion, since it is one about which I hav thought a good deal ever since I hav been able to think at all, and about which I hav ventured to express my views publicly more than once in the course of the last thirty years.

The antagonism between science and religion, about which we hear so much, appears to me to be purely factitious, fabricated on the one hand by short-sighted religious people, who confound a certain branch of science, theology, with religion; and on the other by equally short-sighted scientific people who forget that science takes for its province only that which is susceptible of clear intellectual comprehension, and that outside the boundaries of that province they must be content with imagination, with hope, and with ignorance.

It seems to me that the moral and intellectual life of the civilized nations of Europe is the product of that interaction, sometimes in the way of antagonism, sometimes in that of profitable interchange of the Semitic and Aryan races, which commenced with the dawn of history, when Greek and Phœnician came in contact, and has been continued by Carthaginian and Roman, by Jew and gentile, down to the present day. Our art (except, perhaps, music) and our science are the contributions of the Aryan; but the essence of our religion is derived from the Semite. In the eighth century B.C., in the heart of a world of idolatrous polytheists, the Hebrew prophets put forth a conception of religion which appears to me to be as wonderful an inspiration of genius as the art of Pheidias or the science of Aristotle.

"And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

If any so-called religion takes away from this great saying of Micah, I think it wantonly mutilates, while if it adds thereto, I think it obscures, the perfect ideal of religion.

But what extent of knowledge, what acuteness of scientific criticism, can touch this, if anyone possessed of knowledge or acuteness could be absurd enough to make the attempt? Will the progress of research prove that justice is worthless and mercy hateful? Will it ever soften the bitter contrast between our actions and our aspirations, or show us the bounds of the universe, and bid us say, "Go to, now we comprehend the infinit?"

A faculty of wrath lay in those ancient Israelites, and surely the prophet's staff would hav made swift acquaintance with the head of the scholar who had asked Micah whether, peradventure, the Lord further required of him an implicit belief in the accuracy of the cosmogony of Genesis!

What we are usually pleased to call religion nowadays is, for the most part, Hellenized Judaism; and not unfrequently the Hellenic element carries with it a mighty remnant of old-world paganism and a great infusion of the worst and weakest products of Greek scientific speculation; while fragments of Persian and Babylonian, or rather Accadian, mythology burden the Judaic contribution to the common stock.

The antagonism of science is not to religion, but to the heathen survivals and the bad philosophy under which religion herself is often well-nigh crushed. And, for my part, I trust that this antagonism will never cease, but that to the end of time true science will continue to fulfil one of her most beneficent functions, that of relieving men from the burden of false science which is imposed upon them in the name of religion.

This is the work that M. Réville and men such as he are doing for us; this is the work which his opponents are endeavoring, consciously or unconsciously, to hinder. T. H. HUXLEY.

Mr. Reynolds's Benefit.

Between one hundred and fifty and two hundred people were in the hall of German Masonic Temple last Sunday evening at eight o'clock. They had come to see Mr. Reynolds's illuminated paintings and to giv the lecturer a benefit. It was a good-natured audience, ready and anxious to be pleased, and appreciativ to a high degree. When the gas was turned off and the hall darkened preparatory to showing the pictures, the audience cheered, so that the applause began before the exhibition did. The lecture was on London and Paris, but included some of Scotland and Ireland. Rather more than one hundred views were given with fine effect, and the spectators expressed their delight both by clapping their hands and by complimentary remarks. The author of these lines was behind the screen where the stereopticon was, and inserted the views into the machine. His only bad break was showing the Grand Opera House in Paris for the church of the Madeleine, and the church of the Madeleine for the Grand Opera House. Mr. Eckhart, who has been all over the world, including Paris, drew the writer's attention to his error, and various other persons remarked the inaccuracy. The audience discussed the matter briefly, and the lecturer said that all, having paid their money, would be permitted to take their choice, which settled the question pleasantly, and things thereafter proceeded smoothly. It is unnecessary to say anything about the pictures: they were something superb.

The lecture lasted an hour, and everybody was sorry when it was ended. The benefit to Mr. Reynolds amounted to above $45.00. It would not be doing violence to the truth to say that this made him happy and that his gratitude to the New York friends is very sincere. On Monday he went to Vineland, N. J., and from thence he goes wherever there may be a call. Success should go with him, and it will if it likes to travel in good company.

The Liberal Club and Paine Celebration.

THOMAS PAINE.

"With his name left out, the history of Liberty cannot be written."

The Signal Office prediction held out a hope of fair weather on the evening of Friday, the 29th, but instead of that it rained. Nevertheless, all the people that German Masonic Temple was capable of holding came together that night to celebrate the one hundred and forty-ninth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine; and a gratifying fact is that half or more of them were ladies. There was an admission fee of twenty-five cents, and the president of the club had expressed the fear that this might abate the ardor of some and cause a small attendance. Such was not the case. It had no effect whatever. Many even regarded the fee as too small, and Mr. Eckhart paid a dollar and would take no change.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, secretary of the Secular Union, was master of cermonies. His likeness will be found at about this place. The picture is not as handsome as the original, but the autograph under it is done a good deal better than Mr. Putnam usually writes it. There is a sadness, too, about the artist's likeness which is foreign to the genial secretary, though it does not badly represent the look of anxiety he wore on Friday night until enough people had arrived to insure a successful meeting and to meet the twenty dollars' preliminary expenses which Mr. Putnam had generously paid from his own purse.

The first event was what the secretary introduced as a breeze of music in the form of a duet which the deft fingers of Mrs. McCune and Miss Annie Lenont drew from the piano. George Krahmer recited an original poem, after which Mr. Putnam announced a speech from Mr. Wakeman, whom he introduced with appropriate words. The president of the club was greeted with a burst of applause which could be surpassed only by the bursts that followed when his stirring references to Paine aroused to activity the enthusiasm of all present. Mr. Wakeman always makes a good speech, and his audiences are always sure that he will. It is his ability to surprise them with something a great deal better than they are looking for that givs him his crowning excellence. This was one of the occasions when he more than fulfilled the anticipations of even those who were confident of his making a great speech. Mr. Wakeman's picture is given above and his address is given below. He said:

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES, AND GENTLEMEN: Yes, it is too true: Republics are ungrateful. This is their misfortune—inevitable under the law of evolution. The greatest benefactors of our race are its prophets and reformers. Such they could never be except as iconoclasts, breaking the ancient idols of ignorance, prejudice, and vested rights. No wonder that the stones they cast at the old idols are often returned upon themselvs! But fortunately by the same law the duty, or rather let us say the privilege, falls upon time and posterity to repair the ingratitude; not only to do justice to our saviors maligned or slain, but to accomplish the far weightier task of taking up and continuing their purposes of beneficence till they are finally realized.

From this platform such justice year by year we hav sought to render, on his birthday, to the memory of the hero-author of the great political and social revolutions of the last century, Thomas Paine. Here we hav in days past repeated the eventful story of his life, stranger and more interesting than fiction. Here year by year we hav brushed away the falsehoods of slander, or the trivial defects which obscured his glorious career, until his form has begun to stand forth again in the true perspectiv of time as the real author of American liberty and independence, without whose pen Washington would hav drawn the sword in vain. This act of justice is due from every American to the man to whom perhaps more than to any other one man our great republic owes its existence.

This is simple justice, but it is not all that even gratitude requires. Under the law of evolution the more important duty remains of comprehending his designs and of continuing his career, until they are realized. Are we not standing faithless and idle while the great purpose, the mighty mission, of Paine and his compeers remains unfulfilled? Shall the blood, the terror, the sacrifices of the age of the great revolutions be lost by the apathy of those unwilling to appreciate or unable to realize its mighty plan?

The best answer to this question, the best lesson for this hour, is to recall in heart and mind the sublime political and social dreams which Thomas Paine cherished as the hope of mankind, and to which he devoted his life. His dreams we may well call them—not that he entertained them alone or originated them all, but because he represented and embodied them most consistently, devotedly, and thoroughly in America and Europe, and but for the selfishness, stupidity, and hatred of the English aristocracy he would hav realized them in his day and generation. He was in inspiration and in deed the knight-errant of liberty, the stormy petrel of revolution, who roused the peoples of America, England, and France as never before. The last quarter of the last century was his seed-field, and from his sowings the first crop has but partially ripened in America. From 1770 to 1800 was the age of activ revolution, but it was yet more. It was the age of great dreams, ideals, hopes, purposes, and plans. The great philosophers and statesmen of that day saw full well that a new era—The Age of Reason and of the People—had begun, and that time had called upon them to act not selfishly for the present only, but as the architects of the true Temple of Humanity, the political and social future of the civilized world. They were men of wonderful foresight, energy, and ability, but they could do no more than to sketch the outline and lay the foundations of the mighty structure, and leave the plans for future generations to continue. We are neglectful of the highest duties as citizens of America and the world if we neglect to carefully trace and study the growing plan laid out by the fathers of our new era—neglectful, if we fail to see where death or the brute force of tyrants tore their hands from their work—recreant, if we fail to gather the recourses of our greater opportunities toward the completion of their mighty design.

Be not misled by those who may say that social evolution is a growth, and that it will accomplish all needful beneficent results, without regard to individual effort or conscious coöperation, over political or social designs, past, present, or future. The soul and mainspring of human growth and evolution is the human will. Only by human prevision and coöperativ effort can evolution hereafter be a providence working for highest welfare, the good of all. It is wicked and childish in this age of the world, in which humanity has reached its majority, to trust only to blind, brute evolution, the law of natural selection, or the law of the natural survival of the fittest, which means only the fightiest. The human will, the moral power, the power of agreement, is the grandest factor in evolution, and under that moral, beneficent, guiding intelligence, it can only peacefully and beneficently work out the destiny mankind.

So thought and taught those who were the great American inspirers and monitors of the people in our Revolution—Thomas Paine, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson. What, then, were their dreams, ideals, and plans? Were they such as did or could die with them, or were they fundamental, ever-enduring; the common foundation of human peace, progress, and welfare?

Thomas Paine was the representativ man. He of all men dreamed the prophetic dreams of his age most clearly and fully. What were they? For his first dream, open to the first paragraph of his "Common Sense." It is the Dream of Liberty—that society, as the word implies (from Latin, socius, a companion) should be and must be made a companionship, instead of a tyranny, a compulsion, a government, over man. The consent of the governed is the prerequisit of government. How beautifully he elaborates this fundamental postulate of the new era! Not even hav our Anarchists and Nihilists seen more clearly than he that cooperation, voluntary and free, should take the place of government by compulsion; that taxation should rest upon the needs and consent of the people, and that a true republican democracy must in the end be the only stable, economical, and needful form of administration of public affairs, leaving the individual as free as possible in the enjoyment of all of his rights, privileges, and duties. Government by authority of the great, or of the past, or by the grace of God, must end. Government of, for, and by the people must take its place.

Here was born the tricolor motto: Liberty, Fraternity, Equality, which circles the world, and which by the degree of its realization measures the progress of the people. Under this ideal dream he foretold and labored for the destruction of every form of tyranny, force, compulsion, and slavery over the bodies, souls, lives, and minds of his fellow-men. He struck, therefore, at once and with all his might and wonderful skill, at the great citadel of human tyranny, the Monarchy and Aristocracy of Great Britain. They were, as he saw clearly, the great enemy. Could they be overthrown, this ideal Dream of Liberty might be eventually realized. They held then, as now, the center of the great inertia of the past against which the surging waves of the new era of thought and human aspiration hav beat for a hundred years but not wholly in vain.

But how was this dream of Liberty to be initiated and upheld? By founding, out of the thirteen scattered, half-rebellious colonies of America a, glorious republic, which should hav a federativ and a national character.

This was the Second and the grand Political Dream of Thomas Paine. Read the conclusion of "Common Sense" and the first and fifteenth numbers of the "Crisis," and (remembering the date) see how grandly and constructivly the Spirit of Liberty was to be embodied in the wonderful political fact first by him described as "The United States of America, free and independent." Never, not even as the builder of iron bridges, was he more clear, practical, and constructiv than in his political efforts to realize this republican dream as the body of liberty.

In 1775 the American people were prostrate before the British throne, humbly praying for more favorable terms of conciliation. In a few short months 100,000 copies of "Common Sense" had raised them to their feet as free and independent citizens of a hoped-for republic of independent, free, United States, which by their own brave hearts and arms, and such aid as they could get from France, they determined to make a reality. He first clearly projected the independence and the federation of the United States, and called them into being as a nation. If he did not write, he dictated the very phrases of the immortal Declaration. He inspired the people to demand it and to stand by it. It is unintelligible until "Common Sense" is read before it, and so is the Constitution of the United States until the "Crisis," and especially the fifteenth number, is read between it and the great Declaration. He who does not read these epoch-making documents together will never understand either, nor the spirit of the American Revolution, and without understanding that, he will miss the true line of the political and social evolution of the world. For Paine and his Republican compeers founded the "Free and Independent States of America" as the cornerstone of the greater confederation of the world. Notice as you read his works how perfectly cosmopolitan they are. He speaks always as a citizen of the world, beseeching Americans to make their land a home for liberty, which had been cruelly banished by tyrants from the old world. But from this her home he always promised that she should return again to Europe to expel the tyrants and disenthrall mankind.

This western home he taught, by "a happy invention" taking the advantage of the happy accident of the independence and severance of the colonies; should be made by joining them into a federal republic. Thus could be secured for general and national purposes of protection and administration the strength and utility of the mightiest empire, and not limit at all, or but little, the freedom of the separate states, the town meeting, the fireside, or the individual. Each individual could thus hav his power and sovereignty combined for his general and special welfare in the most practical forms. Thus the federal republic, composed of republican democracies, could be at once a nation and yet the home of liberty, utility, strength. He had hoped that our federal government would hav been simpler than it is—with one house of Congress who should choose the Executiv. But the great organizing chiefs, Washington, Hamilton, and Madison, thought a stronger government was necessary, and so they gave us a Senate, an independent president, and a college of electors. These are all impediments to the will of the people. In time, will not the simpler republic of Thomas Paine and Thomas Jefferson prevail as stronger and better? But such as it was he gave to it his heart's adoration. He was overjoyed and could scarcely believe it when he saw his dream realized. Not only was America "independent and free," but if so much had come true, why not the rest of his dream—the federal republic of the civilized world? Instead of "Rule Britannia," he wrote his new song in this strain:

"Hail! great Republic of the world,
Which reared her empire in the West!
. . . . . .
May ages as they rise proclaim
The glories of thy natal day,
And states from thy exalted name
Learn to rule and to obey.
Be thou forever great and free,
The land of love and liberty."

Now we must turn to the still greater chapter in his career, his Third Great Dream, the Federal Republic of the civilized nations, and the consequent emancipation of the peoples, and the disarmament and peace of the world. Open the fifth chapter of his "Rights of Man," and you will see his plan disclosed thus: Could the alliance then existing between America and France be extended to republicanized England and Holland, his plan would be as good as accomplished. These nations could disarm except a navy of police. The other nations would from their interest soon be obliged to join this confederation, and the peace, progress, and liberty of the world would be advanced five hundred years in a lifetime!

Was this dream wild and chimerical? Not more so than the dream of American liberty and independence when he wrote "Common Sense." The times were ripe for mighty changes. America was ready. France was in alliance with her, and ablaze with revolution. Holland must follow her example. The plain people of England were in sullen revolt. Such facts were his call to a higher stage of action. His Dream of Political Liberty and Federation must be realized for the World as it had been in America.

Therefore, he left others to frame the Constitution in America, and returned to his nativ England, ostensibly to place an iron bridge over the Weir, but really to construct a federation of republics which should be the grand security for the liberties, rights, and peace of mankind forever.

His reply to Edmund Burke—the first and second parts of his "Rights of Man"—was to do for England what his "Common Sense" and "The Crisis" had done for us. Burke aroused the aristocracy and "quality" of England against the French Revolution: Paine aroused the common people in favor of liberty. I hav come to bring you liberty and your rights, he said. Listen to me! His pamphlets had a phenomenal success and a circulation quite similar to his earlier works in the colonies. But the people were not ready. They had no arms nor chance to meet or organize, or to act politically. Church and king sat combined like an incubus upon the popular will. Prosecutions against the publishers and readers of Paine's works followed many and fast, but still the good work went on for awhile hopefully. Meanwhile Paine was called to France, by the voice of the nation, to aid in establishing the Revolution and consequent constitution which was a material part of his great plan. The important part which he played in those grand events in France came to be nearly lost to history. But by the diligence of Hon. E. B. Washburn, our minister to France in 1880, the main facts and documents hav been recovered, and were printed in Scribner's Monthly of that year. They are greatly to Paine's credit, and show conclusivly that the Revolution and consequently his great plan of international confederation failed because his advice was not taken. The cause of European liberty was lost, he wrote to Danton, because of the foolish execution of the king, and the insane rage of Marat and the Jacobins. Danton and he who had, as members of the same committee in the National Assembly, framed the glorious constitution of the year 1792, were soon in prison. The European Dream of Paine closed with Danton under the guillotin; and Paine, escaping the same death by the special providence of having his prison door open when the chalk-mark of the condemned was placed upon it, was left by the negligence of Washington to nearly a year's imprisonment, and a prison fever from which he barely escaped with his life.

He was finally returned to his place as member of the National Assembly, but the tide which, wisely taken at its flood, might easily hav floated into existence the Republic of the United States of Europe, had receded not to rise again for a century.

We all know how the new era was strangled by reaction. We hav had since a hundred years of what, in Darwinian phrase, may be called a period of arrested political development. In France the Corsican bandit, Napoleon, sacrificed the Revolution to his selfishness. Then came the Bourbons, then the Orleanists. In England the very effort to put down the Corsican caused military efforts that equally suppressed the dream of liberty. In America the Federalists came to the front in politics and in society, and they were soon succeeded by the slaveholders' aristocracy in the name of Democracy.

But Liberty has had her sleep of a hundred years, startled only by the shock of 1848. It has been the reign of the brute forces which overwhelmed Paine and the revolutions of the last quarter of the last century. But the signs portend that the last quarter of the present century will be also a period of rapid evolution or otherwise of revolution. Look at France. There at last a republic is on its feet, looking toward greater liberty. In our republic, designed by Paine as the prelude to the Republic of Man, mark, that slavery, which Paine, as the forerunner of the Abolitionists, was the first to oppose, declaring as he did that man never could hold property in man—slavery, with its aristocracy that rendered all of his dreams impossible in America, has disappeared, though at a frightful and needless cost of blood, toil, and treasure. Not only hav the Federalists gone, but their "Republican" imitators cannot longer withstand a revival of democracy and reforms which are rendering the government more popular and administrativ. But chiefly the Federal plan of union of independent states has been vindicated and extended. This policy was first proposed by Paine in his "Public Good" (1780). He proposed to make the territories of the states general domain, encouraging its settlement and admission into the union as separate states. This was done, and thus North America has grown to be a mighty empire of republics large enough to be in fact and influence the model and the corner-stone of the federated world.

But has England made no progress? Her queen is but a figurehead or symbol. The House of Lords exists by tolerance of the Commons elected by a suffrage gradually becoming universal. Her colonies hav grown so large that they are separated dominions, and tend to subvert or to transform the empire itself into a federation. At this crisis Ireland demands home rule, which seems to be impossible except upon the federal plan. She must manage her affairs as the states of our union do theirs. But how is this possible without some general alliance with England and Europe for protection, administration, and commerce? And to crown it all, Charles Bradlaugh, the republican, of all English statesmen the inheritor of the policy of Thomas Paine, has finally taken his seat in the British Parliament. His first act has been what? To introduce a bill to break up the parks of the aristocracy, and to open all unoccupied and unused lands to use by the people. Thus the time is coming when a man in England shall be of more worth than a deer!

[Touching Paine's politico-economical views, the speaker here showed that Paine had foreshadowed much that is at present taught by the foremost social reformers, including Mr. Henry George. For lack of space this portion of the address is regretfully omitted. Mr. Wakeman then proceeded:]

And again, he drifts toward the emancipation and elevation of women. But time will not permit the substance of his works in one address. They hav been neglected long enough. Let them be opened anew, that his plans may be as seed for the future.

But to do that, notice that he, of all men, has preëminently the rarest of gifts—practical common sense—which arises from the fact that he sprung from, ever represented, and spoke for the common or "plain people," as Abraham Lincoln called them. The younger Pitt was called the Great Commoner of England, but in a higher and truer sense Thomas Paine was the Great Commoner of the world. The common people of America, England, and France (where his great works were translated) understood him at once, and they love him to-day. No name mentioned at their meetings is surer than his to be greeted with applause. They know that he told them the truth and what was really for their and for their children's good. All of his great plans are expressed in homely style, and ciphered out so as to be plain and practical to the average mind, and of his sincerity there could be no doubt, but that, as he said, he never wrote but he dipped his pen into his heart.

Thus his career is representativ. It was the nucleus where centered the great ideas and impulses of his age, and whence by continuous evolution they are living and working on to realize his dream of the new order, the new political and social life of man. For he dreamed the dream of the regenerated world, which was his country.

This brings us to the last of the dreams we can touch, his Dream of Emancipated Religion. When you look at it from the elevation of our time, it seems as though nothing but multitudinous nonsense had ever been written or said about Thomas Paine's religion or want of religion. He saw and felt that all of his great dreams could not be realized until the common people could be relieved of the superstitions of Bible theology and the exactions and fear of the priesthood.

He took that theology upon its own pretenses and teachings, and exposed it by such masterly common sense that his battering-ram would swing freely through most of the churches to-day. For they cannot but admit that in substance the learning and research which he had not hav since proved that his main claims as to the Bible and church theology are true. For who now claims that the Bible was infallibly inspired? Who now says that the law of evolution shall not be applied to it? But the real religion of Thomas Paine was not in his so-called anti-theological works, as most seem to suppose. There is just where it was not. His real religion was that of Science, Goodness, and Humanity. He wrote about and against theology chiefly to get his real Religion of Humanity before a people freed from the old superstitions. It is noteworthy that this very name, "the Religion of Humanity," occurs in his seventh "Crisis" in the highest sense. We generally suppose that this phrase came to us from the great Positiv philosopher of France, Auguste Comte, who died in 1857. But Paine directly charges that the Indian savage way in which Britain was carrying on the war was a violation of the "religion of Humanity," as if that were the highest obligation conceivable. Will some one tell me where the phrase had been previously used in the English languagc? But Paine did not simply use the phrase once. His career was a singular illustration of its substance and spirit. In his letter to the Abbé Sieyes (1791), as in many other places, his motiv of life and action is declared to be his "attachment to humanity," and the "anxiety which I feel within myself for the dignity and honor of the human race."

Such was the mainspring of his conduct among the three great nations he sought to bless. His letters to Dundas, Onslow, and Danton are full of this spirit, and of indignation at the folly and brutality which violated it. Never did a more disinterested man liv. He gave his salary to our soldiers, made nothing from his works, and only in his old age, when fever and toil had made him an invalid to be cared for and pitied, as he was not, did he seek a place to lay his head or grow chary of his means of livelihood. Strange that the professed followers of the fabled reformer in Judea, eighteen hundred years ago, should revile Paine and not see that he, and not they, can most safely appeal to the example of him who lived and died for the world; who went about doing good, who suffered persecution and revilings from those he labored to bless and save, and finally died in ignominy from their neglect and ingratitude. But the time has come, not only for justice and appreciation, but for completion of his career of beneficence. The world needs a revival of the spirit of '76, the spirit of federal republicanism. Our reformers need to be enlightened as if by the camp-fires by which Paine wrote the "Crisis" at Valley Forge. They need not learning, not ability, but the enthusiasm of the Religion of Humanity by which he was inspired. By that our republic was reared, and by that it must be purified, saved, and perfected.

By that, too, the still greater dream of the peace and welfare of the world must be secured in the Federal Republic of Man. That is the true Temple of Humanity, and the true Positiv Polity of the Future must be in completing its organization. That is the ideal to which every emancipated soul looks forward with all the ardor with which the worshipers of old gazed toward the East. Even now we can see that the pillars of that grandest structure of Man are being prepared and are slowly rising in every part of the civilized world. Soon the connecting federal arch, grand as the sky, will be thrown over all, spanning all as one sublime and peaceful home of Man!

Sure as Law, and Hope, and Effort, this great Temple shall rise some day by the River of Time! Then, when all nations, and races, and tongues shall surge through its gates and listen to its anthems of joy and peace, each generation will ask, to whom do we chiefly owe this mighty temple, and our liberty, peace, and prosperity, so different from the times of old? Then the true historian will raise his finger slowly up the line of glorious benefactors engraven on its walls, till, among the very highest of all, he points to a name flashing ever brighter in the light of the love and gratitude of mankind—the name of THOMAS PAINE!

The speaker's allusion to Paine as the man who had made it possible for Bradlaugh to sit in the House of Parliament, and who dreamed of Home Rule for Ireland, called out demonstrations of applause hearty and long-continued. This was very grateful to the orator, but what pleased him particularly, he said, was a present of three splendid king apples from the Paine Farm, which were sent by the admirers of Paine at New Rochelle, and presented by the veteran mariner Captain Loyd.

A song by Mrs. McCune, who is indeed a fine singer, formed an appropriate interlude between oratory and elocution, as a teacher of which Mr. Putnam introduced Madam Delescluze. "We are having all the world here to-night," he said; "let me present to you France." The madam met with a warm welcome, to which both her talents and her acquirements entitle her, and recited the poem, "How the King Lost His crown." She was recalled by unanimous acclaim, and responded with "The Rat and the Mouse."

Mr. Fitch, a gentleman from Massachusetts, performed a flute solo so acceptably that the audience would be satisfied with nothing but a repetition; Miss Viva Longford gave "The Curfew," and Mrs. McCune rendered another song. Then Professor Field recited "How the Parson's Horse Won the Bet," and followed it, when recalled, with a humorous reading about "Sunday Newspapers," being a discussion of that subject between a compositor and a preacher, in which the comp. had much the better of the argument.

Dr. Lambert here arose to move a vote of thanks to Mr. Wakeman, the orator of the evening. Not only was it the best speech Mr. Wakeman had ever made, but it was the best the doctor ever heard, and he had listened to both Webster and Calhoun. The motion was carried with a tremendous "Aye!"

The entertainment concluded with a sketch from Dundreary by the Krahmer brothers and the Misses Longford. Somebody remarked that dreary very well described the way it was done; but then, criticism of anything of this sort is always unkind, and punning is reprehensible anyway.

It was eleven o'clock when the audience got ready to go home. Everything had passed off according to the program, barring the non-appearance of Joseph and Gustave Frankel, and everybody was more than satisfied. The entertainment netted $29.75, which goes into the treasury of the American Secular Union. Thus the honoring of Paine is made a means toward the end to which he devoted his life.

An Unwarrantable Inference.

Some people are very ignorant in religious matters. Because the pews in Professor Swing's church hav been sold Texas Siftings thinks Mr. Swing must be very hard up.

Communications.

An Examination of Church History.

BEING LETTERS TO A CATHOLIC.—III.

FRIEND D. C.: Possibly, if you were to read these early fathers, you would see that the further we remove from the scene of operations, and when these stupendous miracles depend, not on living persons, but on relics and sacraments, that your writers become more and more dogmatic in their claims for the existence of Jesus, and less clear, if possible, in their reasonings.

St. Hilary of Poictiers devoted himself to proving the existence of the Trinity, and wrote twelve books on the subject. He claims that this mystery "is sufficiently taught in the office of baptism," which seems to me to be an open question, for how can ducking a man under water satisfy him as to this mathematical impossibility? I will admit that he might be induced to confess it if he understood in advance that he was to be kept under the water till he had accepted it. Hilary quoted the saying in Genesis, "Let us make man in our image," in proof of there being more than one person speaking. But it is possible for a man to prove too much, as this quotation is one of the thorns in the side of your church. In trying to prove the godhead of Jesus, he cites the testimony of the demons, and in answer to the objections of the Arians who quoted in proof of Christ's inferiority, his saying, "My father is greater than I," he givs the following piece of reasoning, which certainly should immortalize him: "This is rightly said, because he is the father of the son, who, however, cannot be declared according to his appearance the slave of the father. But the father is greater than the son, because he givs to him what he himself is: the son is thus not less than the father, because he possesses all that the father is."

Properly speaking, Constantine the Great should be inserted hereabouts, because he was a strong supporter of your theory. This gentleman, to whom Christianity is more deeply indebted than to anyone else, not even excepting its founder, has a very unenviable reputation. Seven murders, and among them his own wife and son, are laid at his door. Blessed with celestial visions, he stamped Christianity with the official seal of the empire and made it the fashionable religion. The Council of Nicea was convened in 325 (the year he murdered his son) by his express command, in order to prove the existence of Jesus and settle the difference between "Homoousion" and "Homoiousion," which, though it apparently consists only of an i, still "is almost invisible to the nicest theological eye." Being emperor, it might naturally be expected that he would cause the records of the empire to be searched, and the testimony of Josephus, Tacitus, and other writers, had they been in existence at that time, and all other documentary evidences, to be produced; but in his address he rested his claims entirely on the "Sibyl" and a passage in the "Bucolics" of Virgil. The first, as already stated, has been proven spurious, and the second, if quoted to-day, would not convince the greenest bucolic. Notwithstanding his perfect faith in the existence of Jesus; that his saintly mother, Helena, had discovered the true cross, he was not baptized till he lay on his death-bed. Even as to this we hav only the testimony of Eusebius, and if your chronicles be correct, that is false; for an inscription in the church of St. John Lateran, at Rome, proclaims that he was baptized by Pope Sylvester, and your infallible popes Adrian I., Nicholas I., Leo IX., and others, indorsed this statement from the Vatican. As this legend brought in its train the fictitious "Donation," your church has been obliged to disavow it, and therefore it is an open question whether he was ever baptized. The Greek church canonized him, and celebrates May 21st in his honor; but your branch was more fortunate in its action, for, after duly considering his fictitious donation, by a judicious compromise it exchanged holiness for greatness.

Jerome, though born of Christian parents, was not baptized till he reached manhood, and was ordained a priest without the power to perform the priestly offices. Before his time there had been no authorized version of the scriptures, each translator adding or deducting as suited his own peculiar form of belief. There were three editions of the Septuagint, each differing from the other on many essential points and held as authentic respectivly in Palestine, Alexandria, and Constantinople. Rome does not appear in the list. Jerome undertook the task of reconciling these various versions, and you are now reaping the benefit of his labors. Although he wrote many works encouraging young women to embrace a life of celibacy, he traveled all over the East with a pretty and wealthy widow named Paula, and became so enamored of her that he styled her "the mother-in-law of God." He was always quarreling with some one, and became such a general nuisance that his co-religionists destroyed his monastery at Bethlehem. Even St. Augustine felt constrained to ask him to keep quiet, and for the sake of peace he was allowed to inflict a mother-in-law on God, and his version of the scriptures on your church. When Jerome came on the scene he was too ill-tempered to follow in the well-beaten track of the earlier writers, so he struck out boldly in favor of centaurs, satyrs, and fauns, who, he assures us, used to present themselvs to the saints and admit that they were the heathen gods. Even these ex-heathen gods, if we can credit Jerome, were in favor of the existence of Jesus, and I respectfully submit, my friend, that you were derelict in your duty as a good Catholic when you neglected quoting them among your authorities. Jerome says that Anthony once met a satyr in the desert who informed him that he had been deputized by his tribe to wait on the saint and ask his prayers to "our common Lord and master, Jesus Christ, whom we know to hav been sent for the salvation of the world." He also relates that a terrible dragon once laid waste a province. It was so large that with its breath alone it sucked in whole oxen and sheep with their keepers. St. Hilarion was called on by the few remaining inhabitants, and he ordered a pile of wood to be prepared and then commanded the dragon to ascend it. This he meekly did, and was burnt in the presence of all the people. I could fill twenty columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER with like stories, all vouched for by this gentlemen, whose translation of the Bible your council of Trent decided to be "the only authentic version, and the church its only legitimate interpreter."

"For all the other great fathers we hav found some distinctiv title. This man is simply Augustine, too large a figure in the ecclesiastical world to need defining," so sings your church. The great St. Augustine, whose ponderous tomes fill the beholder with awe; whose learning is considered second only to that of the Creator; whose name is never to be mentioned except with the deepest humility and reverence, and to question whose authority was seriously considered by many theologians to be the "sin against the Holy Ghost," without a smile on his face, informs us that "as to the fable of the antipodes, that is, that on the other side of the earth there are men who walk with their feet opposit to us; this is not credible." In describing demons, he says: "They are suspended in the air head downward;" and "as to devils, who are spirits, being burned with a material fire, we say that this can and will be effected in some wonderful and ineffable way." He claims that "Christ is the only mediator." The angels are powerless, and he does not even mention the Virgin. He disputes your present position, in fact, the very foundation of your religion, for he says: "God speaks to man not by vibrations of the air, not by visions, but by the truth." For lucidity, compactness, and comprehensivness, let me attract your attention to the following: "Man is the image of the trinity, because, first, he is; secondly, he knows that he is; thirdly, he delights in this knowledge." In his essay on original sin he remarks: "All men were in that one man who sinned, since we all were that one man. For although the particular form in which we as individuals were to liv was not created and distributed to us, yet the seminal nature was there from which we were to be propagated, and this, being vitiated by sin, and bound by the chain of death, and justly condemned, man could not be born of man in any other state." His works on the "Immortality of the Soul" and "Of the Quantity of the Soul" must be read to be appreciated. Augustine also testifies to miracles performed by some holy earth brought from Jerusalem; that the relics of Stephen raised four people from death; that the relativs of two other dead men sent their garments, which were rubbed on the relics, and immediately the owners were restored to life, and, after giving a long list of other miracles, concludes by apologizing for relating so few instances, when so many well authenticated ones are at his command, and hopes he will be held blameless for this manifest dereliction of duty. He also assures us that when he assumed the bishopric of Hippo he went out to preach the gospel, and found a nation of men who had no heads, and a short distance southerly of them another nation who had only one eye, and that in their breast. He devotes two volumes to the miracles performed by Stephen's relics. This Stephen is credited with being your first martyr, and the wondrous tales of the doings of his bones (if they be his, which is a questionable fact, as they were not discovered till two hundred years after his death, and then in a vision to a monk) hav been refused credence even by the credulous Spaniard; as one of his proverbs says: "Whosoever pretends to hav read all the miracles of St. Stephen, he lies." As Augustine did not become a Christian till he was well advanced in life, and he and his natural son, Adeodatus, were baptized together, it might hav been better for your church had he remained a pagan, now that printing has placed his works within the reach of all. The high encomiums passed on him hav attracted attention to his works, and the student is now able to determin that this great pillar was a veritable Munchausen.

In his theology Chrysostom does not differ materially from those who preceded him. He grasps at the unknowable and succeeds in still further mystifying everything he touches. He was most certainly one of the most credulous of men, and gulped down anything and everything that was reported to him. He is filled to repletion with the recital of the many miracles performed every day by the relics of the martyrs in casting out devils and raising the dead. He lays particular stress and attests most solemnly to the wonderful doings of one Babylas in particular. Yet the Benedictine monks, notwithstanding his high position in your church, both as a saint, an inspirational writer, and a pillar of early Christianity, when they published an edition of his work, felt it necessary to notify the reader that "it is written in a declamatory style, overflowing with rhetorical figures, and for the most part destitute of truth." This is a quarrel in your own family, my friend; I side with neither—I am simply recording.

Theodoret, the great Theodoret, "whose testimony cannot be slighted without shaking the credit of all human testimony," certainly takes the palm for marvelous stories. He says that when the Emperor Julian attempted to consult the Pythian Apollo of Daphne, the oracle commanded him to remove the remains of Babylas (the gentleman Chrysostom vouches for), which were lying in the neighborhood, else no communication could be given. When I read this, I thought it strange that under the circumstances Julian should not hav returned to your church, as he had studied for the priesthood—some say, even entered it. But, I suppose, as he had been there, he knew how these miracles were manufactured. The saints in the days of Theodoret were terribly thick-skinned, as he tells us that one Theodore, "having been scourged without intermission from the dawn of day till its close," by order of the Arians, did not suffer one pang, but rather regretted the cessation of the whipping. His description of the attempt to rebuild the Temple was possibly written after he had quenched his thirst from one of Epiphanius's miraculous fountains. He says that although "innumerable multitudes of men" were engaged in the work, the excavated earth "returned during the night to its former location." And for two nights in succession "the figure of the savior's cross appeared in the heavens and the garments of the Jews were covered with crosses of a blackish hue." What awfully perverse fellows these Jews were! Theodoret has immortalized a monk called Simeon—who, by the way, is also one of your saints, and the patron of athletes. Simeon, he says, lived thirty years on a pillar over fifty feet high and less than four feet in circumference, where he spent his days and nights in prayer, continually bowing his head till he touched his toes. Lest the story may seem improbable, he assures us it was easy for Simeon to perform this feat, as he ate only one meal a week, and that a very light one of bread and water, and consequently had not much of what Washington Irving has since called "rotundity of the belt." One day, in company with a friend, he attempted to count the number of bowings made by Simeon, and grew tired when they had reached 1,234. This gentleman was unfortunately cut off in the flower of his youth and full odor of sanctity. The devil became jealous, and, assuming the disguise of an angel, drove up in a fiery chariot and invited him to enter, promising a free ride to heaven. As Simeon raised his foot to enter the chariot, Satan, taking a mean advantage of his being off his guard, struck him on the thigh and disappeared. The blow produced an ulcer and death ensued. Theodoret also assures us that Hunneric the Arian having ordered the tongues of some of your co-religionists to be cut out at the roots, the sufferers did not lose the power of speech. Possibly feeling he had not done justice to the subject, he adds that "one of the victims, who had been dumb from birth, was able to speak fluently immediately after the operation." The principal theological work of this gentleman "whose testimony cannot be slighted without shaking the credit of all human testimony" is entitled, 'Cure for Heathen Falsehoods."

But why go on any further in this line? Are you not satisfied by this time that there is an original basis for Baron Munchausen's tales? It would be impossible to enter fully into the miraculous claims of your early writers and keep within space limits. I hav quoted only the principal ones, and then simply skimmed the surface; and I would observe right here that these quotations are fair examples, and hav not been selected in order to carry a point. They are sufficient to show you the mental and moral status of your early saints, and you can determin for yourself how much credibility should be attached to men who affirm that holy oil raised the dead, cast out devils, cured all diseases; that monks raised the dead, walked on water, turned rivers from their natural courses into new channels by simple word of command, caused inundations of waters to rise to the roofs of churches without entering the doors, which stood open, made decayed trunks instantaneously blossom into vigorous trees, crossed rivers on the backs of crocodiles, and on the warmest days cooled themselvs by sitting inside a fiery furnace—all vouched for by eye-witnesses, and God—your God—med on to verify the statement. Yet you desire me to believe these men; to discard my reason and pin all my hopes to a religion which is bolstered up by such lies—for they are lies. Well, I can't. If there is a God and he cannot manifest himself except through such men as these, I must decline accepting him.

When I learn that one Gregory had so much power over the devil that on one occasion, after driving him from a temple and being requested by the pagan priest to allow him to return, the saint wrote on a piece of paper, "Gregory to Satan: Enter," and that the devil immediately returned, I question the fact, but neither the imagination nor the object of the writer; and when several others of your pillars insist that another saint could discover from the smell of the bodies or clothes of the men, or even of any object they touched, to what particular demon they were subjected, I tell you plainly that I feel to agree with Suetonius, Tacitus, and Pliny that your religious progenitors were a "stupid, credulous, impious sect—the prey of crafty impostors." There is one point on which I can agree with your early writers. All urge reform among the clergy—I hav failed to find one exception; and if your religion consisted of this alone, everyone of us Infidels would be a first-class Roman Catholic.

(TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

The S. S. V.

The Society for the Suppression of Vice held its twelfth annual meeting at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on Tuesday evening, the 27th. The society has its headquarters in that place so as to be near its work.

As usual, a ticket to the entertainment was sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER office, and the vice-editor scooped it in. The same bizarre old man who took tickets at the door last year was at his post. Two young fellows gave out circulars of the work accomplished by the society since its inauguration. The circular gave out the number of tons of immoral matter which Comstock had seized. It was something appalling to those who did not know that when Comstock tackles a dealer he seizes his whole stock and weighs it, stereotype plates, printing material, and imposing stone. He would weigh the building if he could get it on scales. Whether or not the dealer is found guilty, or the matter shown to be obscene, the stock seized is not returned, but goes in to make up the sum total of "work" accomplished by the society.

At eight o'clock a number of queer looking individuals filed through the committee room, and developed on the stage. President Colgate opened the meeting. This is the crafty old gentleman who once advertised vaseline for "immoral" purposes, and by the aid of his society might hav had a monopoly of the business only that some officious person mentioned it to the district attorney. Mr. Colgate invited all present to join the Rev. Mr. Wight, of Hoboken, in prayer. Mr. Wight took the floor and proceeded to enlighten the deity after this fashion: "O Lord, our God, we adore thee as the high and lofty one that inhabits eternity, and because thou rulest over us. We rejoice that in this world of sin and misery thou art setting up thy kingdom of righteousness and salvation against which no weapon can be formed that shall prosper." Anyone who is familiar with the prayer style can finish this one out as well as if it were printed. It ended like this: "We confess our sins before thee, and to thee ascribe all that is good."

Comstock sat just behind Mr. Wight, and did not look altogether pleased to hear the almighty getting all the praise. He therefore reported. The first stickful of the report was pious twaddle. The Lord had been his strength and shield and had delivered him from many trials. To him be the glory. Then Mr. Comstock did a little blowing on his own account. His report showed that he had operated chiefly among gamblers. Mr. Comstock was not so reckless in his language as he has sometimes been. He denounced neither the police nor the district attorney, and even endeavored to convey the idea that opposition to Comstock rule had practically ceased. Still he had passed providentially through great dangers. For instance, an infernal machine had been left in the building, evidently designed to injure him, but by the blessing of God it did not explode. The facts about this "infernal" machine are that it was left in another part of the building from that occupied by Mr. Comstock; it contained less than eight ounces of powder, and if it had exploded, it would hav injured no one a dozen feet away. Many people believe that Comstock sent the machine to himself, and that the loudest report it was capable of affording would be heard in the secretary's annual screed.

The event of the evening was Killaen Van Rensselaer. He is the treasurer. The wobble to Killy's jaw is something outside even the suburbs of mere descriptiv writing. It might be imitated by placing a hot potato in the mouth and talking through a funnel. Mr. Rensselaer said that the society was $1,240.87 in debt, and needed $9,000 to carry on its work another year. The treasurer here made a little speech. He had to mourn the loss of the late William E. Dodge, the block-tin man, and H. B. Claflin, the dry-goods man. These and others who were accustomed to contribnte extensivly to the treasury had been thoughtless enough to die. What the treasurer wanted was some one to take the place of those men, not so much as ornaments to the society as contributors to its funds.

Bishop Huntingdon, of Central New York, being introduced by Mr. Colgate, said he had heard that this was an unpopular society, and he did not know but that explained the presence of so large an audience. The bishop believed it to be the duty of parents to keep their children ignorant of everything except good. They ought not to know that there was evil in the world. It was the object of this society to coöperate with parents to preserve this ignorance. Mr. Huntingdon's speech was not inspiring, and the Rev. Mr. Wight got tired and went home before it was finished. The speaker invited all to chip in to support Mr. Comstock, a man as pure as St. Anthony of old, who, as beautifully represented by the artists, ground his nose into the dirt rather than look at a nice girl en deshabille. If Bishop Huntingdon had been aware that Comstock had just seized as indecent the artist's illustration of his great prototype, St. Anthony, he would probably hav omitted this allusion. The bishop then innocently added that he was willing to stand by the doings of this society.

A collection followed the bishop, and the alacrity with which some young men got upon the floor with baskets showed that this was not an altogether unlooked-for exigency.

Comstock read a letter from Elbridge T. Gerry, "president," as the reader had it, "of the Society for the Prevention of Children." J. Hyatt Smith, the preacher-politician, made a few remarks. Smith has the appearance of a man afflicted with some functional derangement. "Comstock," said Mr. Smith, "is an angel of purity."

The Rev. Mr. Smith's speech exhausted the resources of the meeting. The audience went home and the members stayed behind to look over such attractiv things as Mr. Comstock had been able to colect since the last anniversary.

True Liberalism.

Out of the advanced civilization of the century has grown the living, progressiv spirit of Liberalism, or its synonym—Individualism. The fact has just dawned upon the human race that there are rights of conscience as well as rights of property, and that the principles of liberty embrace not only the physical but the psychical world as well. No mind can be absolutely free when harrowed and repressed within the circumscribed limits of a creed. No mind can be free that precludes the possibilities of mistakes, and infallibility is only another name for patent ignorance. When a man raises his conceptions to the universe in its immensity, and then considers its constituent elements in minutiæ as atoms of the whole, he has attained the ultimatum of logical acumen, and the proper exercise of his mental faculties affords him the best criterion of opinion. When a man subscribes his name to certain articles of faith, asserts their infallibility, and perverts his reasoning faculties by repressing natural doubts that operate as the advance guard of the marshaled forces of intellectual development, he is a mental pigmy, a moral plebeian in the domain of thought. He has proclaimed himself below par in the circulating medium of civilization, and is not the proper person to mold and fashion the opinions of others. The word "creed" presupposes a mental contour beyond which the subscriber cannot reach—a mental horizon from which has set forever the sun of progressiv thought. No man can be grand and great unless he has enlarged his conceptions and moral and intellectual attainments to a realization of the human race in its aggregate as well as its individual constituency. He must consider the geographical situation of the different races, the climatic influences to which they are subjected, their habits of thinking and of living, and derive therefrom by the method of induction the fact that environment molds the opinions of nations as well as of individuals, and that all ideas that are the result of local influences must from their nature be narrow and local in their application.

Most theological questions are local in their nature. The inhabitants of the Polar regions regard hell as cold and icy, and now we are becoming of the same opinion. Blasphemy is a geographical question, and religion a birthright. We hav Christians that are such because born in America, and educated under Christian influences. They come by their religion as naturally as though it were a hereditary disease or physical deformity. Had they been born in Arabia they would hav been Mohammedans, in China or India, Confucianists or Buddhists. They might hav been Brahmans had not the simple accident of birth made it otherwise. With these facts in view is it not better to enlarge our minds to the contemplation of all before we subscribe to any articles of belief? There are thousand of people who pretend to be Liberals who present the deplorable aspect of bigots as narrow and contemptible as a theological mummy. They hav mistaken their calling, and are hugging a delusiv phantom. The true Liberal is broad, not narrow; generous, not selfish. He must, of necessity, be a man of brain, a student, and a thinker. He must keep forever in his view the guiding star of reason. He must be conservativ, not aggressiv, and, above all, he must be constructiv as well as destructiv. He must be a strict adherent to principle, careful and preservativ of his own rights, and considerate of the rights of others. He must guard carefully the sacred right of opinion, and forever hold himself open to adverse opinions, and present himself a martyr at the altar of conviction. True Liberalism is a recognition of the liberties of man, physical and intellectual. It is a recognition of the equality of the human race, and the common fraternity of man. The true Liberal is a man in the grandest, broadest, and best sense of the word.

G. F. RINEHART.

Annihilation.

To me annihilation is unthinkable, and therefore cannot be true.—Lu.

Annihilation, as well as chance, is often brought up as an argument against the idea of there being no God and no future. Now, we, as Materialists, no more believe in annihilation than we do in chance. All is governed by law, and there is consequently no room for chance. All matter, with its powers and potencies, is eternal, and there is no room for annihilation. We use the words "chance" and "annihilation" in a restricted form. We do not giv them their full and complete meaning.

If we throw a handful of pebbles at a small target set up in the distance, it is a chance if a single pebble hits it. Yet every pebble goes to its destination according to laws. If one hits the limb of a tree and is diverted from its course, it is done according to laws of cause and effect.

We burn up a handful of letters. To all intents and purposes we annihilate them as letters, but nothing is really destroyed. The ink and paper are only changed into something else.

Just so when we die. We are not annihilated; we are only changed into lifeless clay. Though this clay has life in every particle of it, yet as an identity we are dead and gone forever and forever.

Our minds, being born of our senses, from impressions conveyed to the brain by the nerves, become lifeless also when the nerves cease to make impressions upon them. So what is there to liv after death and still be us? What was there that lived before our birth and was still us?

A minute speck or cell of protoplasm, that must be greatly magnified before we can see it, unites with another speck of the same material, and this compound all develops into an individual human being. What was there in those two microscopic specks that had ever existed before as us? Nothing at all. They were only the beginnings of life. Why, then, should we expect to be perpetuated after death?

All things hav but one life or identity. The millions and billions and trillions of human beings who lived before us are gone to their long last sleep. The millions now living will also soon sleep, and thus countless crowds yet to come will sleep in their turn. Why expect them to awake any more than the flea, bed-bug, or gnat? True, they are of a higher organism, of a grander evolution, but, after all, they are mere specks in the great universe of life—specks that come, go, and pass away forever. Because a few dreamers fancy facts proving that death does not end all; because a few events, occurrences, and seeming miracles take place which as yet science has failed to explain by known laws of philosophy, is no reason that we jump to the conclusion that the dead liv and their spirits are all around us. If spirits were here, and were able to do one hundredth part of the miraculous things claimed by believers as being done, ten thousand times as much would be done as is now pretended to be done. Seaver claims that Thomas Paine would visit him and Mendum at Memorial Hall; I claim that D. M. Bennett would visit the TRUTH SEEKER office and the dear ones he so long labored with there.

Even I should not thus hav been left to preach and teach Materialism all these years, when just one good proof would hav made me a believer.

Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS.—The name "apostolic father" is given to the immediate disciples or fellow-laborers of the apostles, and, in a more restricted sense, to those of them who hav left writings behind them. There are at most only six, namely, Clement, Barnabas, Hermes, Ignatius, Polycarp, and Papias. . . . Only the first two of these fathers are now claimed to hav written in the first century. But as to them, few claim that Clement wrote prior to A.D. 95, or Barnabas before 100.—Antichrist.

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is sent free.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
62 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 6, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of many great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Sunday Newspapers.

The Star of this city—a Sunday newspaper—had last week a clerical symposium on the subject of Sunday newspapers. Just why the Star should seek an expression of opinion from the ministers on this subject, it is difficult to see. Ministers do not now represent public opinion, nor are they adequate measures of public sentiment. The opinions gathered by the Star, however, are interesting as representing all shades of Christianity, and showing just what a stumbling-block real orthodoxy is in the way of the people.

The Rev. Morgan Dix, Episcopalian, is decided in his opposition to the Sunday newspaper, principally because it distracts people's thoughts from the serious problem of sheol. Dr. Van Dyke, Presbyterian, of Brooklyn, agrees substantially with Mr. Dix. Dr. Tiffany, of this city, likes the Sunday papers. He finds them healthful and instructiv. Robert Collyer, Unitarian, reads his paper on Sunday, and thinks the talk of stopping the Sunday newspapers is too much like the story of the old lady with the broom who tried to keep the Atlantic ocean away from her door. Howard Crosby, of course, is opposed to Sunday papers, but says the Monday newspaper—upon which the labor is performed on Sunday—is a matter between a man and his God. Henry Ward Beecher reads papers on Sunday when he can get the time. Reverend C. C. Hall, Presbyterian, of Brooklyn, says Sunday newspapers should not receive the patronage of religious people. Theodore Cuyler, Presbyterian, advises the young men of his congregation to shun the Sunday paper as they would grog-shops. He demands that whatever impedes the progress of Christianity shall be obliterated, and considers Sunday papers to be a fearful impediment. Rev. Charles Deems, who calls himself independent in theology, denounces Sunday issues, principally for the reason that his church being in a neighborhood of poor people his would-be church attendents hav to sell Sunday papers for a livelihood. Presbyterian Mr. Shedd would not hav his people read Sunday papers, nor even Gibbon's History, but only the Bible and works of similar import. "Christian people," he says, "should constantly commune with the spiritual world, and their thoughts on the Sabbath should be distant from all that leads to worldly channels." Roswell D. Hitchcock, Presbyterian, saves his conscience, and the Sunday papers too, by purchasing and reading them on Monday morning. The Rev. Philip Schaff, chairman of the American Bible revision committee, thinks that the millions of men and women throughout the country are corrupted by reading Sunday papers. He himself, however, remains uncorrupted, for his newsboy is ordered never to leave a Sunday paper on his doorstep. Mr. Huntington, Episcopalian rector, admits that if the theory held by some, that the church is only another name for the nation, were correct, the Sunday paper might not be an unmixed evil. As this theory, however, does not obtain to any great extent, Mr. Huntington is dubious about secular reading on Sunday. Dr. Thomas Armitage, Baptist, says: "It seems to me that it is the Monday and not the Sunday newspaper that deserves the condemnation of religious people. The Sunday issue is prepared nearly wholly on Saturday, but the Monday paper requires labor on the Sabbath. Crush the Monday newspaper and you accomplish more than by exterminating the Sunday paper. It is in the construction of the former that, from early dawn until the last hour of Sunday, editors, reporters, compositors, and pressmen are engaged, and thus are deprived of the opportunity to visit and worship in the churches." Mr. Armitage sighs for the adoption of a custom current twenty-five years ago in the South—no Monday papers. Mr. Talmage's views are not clear on the subject—in other words, he does not know what his richest pewholders think. Justin D. Fulton, Baptist, regards the Sunday paper as "one of the mightiest foes to the Christian religion and to the church, and no drapery that you can adorn it with will successfully hide that fact." Rev. Edward Beecher has ofttimes been solicited to write for Sunday papers, but has always refused. Naturally, he thinks, the papers are degenerating, and cannot long survive. Vicar-General Quinn, Roman Catholic, does not care whether his people read Sunday papers or not. He seems reasonably certain of the strength of the grip his church has upon its members. Rev. E. B. Coe, Dutch Reformed church, condemns the issue of Sunday papers because of the great inroad they make upon religion. Rector Samuel Corke never allows a Sunday newspaper in his house, and hopes that none of his parishioners do. In this hope he is probable deluded. Rector Arthur Brooke follows suit, but admits that his conduct leads to embarrassments. "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion" Burchard holds the honest opinion that Sunday newspapers are a nuisance, and should not be tolerated in a Christian community. Dr. Talbot W. Chambers, Presbyterian, thinks the editors of Sunday newspapers are dishonoring God. He is opposed to them. Rev. I. J. Lansing, Methodist, acknowledges the church's inability to cope with the evil, but disapproves it. Rev. Henry J. Van Dyke, Presbyterian, has not sufficient piety to stand the Sunday paper, and refuses to be led into temptation by taking it. Robert S. MacArthur, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, is sorry that secular papers are tolerated on the Sabbath, for their existence is contrary to God's law. Rector William F. Morgan is on the fence, but leans to the conservativ side. He reads no paper on Sunday. Christian doctrins, he says, are all against such desecration. Rev. H. S. Carpenter would prefer no Sunday papers, but as he cannot help himself ne would like to see them all religious. Joseph Fransiola, Catholic priest, has no objections to reading the religious articles in the Sunday papers. Because no Sunday paper enters the house of Episcopalian Houghton, he is of the opinion that the circulation of Sunday papers is falling off, and thereat he rejoices. Presbyterian Vincent is solidly against our Sunday papers. In the opinion of G. L. Taylor, Methodist, the Sunday paper is the champion and ringleader of all social evils. The Rev. Mr. Chadwick, another Methodist, has four reasons why he is opposed to Sunday papers. The a... is, their publication breaks the fourth commandment. The other three are like unto the first. John R. Paxton, Presbyterian, believes in Sunday newspapers, also in opening the museums and libraries Sundays. He is a bright and shining exception to his brethren.

Out of this lot of thirty-four preachers, four are in favor of Sunday papers, two indifferent, one undecided, and twenty-seven opposed. The majority is large enough to justify the conclusion that the church opposes. But there is one thing these twenty-seven hav overlooked. While condemning the publication of Sunday papers, they hav each done their best to make one issue of the Sunday Star interesting reading.

A New Book.

No controversy of recent times has excited such interest as hav the recent papers of Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. T. H. Huxley, and Prof. Max Müller in the Nineteenth Century, and Mrs. E. Lynn Linton in the Gentleman's Magazine. The recent bitter political contest and the present struggle of parties in the English Parliament hav not rendered the public indifferent to the mightier, if less noisy, warfare between modern science and the Mosaic theory of creation. In "The Dawn of Creation and of Worship" Mr. Gladstone has said the best word for Christianity; in "The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature" Mr. Huxley has phrased the latest revealments of science. We giv this week Mr. Huxley's paper. Lack of space prevents the publication in these columns of Mr. Gladstone's. But we shall issue the whole controversy in book form, giving Mr. Gladstone's first, Professor Huxley's, Professor Müller's, and Mrs. Linton's following in the order named. We shall publish them, without note or comment of our own, under the title of "The Order of Creation: The Conflict between Genesis and Geology." The book will be ready about February 15th, in paper and cloth covers, price 25 and 50 cents.

Produce the Figures.

The Independent of last week contained this:

"We wish to excite no prejudice against THE TRUTH SEEKER on the ground that it boasts of being an Infidel journal. If its arguments in favor of the Sunday opening of the museums are good then we would hav them carry. We will presume is means to be fair; but we can easily show that it is not. It quotes from us:

"Less than half the expense of equipping the museums is paid by the city. Thus the Museum of Natural History has received during its existence, omitting value of public land on which it stands and building, a total sum of $430,838.18. Of this $110,722,99, or a little more than one-quarter, has come from the city. The rest has come from generous private patrons. It costs $25,000 a year for the current expenses of this museum, and of this $10,000 has to be paid by members and trustees. . . . The city has not organized the museums, has not provided the objects on exhibition, and pays but three-fifths of the expense of keeping them open."

"THE TRUTH SEEKER thus comments:

"A more misleading, not to say dishonest, statement could scarcely be made. The most protuberant evasion of the truth is the little parenthetical sentence, 'Omitting value of the public land on which it stands and building,' and the more decided insinuation that both museums cost the city but $30,000 per year.

"In the first place, the buildings for the museums hav cost the city an enormous sum. New York is now paying interest on $958,000.00 worth of bonds, representing money given to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the American Museum of Natural History."

"How easily this is answered! We did omit the cost of the buildings. And so we omitted, on the other side, the value of the gifts presented, which are enormous in quantity, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and much exceeding the value of objects bought by the trustees. THE TRUTH SEEKER continues:

"The other point in the Independent's editorial is that it costs $25,000 dollars per year each to run the museums, of which the city pays only $15,000 to each. Again is the statement misleading. Allowing that it costs $50,000 per year to maintain both institutions, we affirm that the city spends more than four times as much upon the museums as do the 'generous private patrons.' The trustees and the 'generous private patrons' contribute about $20,000 annually to the support of the institutions. The same institutions cost the municipality of New York $84,530 annually."

"It thus adds $54,530 annual interest on bonds issued for erection of museum buildings to the $30,000 paid by the city for running expenses of the museums. Very good. Then it seems the city has not paid the $958,000. but has borrowed it, and only pays the interest. The trustees and donors of the museums preferred to pay down their cash, and pay no interest. If THE TRUTH SEEKER will count both the money the city has borrowed and has not paid, and the interest it has paid, we will count, for the trustees, the money they hav paid, and the interest which they hav lost, and which would hav accumulated if they had, like the city, given borrowed money. Let us hav things even on both sides. On the whole it will turn out that the city has given less than the trustees. In return for what the city has given the museums are kept open free four days out of seven. That is fair. If anything more is asked it is not to be demanded as a right."

Firstly, as the preachers say: The point now made by the Independent that the donations of "generous private patrons" largely exceed the objects of interest purchased by the trustees may be true, but as no evidence is presented, we cannot admit the claim. And if it be true, it is of no consequence until the donors express themselvs against Sunday opening.

Secondly. It makes no difference that the cost of the buildings is still a debt owed by the city. The stocks are due in 1903, and will, of course, be paid. The contract of the city with the museums of which Mr. Jesup is president was entered into in 1877. Averaging the issues of stocks, and dating them from 1880, would make twenty-three years of interest to be paid by the city—reaching the enormous sum, at simple interest, of $1,253,890.00. Adding the $958,000.00 which the city must pay in 1903, will giv us $2,211,890.00 expended and to be spent, whether or no, upon the museums exclusiv of the $30,000 a year for running expenses. Will the Independent claim for the trustees that they hav spent or will spend so much for the museums? They can withhold their donations at any time; the tax-payers of the city cannot. The city has practically paid the money, and nothing is gained by evading the question in the manner of the Independent.

The Independent givs no figures of what the trustees hav given the museums. Until it does we must maintain that the city pays more than the trustees, and we use the Museum of Natural History and the figures of its president as proof. The building cost the city $958,000.00. As we stated in the editorial which the Independent is criticising, we do not know precisely how this has been divided between the two, but as the Metroplitan Museum received one year $162,500.00 for enlarging the building, it is presumable that the Natural History Museum has received that much less than the Metropolitan. Taking the $162,500.00 from the $958.000.00 given to both leaves $795,500.00 divided between them—if the division has been fair. This would giv Mr. Jesup's institution $397,750.00. Add to this the $110,722.99 which he acknowledges having received from the city up to January 1, 1885, and the $5,000 per year (1880–1885—$25,000.00), which the city pays more than do the trustees, and we hav $533,472.99 against $320,115.19 received from all other sources. This is the excess in cash and stocks ($213,357.80) which the Museum of Natural History has cost the city up to date over what it has cost the "generous private patrons"—that is, if the division of the stock has been equal. The Independent cannot deny this.

Neither cannot it deny that the city is spending $84,530.00 annually on account of these institutions —$30,000 for running expenses and $54,530.00 for interest. As the trustees claim to spend only $20,000 at the outside (and much of this is recovered from the sale of guide-books, donations, etc.) we do not see how our contemporary has at all disturbed our figures. The allusion to what the trustees hav lost in the way of interest on their cash donations is altogether too vague a claim. So far we hav seen no figures of what the trustees hav given. Mr. Jesup lumps it with donations from "patrons, fellows, members," and we may be excused for surmising that the generosity of the trustees has been much less than he would hav the public believe.

What we would like to see is the donations of the city and of those who believe in the opening of the museums on Sundays contrasted with the donations of those who, like Mr. Jesup, do not.

Lectures and Meetings.

G. Rodd, reporter for the Society of Humanists, sends the following: At the meeting of the Society of Humanists last Sunday morning Mr. Hugh McGregor, in a rather short but beautiful address, explained how the feeling of patriotism, or love of country, was the connecting link between family love and love of humanity. He also read a portion of the New Year address given by Mr. F. Harrison at Newton Hall, London, from the Utica Morning Herald, Jan. 21, 1886, which was very welcome and interesting to all who were present. A few pages of the "General View of Positivism" were read, and the meeting closed in the usual manner. All those who are interested in Positivism, and who are conscious of the need of moral regeneration in this world are cordially invited to attend these meetings, which are held every Sunday at 10 A.M. at No. 97 Market street, New York city.

J. E. Remsburg left Atchison for the East on the 3d inst. The following is his program so far as arranged:

Albany, Mo.	Thur., Fri., Sat., Sun., Feb. 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th.
Brookfield, Mo.	Mon., Tues., 8th, 9th.
Mechanicsburg, Ill.	Wed., Thur., Fri., 10th, 11th, 12th.
Geneseo, Ill.	Sat., Sun., 13th, 14th.
Earlville, Ill.	Mon., Wed., 15th, 17th.
Paw Paw, Ill.	Tues., 16th.
Battle Creek, Mich.	Thur., 18th.
Wayland, Mich.	Fri., 19th,
Hastings, Mich.	Sat., Sun., 20th, 21st.
Holland, N. Y.	Mon., Tues., 22d, 23d.
Java Village, N. Y.	Wed., Thur., Fri., 24th, 25th, 26th.
Troy, N. Y.	Sun., 28th.
Warrensburg, N. Y.	Mon., Tues., Wed., Mar. 1st, 2d, 3d.
Cohoes, N. Y.	Thur., 4th.
Saco, Me.	Sat., 6th.
Portland, Me.	Sun. (10:30 A.M.), 7th.
Boston, Mass.	Sun. (7:30 P.M.), 7th.
Providence, R. I.	Mon., 8th.
Meriden, Conn.	Tues., Wed., Thur., 9th, 10th, 11th.
New York	Fri., 12th.
Baltimore, Md.	Sun., 14th.

In addition to the above Mr. Remsburg will speak in Greenwich, Mass.; Salamanca, N. Y.; Naples, N. Y.; Kent, O.; Perrysburg, O.; Tontogany, O.; Carey, O.; Bradford, O.; Spiceland, Ind.; Burr Oak, Mich.; Paris, Ill.; Chebanse, Ill.; Cleopatra, Mo.; Maitland, Mo.; Quitman, Mo.; Robinson, Kan.; Morrill, Kan.; Republic City, Kan.; Cawker City, Kan.; Council Grove, Kan.; Brookville, Kan.; Urbana, Kan.; Halstead, Kan.; Newtown, Kan. The Liberals of New York city will note with pleasure his engagement with the Liberal Club for the second Friday in March.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$1,819.57
Walter Firth, (paid)	5.00
A. Schell, "	25.00
John Ray, "	1.00
Manhattan Liberal Club, per Paine Anniversary.	29.75
W. H. Pepper, (pledge)	25.00
G. Younides, (bal. on life mem.)	7.50
R. B. Jackson, (paid)	5.00
Thos. Beale, "	1.80
Wm. Hunt, "	1.00
Herman Bohda, "	1.00
Emily Castle, "	1.00
Jos. Gardner, "	1.00
Oliver Gardner, "	.25
Thos. Monaghan, "	5.00
John Alberger, "	2.15
Chas. Stowater, "	1.00
William Mansfield "	1.00
Total,	$1,933.02

Pledge Paid.—A. VanDeusen, $100.00.

Particular Notice.—I would like the addresses of Mr. Russell and Joseph Burgess who contributed to the Campaign Fund at Cleveland Congress.—S. P. P.

News and Notes.

All over the land the Paine festivals hav been held and a new impulse been given to Freethought by the memory of this hero. New York fell into line, and held a most successful meeting. Mr. Wakeman's address was one of the best ever delivered upon the subject, and gave new views of the illustrious reformer. The receipts were $49.75; the expenses, $20; leaving 29.75 for the Campaign Fund.

Mr. Reynolds's lecture on Sunday evening quite delighted his audience, and we welcome this new instrumentality for the inculcation of Liberal ideas. Mr. Reynolds enables us to travel over the world in a short space of time and understand it better than ever before.

SAMUEL FIRTH.

Samuel Firth, a veteran Freethinker and Secularist, died at Trenton, N. J., on Sunday, Jan. 24th, and was buried on Thursday, Jan. 28th. The services were conducted by Samuel P. Putnam. A large number of friends and citizens were present, and attested the worth of his life. He has resided for the last twenty years in Trenton, and won the confidence and respect of all his neighbors of every creed, and was thoroughly respected throughout the city. He was born at Halifax, England, sixty years ago, and from the age of twenty-five years has been a constant worker in the Secular ranks. He organized several Secular and scientific Sunday schools while in England, and his work is still remembered, and its results apparent, in old England.

His life and character are a noble testimony to the value of Secular philosophy. He met the suffering of his last days with wonderful fortitude, and death came to him as a sweet rest. He leaves behind a wife and five children, all of whom are in sympathy with his intellectual convictions. At his grave the following words were said:

"Death is inevitable. We cannot resist it; we must submit. Death, however, is the teacher of humanity; it teaches us to be more kind, more humane, more friendly, more devoted to the welfare of each. Because we shall see the face of the loved one no more, hereafter the mother will be more dear to the children, and the children more blessed to the mother.

"Farewell, kind husband, and loving father! Farewell, upright citizen and gentle neighbor! Farewell, thou seeker for the truth and worker for the welfare of the race! Dust shall return to dust, but thou shalt still be welcome in the affectionate remembrance of wife and children, of friends and neighbors, of the world, which is better and happier because thou hast lived."

POLITICS AND A FUTURE LIFE.

The following strikes me as being somewhat Pickwickian:

"Assembly Chamber, Albany, Jan. 29, 1886.

"Samuel P. Putnam, Esq., Dear Sir: I hav your letter of of the 22d inst., with form of of petition stating measures respecting which your friends desire legislativ action. In reply to your inquiry I hav to state that I am not in sympathy with the purposes or principles of your Union. I hav the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with your distinguished president, Colonel Ingersoll, and he knows that I am a firm believer in a future state and the enforcement of the observances against which you protest. Very respectfully,

"N. M. Curtis."

I would like, in all sincerity, to know what a "future state" has to do with purely political measures. The Nine Demands do not by the remotest suggestion refer to belief or non-belief in a future state. Does Mr. Curtis mean to assume that he who believes in a future state has a right to rob the man who does not? Does he mean to say that the non-believer in immortality has no rights that he (Mr. Curtis) is bound to respect? What has faith to do with this matter? Would Mr. Curtis enforce by law his creed concerning future life? Does he not admit my right to an honest difference of opinion with him? Does he not believe that every man is equal before the law, whatever his religious belief? Is not this the fundamental principle of the Constitution of the United States? Does Mr. Curtis oppose this principle? Would he put authority into the hands of those who believe with him to make laws against the rights of those who do not?

If Mr. Curtis is a genuin American, if he believes in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, he must admit the political equality of all, without reference to creed. If this is so, why, then, should he base his opposition to the Nine Demands upon the fact that he believes in a future state? He might as well base his opposition upon the fact that he is fond of beefsteak and plum-pudding. Beefsteak and plum-pudding hav just as much to do with the Nine Demands as a belief in a future life, and one might just as logically affirm that the American Secular Union is organized to destroy a fondness for beefsteak and plum-pudding as to say that it is organized to destroy a belief in a future life. The Union has no such purpose. It has nothing to say against this belief, no arguments to bring. It leaves this question entirely, as it leaves a thousand other questions, to a man's own reason and taste. If a man is happy in this belief, let him believe, if he can do so with intellectual consistency. I hav not the slightest desire to take away anyone's comfort in this belief. I should as soon think of interfering with a man's diet as with his individual notions of the hereafter. The American Secular Union has a radically different purpose from destroying faith in immortality. It is for liberty and justice here in this world between man and man. If Mr. Curtis will read the Nine Demands he will find nothing to which any just-minded citizen can object. The Union deals entirely with this world, and no other, either for or against. It bases rights of citizenship upon manhood and not belief. If all the Demands were granted, how would the "future state" suffer? If a fact, it would still remain, like the law of gravitation, a fact still. Mr. Curtis will hav just as good a pair of wings, just as good a harp, just as white a raiment, in heaven if he will grant the Nine Demands on earth. He won't lose a whit of his glory in the "future state" if he will be just to his neighbor now.

I ask Mr. Curtis to carefully read these Demands and see if he can find anything that will lessen the dignity of God, if there is one; that will make heaven less comfortable, if there is one, or take one fiery spark from hell, if there is one. God and the angels, and heaven and hell, so far as they are realities, will go on in undisturbed serenity while justice is achieved on earth. There is nothing in the Nine Demands that any sensible Christian will not agree to if he is a fair and square man. I don't want Mr. Curtis or others to dodge the issue and fly off to a future state, where of course it is impossible to corner anybody, for the territory of the hereafter is so big that one can cut up all sorts of logical maneuvers and find a way of escape from every blunder. I do not care to discuss the "future state" with Mr. Curtis. Will he please to come to the state of New York—that's the state we are in now, and I will ask him on the grouud of political justice to make some solid this-world objection to the Nine Demands, something based on human rights, on the Constitution of the United States, on the Declaration of Independence. If he will do this he will present something preëminently worthy of consideration; but to say that he opposes the Demands of the Union on the ground of his belief in a future state is equally as wise as to oppose them on the ground of his fondness for beefsteak. The things are not cognate. There is no relation in word or thought. As one can subscribe to the Demands and eat all the beefsteak he desires, so he can subscribe to the same and hav all the belief in immortality that he desires. The American Secular Uuion will not interfere with the physical or spiritua luxury of any. It only insists that he shall not steal his beefsteak nor eujoy his spiritual food in a magnificent temple which does not pay its fair share of that taxation which should be equally levied upon all property.

I hav no doubt that when Mr. Curtis fully understands the scope of the Nine Demands he will cordially assent to them, since they are perfectly just to every man, and will not in the least prevent his ardent mind from passing beyond "the flaming bounds of space and time."

"A BUSYBODY NOBODY,"

I feel exceedingly honored. The Rev. Carlos Martyn, who preaches in a gorgeous edifice that never could hav been built except by the unjust exemption of property from taxation, in his sermon last Sunday calls the secretary of the Union "a Busybody Nobody." Wheu the priests begin to howl and call names, it is evident that there are "bloody noses and cracked crowns" somewhere in their ranks. A fellow feeling makes them wondrous—ugly. Wouldn't the the Rev. Carlos like to put on the thumb-screws? Alas, for him! they will simply remain as one of the curiosities of the museum, to be sometime viewed on Sunday by a far greater number than his own congregation. This is what troubles the clergymen, that the skull of a gorilla dead for a thousand years shall excite a greater interest than their own sermons, and hav a larger and more enlightened congregation, on the very day set apart for the priest to earn his own bread and butter, the amount of which depends upon the number of his auditors. Of course, the ministers do not like such competition.

Samuel P. Putnam.

Letters from Friends.

CONCORDIA, KAN., Jan. 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed one dollar as a contribution toward embellishing THE TRUTH SEEKER. J. M. HAGAMAN,
Ed. Kansas Blade.

VERSAILLES, IND., Jan. 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: A few days ago I subscribed for one year to THE TRUTH SEEKER and paid my $3, this sum being what I regard as high, for a paper furnished to the Liberals ought to be cheaper, sectarian papers being generally issued for a price averaging far lower than this. But now it comes to us illustrated; and, by the way, the pictures are far better than any writing or print that could occupy their place. They tell it all in a way, too, that cannot be answered or denied. I am real glad of this, and hope now that the subscription list will grow until it is large enough to justify the reduction of the subscription price to $2. Right here I would suggest, could not THE TRUTH SEEKER issue a prospectus, on a single sheet, about 8x10 or 8x12 inches, of proper design, offering to send the paper, say three months as a trial, for such sum as you might wish, and inclose one such prospectus with each paper to each one of your subscribers? I believe in that way, with slight expense, we might soon double your susbcription.

Of two of your old subscribers from this place one has died, and the other has removed. The remaining one—your servant—is almost discouraged. We hav here a fine hall, a county seat town off the railroad five miles, but not a Liberal lecturer is ever heard or seen here. I wish I had the address of some one who would come into southeastern Indiana and assist in waking up the dry bones of orthodoxy. There are many good towns in this part of the state, and I can't see why all our men pass us by. If we can't do better, we will hav to wake up ourselvs and organize home talent, and make or deliver our own lectures and speeches. Long liv the illustrated TRUTH SEEKER! Yours in truth,
ADAM STOCKINGER.

CŒUR D'ALENE, IDAHO TER., Jan. 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav had the pleasure of reading your paper for the last six months. I will just make this remark: Your illustrations are immense. People who don't, can't, or won't read, must see, if they hav eyes, and the story is told just the same.

When I was a child, back in the state of Maine, I was afraid to go into the cellar without a person with me. Now, in this age, a child of Idaho would go five miles in a dark night, through forests infested with wild beasts, to do an errand. Such publications as THE TRUTH SEEKER hav brought about this change within the memory of

Your servant, THOS. S. DALY.

MAITLAND, MO., Jan. 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: We hav just had a debate here between W. F. Jamieson and Elder Dungan, twelve sessions, two hours each, in which the Infidel carried off the palm. The Christians were jubilant at first, but now they are as quiet as lambs, and many feel that the elder has gone home "a wiser and a sadder man," while such remarks as the following hav been heard from some of them: "I do not like to say the Infidel won, but Dungan ought to hav come better prepared." After Jamieson had laid down some twenty principles of Liberalism, and accepted all the good things of the Bible, it was evident to a close observer that Dungan had struck something he was not looking for, while this position of the Infidel, as the exponent of Liberal principles, was a general surprise to the Christians, they believing, as they had been taught, that there was nothing good in Infidels, and their teachings were bad, and the burden of the elder's efforts was to try to sustain this prejudice in the minds of the people, but it was no go. Infidelity is much more respected and widely defused in this section than ever before, or would hav been by other means than the debate. The utter failure, by one of their best men, to successfully defend Christianity and the Bible against Liberalism has had a profound impression, and dealt a blow from which superstition in this section will never recover. They retaiued the elder for a week to try to heal up the wound by means of a revival, but the result was of little value to them. The subjects of the debate was: "Infidelity is better calculated to advance mankind physically, morally, and intellectually, than Christianity;" Jamieson affirmed. 2. "The Bible is the best guide in morals, and agrees with science;" Jamieson denied.

I like the idea of illustrating THE TRUTH SEEKER. The pictures contained in the last two issues will do more to diffiuse the true situation among the masses than the finest articles by our best writers. Count my vote as one for illustrations. Yours fraternally, DR. H. B. MAXWELL.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Our brethren of King Solomon's Lodge, of Toronto, Ont. (it seems from yours of December 5th), hav expelled one of their members for holding Agnostic views, and are sustained by the Graud Master, who, in turn, says he is sustained by grand lodges elsewhere.

Next W. C. Bryant, a master Mason of fourteen years' standing in Ithaca Lodge, writes a faithful and truthful criticism of the proceedings, and sends to the secretary of the Toronto Lodge. Next the master of this lodge sends a copy to the master of Ithaca Lodge, and Bryant is expelled.

Here it seems that Freemasonry and Freethought are up for trial, and the trial has come none too soon. These lodges assume that Freemasonry belongs to Christianity. This I deny. Freemasonry claims its birth long before that of Christianity. But even if it were older, it would hav no more right to control Masonry than to control the United States, formed long after Christianity was inaugurated.

Now, let me ask you, my dear brethren, did you ever understand that a belief in Christianity, or in a God, or any number of gods, was necessary in order to become a Mason?

Near sixty years ago I was made an Entered Apprentice Mason in Watertown, Jefferson county, N. Y., and in a few years raised to the Royal Arch. I never was a Christian. I never saw a God of any kind, and I never believed in one. As far as I know, the majority of Masons were not Christians.

Now, what is it best to do about it? Shall we commence a war for Masonry? Will it pay? Is it worth it? If we can't sustain it without fighting, let it go, or let the Christians hav it, for they are the bloodiest fighters in the world. Let us take an account of stock, and see if it is worth fighting for. What does Masonry claim? First, that it is the oldest institution in the world (the fig-leaf apron that Adam wore was a token of Freemasonry). Supposing it was, would that benefit us now? Are old things better than new? Are not railroads and telegraphs ahead of any and all previous institutions of the kind?

Freemasonry has boasted of its great charity to all, and especially to its own members and their families. Now, what are the facts? Are there no institutions being introduced among us as benevolent and useful as the Masonic?

I am obliged to say that I cannot recollect of our lodge ever giving one dollar to Masons, their families, or any other persons. The great sums paid into the lodges by the brethren are said to be squandered extravagantly and often in dissipation. Of this I know nothing personally, but fear there is too much truth in it. JOHN GAGE.

MINNEAPOLIS, KAN., Jan. 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The talented lecturer, J. E. Remsburg, favored us with three more lectures on the 16th, 17th, and 18th inst. On the last-named date we organized a Secular Society, and we are now ready to receive and distribute Secular literature.

I am in favor of a bold, vigorous, and steady advocacy of the Nine Demands. Liberals should unite into a harmonious union in behalf of these demands. Other questions may be discussed, but it is of paramount importance that we do not break off more than we carry, for too great a burden retards progress. After the Nine Demands triumph, other questions will receive more attention than it is wise to giv them now, in connection with the demands decided upon. It is important that we use wise discretion, and make our steps do efficient and progressiv work. The Nine Demands are just, and the introduction or association of other demands together with them would probably only serve to retard the advance of these special ones upon which so many truth seekers agree. Let us force these demands to an issue in state and national politics as quickly as possible. After this aim is accomplished, and the questions be in issue before the people, conservativ, non-committal policy men will be forced to lay aside their mask of deception and fear, and giv expression to their honest convictions, and our cause will at once become popular.

The pictorial feature of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a happy hit. The truth has been discovered; now illustrate it. Object lessons are quick education. WARREN REED, Sec. Minn. Secular Union.

OREGON, MO., Jan. 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The trouble with Lewis the Light (see issue of Jan. 16th) is that his story is not antique enough, although antic. Just wait long enough and his dreams, related as hearsay, will become fundamental to the faith of millions—for does not Christianity rest on the statement that Christ was, first, conceived by the Holy Ghost; second, born of the Virgin Mary? Withdraw those two, and what becomes of all the fabric of Christianity? Now, this story was floating around as hearsay when the men who penned the gospels seized on it. It will not be pretended that Christ is the witness, for even if he told it, he being authority, "his witness is untrue." It simply stands on a dream of the venerable Joseph, reported as hearsay. The dreams of the Uncle Joes of to-day who marry virgins and find them "great" are laughed at by the boys. So was this one's by his contemps. Shove a fancy back only a few generations and it becomes a solemn fact.

I particularly like our TRUTH SEEKER because it admits the freest discussion on all topics. A publisher myself, nothing pleases me better than for anyone to attack my most cherished opinions through my own paper. It is remarkable how few people comprehend Liberalism. Almost everybody defines orthodoxy as his own "doxy" and heterodoxy as some other man's "doxy," as the good bishop did. We all naturally incline to be narrow, and it requires trained effort to keep out of our selfish ruts. The art of logical discussion should be taught in our common schools, but it is now wholly neglected. Truly yours, CLARKE IRVINE.

BURR OAK, MICH., Jan. 25, 286.

MR. EDITOR: This is a country of free (?) speech and equal rights, and as an illustration of that fact let me tell the TRUTH SEEKER readers what happened here.

Burr Oak has a little weekly paper called the Acorn. In the issue of Jan. 21st there appeared a contribution from some raving Christian imbecil who asked for space to "giv a few thoughts in answer to the question which seems to arise in the minds of a great many people as to whether death is the end of this mortal career, or whether there is a life beyond." There was not a word in the article that even remotely approached an argument. It was simply an outburst of the stereotyped idiocy that may be heard at any revival. As an indication of the mental condition of the aforesaid contributor, I will quote this: "After having read the word of God, I found that it agreed with my experience, and for that reason I accepted it and firmly believe every word of it." And this: "When I talk of experience I know what I am talking about, and all the forces of the false teachers of this world and the regions of the damned could not blow it out of me." Here is another: "Is it any wonder that there are so many disbelievers, when we get from the pulpit that we cannot hav experimental knowledge of an instantaneous redemption from sin?" This is a slap at some preacher, but who he is I hav not yet learned. Other quotations appear in my answer. Of course I would not descend to a discussion with such a specimen of the genus homo (?), but as she, or it, had brought up the subject I thought it a good chance to encourage the people to giv it some special thought. That crushing article was signed, "A Well-Wisher." I wrote a brief reply and handed it to the publisher of the Acorn, at the same time asking him if he would publish it. After examining it, he declined, on the ground that it would hurt his business, at the same time stating that he had no personal objection to it whatever. I think it is high time that the Liberals of Burr Oak and vicinity should inform the Acorn man that he must either look to Christians and hybrids entirely for his support, or else publish a notice that no contribution will be received from anyone that touches on any religious question. It seems to me that the duty of Liberals in this vicinity is plain. I inclose the copy intended for publication in the Acorn, which please publish with this.

N. G. W.

THE LETTER.

ED. ACORN: Last week "A Well-Wisher" asked for a little space "to giv a few thoughts" in answer to a very important question. Well, I read the article through, but did not discover a single trace of a "thought" in answer to the question which the writer set out to discuss. A plain question then arose to my mind, namely, why did "Well-Wisher" ask for space for a certain purpose and then ignore that purpose entirely? "Well-Wisher" says, "I would simply say that death is not the end of life, but we hav a soul that will continue to liv through all eternity, either with God in heaven or with devils in hell." To "simply say" that is a very easy task indeed! It is "simply" a repetition of the Christian doctrin of future reward and punishment, and has been heard and read by almost every person in this country a thousand times before. But the writer of these lines, being a very humble and ignorant individual, desires to ask "Well-Wisher" whether she (no man ever wrote that communication) considers the above-quoted statement an answer to the question whether there is or is not a future life, a heaven and a hell? "Well-Wisher" declares positivly that no false teacher in this world or a hotter one can "blow" her experience out of her. If any person has been trying to blow experience or anything else out of "Well-Wisher," that person certainly ought to apologize for such rudeness, but still I can't see that any amount of blowing, on either side, proves anything. This article is not written for the purpose of denying any doctrin, nor for ridiculing the Christian or any other religion, but, being an anxious inquirer after truth, I simply ask that writers on all subjects shall giv what they believe to be sound reasons for their faith in any theory advanced by them. I ask this in the interest of all who are honestly seeking information. "Well-Wisher" also says, "I am neither a fanatic nor a fool." That may or may not be true. Unsupported by proof, it is open to question, but, whether true or not, it throws no ray of light on the question at issue. But I think the real animus of "Well-Wisher's" article is contained in the sentence that plainly implies strong censure of some member or members of the clergy. It is quite evident that, in "Well-Wisher's" opinion, some reverend gentleman has been preaching heretical doctrin and deserves a plain rebuke. Perhaps some minister will rise and throw some light on this point. It is of great interest, both to church-members and outsiders, to know whether "Well-Wisher's" implied charge against at least a part of the Christian ministry is or is not true. WELL-WISHER No. 2.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1886.

MR, EDITOR: The most interesting part of THE TRUTH SEEKER to me are its discussions, and in its impartiality it merits its name, and has my love and preference over all other publications. Perhaps the most interesting question it discusses is Spiritualism, and although it pains me to see the old spirit of intolerance pervades some of the correspondents, I read all, and would suggest to the participants: Giv us your best thought and most convincing argument; discussion evolves truth and ever results in good; a little ridicule may spice an article, but personal abuse is very poor argument. And while we claim the privilege to speak of Christianity as a fraud, and its ministers as humbugs and hypocrits, let us not get mad if our own pet theories are handled without gloves. This idea was suggested by reading the postscript of a late letter from our old friend, Seward Mitchell, wherein he speaks of that "fraud and trickster, Truesdell," and his exposure of Spiritualism as a "villainous affair." Now I sympathize with Brother Mitchell in many respects. But while granting Brother Mitchell the right to his ideas, and the expression of those ideas, as well as combating all ideas which he believes detrimental to his fellow-man, I must claim for myself, Mr. Truesdell, and all the rest, the same rights; and while I do not approve the tactics of Mr. Truesdell, I am aware that the opponents of slavery were not always particular as to the method they adopted. I would suggest to Brother Mitchell the magnanimity of A. Ward, when he says: "I will not call that man a liar and a hoss thief who says my show is a humbug." Brother Mitchell is an Anarchist. So am I, but warfare is against all authority, whether of this world or the world to come. For the life of me I cannot see why a man has not as good right to govern and control his fellow-man before as after death; and in this respect Spiritualism is slavery. Webster defines slavery as "the state of entire subjectiou of one person to the will of another." Is not this a definition of "spirit-control" for a practical demonstration? I would refer the reader to Dr. Chesebrough's article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 21, 1885, wherein he claims that Mr. Truesdell is acting under spirit control. Talk about the credulity of the fourteenth century! Can anything equal this? And yet it seems to be quite a general belief among Spiritualists. I hav in mind this moment a young man, son of wealthy Spiritualists, whose home has been the resort of the best mediumistic talent in the country. But with all his facilities for seeing and hearing, he is a Materialist and disbeliever in disembodied spirits. Of course the explanation is easy enough to his relativs and friends. One of those provoking "Diakkas," whose chief business in life, or death, rather, is to deny their own existence, has got hold of him. Not with so tenacious a grip, it would seem, as they hav on Truesdell; his respect for his parents and friends overcomes their evil influence to such an extent that he is enabled to keep quiet on the subject. I will not deny that it is

"A beautiful belief that ever round our head,
On angel wings, are hovering the spirits of the dead."

But when you come to "Diakkas," no, thanks! I'll take none in mine. Is it any wonder that a theory which leads to such a conclusion should excite no interest in scientific minds? Science is practical; what cannot be demonstrated cannot be utilized, and should be rejected. It is about as practicable as the god idea. My worthy relativ, a firm believer in "spirit power," tells me the wonders she has seen. A lily freshly plucked was thrown upon the table, a chunk of gold-bearing quartz dropped upon the table, being brought from mines in Nevada, I believe. Now I had been reading of a case of starvation in our city of plenty, and the idea was suggested, if gold could be brought from Nevada, or a lily from a neighboring conservatory, why not a loaf of bread from the baker's? But no, our spirits are too busy with the tricks of the cabinet. As Ingersoll said of God, "he is too busy watching the sparrows fall and numbering the hairs of our head to succor the needy." Ah! but the "conditions" were not favorable; our spirit friends can only act under certain conditions. Just so; then our spirit friends must enjoy themselvs hugely in the "summer-land," with their hands tied and their friends starving. I hav no evidence as to the truth or falsity of Spiritualism; I believe it to be the twin of witchcraft; both the children of Christianity and the Bible, and probably just as true as any of its systems of theology.

Dio Lewis says: "All Christians believe that the spirit livs after the body, and it is a precious tenet of their faith that their departed ones are 'ministering spirits,' ever watching over their earth friends. Spiritualists say that they believe this Christian faith is true, and they add that they believe these ministering spirits can and do speak to us. This would hardly seem to be an unpardonable departure from the Christian faith. The bitterness of Christians toward Spiritualists is queer." And, I would add, the bitterness of Spiritualists toward Christians seems a little unfilial, to say the least.

Notwithstanding Brother Mitchell regards Materialism as cold, and dark, and dreary, it seems to me to be the only sure foundation; and if we cannot build thereon pleasures sufficient unto this life, who's to blame? The prospect, as Mrs. Besant says, "may not be as wide as that seen from the mountain of faith, but then it is solid ground, while the other is a mirage;" and, unless it is better to believe a falsehood that promises great joy than accept the truth without any promises, it seems to me we should study, investigate, and extract what joy we may from the known, and not speculate on or trust in the unknown. Yet I am aware that

"Faith, fanatic faith, once wedded fast
To some sweet falsehood, hugs it to the last."

I would not disturb the faith, if I could, or lessen the comfort of Brother Mitchell in his hopes of immortality; I only ask his patience and forbearance when I express the groveling wish to be at rest when I die. Like Shakspere's cobbler, I would "meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor woman's matters," after passing to that "undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns."

And it would seem that I am not alone in this. The Buddhists, we are told, take comfort in their hopes of annihilation. Think of it, brother. It is enough to giv one the ague entirely. Millions on their knees praying for eternal rest and oblivion after death.

"That which began in him when he began
Is finished; he hath wrought the purpose through
Of what did make him man.
Never shall yearnings torture him, nor sins
Stain him, nor ache of earthly joys and woes
Invade his safe eternal peace; nor deaths
And lives recur. He goes
Unto Nirvana. He is one with life,
Yet livs not. He is blest, ceasing to be.
. . . The dewdrop slips
Into the shining sea."

In the same paper that Dr. Chesebrough outlines some of the teachings of Spiritualism, Brother Mitchell says, "There never was a Spiritualist—no, not one—who ever taught the doctrin, Believe or be damned." Then follow these words which I emphasize, "If human brotherhood ever comes to this earth it will be by the teachings of Spiritualism, or it will never come." This may not mean "believe or be damned," but it is evident we must believe or not be blessed—with human brotherhood.

Shakspere's Portia says, "I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teachings." I think it is so with Spiritualists. At least I hav seen no evidence in their gatherings and conventions which leads me to believe that universal brotherhood depends upon universal Spiritualism. Brother Mitchell givs expression to that superiority which is the boast of all systems of religion. Christ said his teachings must be accepted or "hell would be to pay."

I regard Spiritism as mental slavery, and, therefore, degrading; as a cloak for devi try, and, therefore dangerous; as impracticable, and, therefore, useless.

As Ingersoll says: "I attack the monsters, the phantoms of imagination, that hav ruled the world; I attack slavery; I ask for room for the human mind. . . Why should we enslave ourselvs? Why should we be the slaves of phantoms —phantoms that we create ourselvs? The darkness of barbarism was the womb of these shadows. In the light of science they cannot cloud the sky forever. I plead for light, for air, for opportunity. I plead for individual independence. I plead for the rights of labor, and of thought. I plead for a chainless future. Let the ghosts go—justice remains. Let them disappear—men, women, and children are left. Man is greater than these phantoms. Humanity is grander than all the creeds, than all the books. Humanity is the sky, and these religions, and dogmas, and theories, are but the mists and clouds, changing continually, destined to melt away. Let the ghosts go, we will worship them no more. Let them cover their eyeless sockets with their fleshless hands, and fade forever from the imagination of men."

A. L. BALLOU.

LOTUS, CAL., Jan. 3, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $6. Apply $3 on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, the best paper published, and apply balance as per inclosed list, and if there is any change coming, send small missionary documents to balance. With best wishes for the success of your paper and all connected with it, I am, as ever,

Yours truly, G. W. RAMSEY.

EL PASO, TEXAS, Jan. 14, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed fifty cents for two copies of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886, and one dollar for some of the smaller Truth Seeker Tracts.

The Freethinkers of this town, or at least a few of them, are now making arrangements to get Mr. J. D. Shaw, of Waco, Texas, to deliver a course of lectures here. Texan Liberals should organize local societies wherever possible, and induce this gentleman to make a lecturing tour all through the state. Mr. Shaw is editor and publisher of a Liberal monthly paper, the Independent Pulpit, which should be on the reading table of all Secular societies in America, and in every Seeular home. The subscription for one year is one dollar.

If the Secularists of the South were better organized we could also get some of the northern Liberal lecturers to visit us, Mr. S. P. Putnam having already promised to do so, and I hav reason to believe that Mr. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich., could be induced to come amongst us "preaching the good word." By the by, how is it that Mr. Burnham's name is not oftener mentioned in THE TRUTH SEEKER? I consider him one of the best lecturers we hav, especially well versed on scientific subjects, and is well able to make the latter understood by persons who hav not studied such previously. I think our friends of Pittsburgh and Toronto, who had the benefit of his lectures during last winter, will support these statements. CHAS. PETERS.

BURR OAK, MICH., Jan. 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $10.10, which please apply according to the accompanying order. And while I hav my pen in hand, I will, as you requested some time since your patrons should do, express my opinion upon the propriety of illustrating THE TRUTH SEEKER.

My humble and individual opinion is that the space occupied by the pictures would be better used in pen illustrations and exposures of the many religious and superstitious evils and tyranny yet in practice in all the Christian lands, and especially so, if by so doing it would increase the price of the paper, which is already of such dimensions that it too often proves to be a wall that one can neither climb over, break through, or go round, when soliciting new subscribers. My voice, however, is but one, and that a small one. As I hav taken a through ticket I shall not disembark or change pilots until I land at my final and everlasting resting-place, which cannot be far distant, as I hav already seen threescore and fourteen summers. Yours ever for the right,

M. P. THURSTON.

[It is a mistake to suppose that the price of subscription to this paper is to be raised on account of the illustrations; it will remain the same, and reference to our terms on another page will show how to get the paper very cheap.—ED. T. S.]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 28, 1886.

Mr. EDITOR: TRUTH SEEKER ANNUALS for 1886 at hand. In my humble opinion they are splendidly got up. And I think they will hav a large sale among the Freethinkers throughout the country. If I could not get another I would not sell mine at ten times its cost. I prize it highly for the pictures it contains of our real saviors of humanity.

GEO. LONGFORD.

SMITHVILLE FLATS, N. Y., Jan. 15, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $6.25—$3 for myself another year; $2 for the new subscriber, which I donate to illustrate your paper; 50 cents for Helen H. Gardener's new book, "Men, Women, and Gods;" 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886, or last year's, if it is better than this, or both if you choose; and 50 cents for "Sabbath-Breaking" and "Bible Morals," both by John E. Remsburg.

I can cheerfully join with others in saying I am pleased with the paper and think it is improving. The illustrations are perfect; the expressions of the faces portray the exact feeling designed. When Mr. Bennett started around the world I made him a present of $10, I think, and donated two new subscribers, one of which you will probably always keep. The other was the Universalist minister that married us in church, a kind-hearted fellow, and I thought he would take it kindly, but I hav lost his friendship for life. So you see they feel just as badly about having the Bible fraud exposed to the rising generation as the rabid orthodox do. Science is king, and I rejoice that it is being unfolded so fast. 'Tis cheering to notice, too, the approach of woman's emancipation. Many years ago I said, Now that the black slave is free, why not emancipate the white ones—the mother, wife, and sister of our law-making men, and all others? It is so humiliating not to be represented anywhere, when all that is noble and good in humanity ebbs and flows through woman! The mother is the world's champion umpire to-day (if they only knew it, and what a pity they do not!), and time will define it so. One thing more. I am sorry that the Liberal element is not all of the same good quality, so it can blend more harmoniously in every part of the work. I care not what name they go by, only that they be honest, virtuous, true, and good. I never thought that to be truly Liberal we would hav to indorse the unclean or anything that shocked our sense of propriety. Sincerely, M. M. T.

MAMMOTH HOT SPRINGS, WY. TER., Jan 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan 16th came to-night. I take back all I may hav said derogatory of an illustrated TRUTH SEEKER. "The Spider and the Fly" is splendid. Our whole house was in rapture over it. "Cute and it cuts," said one. "A black hole of despair." The words of Castelar were quoted: "The Rome of Cæsars would hav made the whole world a camp. The Rome of the popes would hav made the whole world a monastery." Watson Heston has our most hearty thanks. Let us hav more. I will try and get more subscribers.

Your editorial on Mormonism is "away up." The boomerang will hit more than Mormonism. I am glad you gave the "yeas" and "nays." We will see what the House will do with it. Keep to the high altitude of constitutional freedom for all. The Mormon who marries is a thousand times better than the Mormon of New York city who seduces and then abandons his victim to be trodden under foot. THE TRUTH SEEKER is more than a truth seeker, it is the justice seeker.

Very sincerely yours, G. L. HENDERSON.

DENVER, COL., Jan. 19, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3.00 for dear old TRUTH SEEKER for present year. The pictures are grand, "The Spider and the Fly" is so realistic that one shudders as one beholds. The picture speaks volumes. Mr. Heston's pencil is doing brave work; the same amount of space for the pen could not tell "the old, old story," one half so well.

"The Maneuvers of the Last Hour!" was there ever such a grim sarcasm on je donne à l'eglise?" In these two pictures our "Christian friends" hav a most direct and concise answer to Robbie Burns's prayer,

"O wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us."

May this New Year hold much of good for THE TRUTH SEEKER, its workers and friends, is the warm wish of MRS. BUCKNER-JOHNSON, M.D.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., Jan. 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me the inclosed list of books, pamphlets, etc., an order which we hope to supplement by a larger one after we are organized, as we expect to be by the time Mr. Reynolds reaches here with the stereopticon next month. I received your blanks, and will endeavor to increase the circulation of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER.

The illustrations are splendid. They speak volumes. One thing more and your paper would be perfect—namely, an index to the articles. It is growing with me to be more indispensable every week. I keep a very few—send them all out to do missionary work, together with pamphlets, leaflets, etc.

As a sample of the intellectual food our young are being fed with see the following: A few weeks ago the Presbyterians of this city got a new minister, the Rev. Dr. Archibald, a young man, who, in a sermon to young men, "unguardedly," in eulogizing the power and influence of Christianity, among other things equally false, said: "Nine new churches in America every day throughout the year were dedicated to the cause of Christ, and not one temple that he could remember reared by Infidels dedicated to the goddess of unreason. One in Boston and one in New York had been opened some time ago; both were now closed—the former sold under the hammer of the sheriff. And he knew of no other temple dedicated to the dissemination of Infidel principles." Again: "Where were the colleges, asylums, refuges, and orphanages started by Infidels? Nowhere! Philanthropic work and the work of raising fallen man were done only by the followers of Christ."

I, in an open letter (published in same paper his sermon was published), the day following, challenged him to—either through the press or on public platform—meet a representativ Infidel and produce evidence of the truth of his false assertions. Touching the philanthropy of Infidels, also of the sale of the Paine Memorial Hall, etc., I said the Paine Memorial Hall was still owned by Infidels; meetings held there every Sunday, two and three together, with meetings through the week. The Boston Investigator published in that building. There was also a large stone hall built and owned by Infidels, and dedicated to the Goddess of (Un) Reason in the town of Alton, Ont. I also gave that list of Infidel charities published in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, and closed by saying: "If the other parts of your sermon bear the same relation to truth as those parts I hav criticized, I leave an intelligent public to judge its value."

To say that my letter raised a commotion among the "unco' guid" is putting it mildly. I hav been congratulated by more than one Christian for having published my letter, but not a sound has been introduced by this true disciple of Paul, this lying, false coward of the coward's castle, who believes in lying for the glory of God. But, as I believe, a white-headed follower of Christ anonymously replied with the "Mary Roscoe story" of the horrid death-bed scenes and recantation of Thomas Paine. I replied to him, asking him to, over the name his father gave him, repeat the above as true, and I would prove this equally as false as I had the assertions of Dr. Archibald. That gun, too, is spiked now. Mr. Archibald has not had the honesty or gentlemanly principle to say he was misinformed, or challenge the truth of my statements and figures. The reason is obvious.

In conclusion, I heartily indorse every word of the article by W. F. Jamieson in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 9th. We must capture the young before reason can ever occupy the position now occupied by superstition.

Yours, for the abolition of Bible reading and other religious exercises from our public schools, D. NEILSON.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Be True.

Young friends, to whom life's early days
Are bright with promis all,
And to whose view the glowing rays
Of hope uncloüded fall;
To counsel each to choose the good,
Throughout the coming years, I would
A precept giv to you:
Observe, if you success would win,
The wealth of worth embodied in
Two little words: Be true.

Be true to right: let justice still
Her even balance claim;
Unawed, unbribed, through good or ill,
Make rectitude your aim.
Unswayed by prejudice, thy mind
Each day submitted claims will find
To champion or deny;
Then cast, acording to thy light,
Thy influence on the side of right,
Though all the world goes by.

Be true to truth: the proudest name
That sterling worth may win
Is soiled and tarnished past reclaim
Where falsehood enters in.
No gem that arduous toil may find,
In learning's fields, adorns the mind
Like truth's pure, shining ray.
And from her presence error's crowds
Of worshipers disperse like clouds
Before the rising day.

Be true to reason: let her light
Be ever glorified.
And make through life her beacon bright
A fixed, enduring guide;
False views of life young faith may blind,
False creeds allure the youthful mind
And its adherence win,
But reason's steady light to thee
An oracle of truth shall be—
A monitor within.

Be true to self-respect: the world
May judge thy motivs wrong,
And slander's poisoned shafts be hurled
Where virtue moves along.
Keep thou the upright ways that find
The approval of thy own good mind—
"To thine own self be true;"
So shalt thou proudly walk erect,
And, conscious of thy own respect,
Make others' honor due.

These are the virtues, these the ways,
That bring their own reward;
And to observe them all thy days
Keep constant watch and guard.
He who from these his guidance takes
Givs to the race the hope that makes
The march of man sublime;
And each good deed, each wrong withstood,
Livs, in its influence for the good,
Throughout all coming time!

Middle Falls, N. Y. D. LOUIS BODGE.

A Boy's Fortune; or, the Sign of the Golden Sheep.

Once there was a boy who, when about fifteen years old, thought he would like to go and seek his fortune. He lived on a little farm with his parents and brothers and sisters, away down in Maine, and the big, bustling, far-off world appeared very bright and dazzling to his boyish eyes. He hungered to see it, to be one in the great, stirring, toiling mass of mankind; and, besides, he wanted an education, a better education than he could get working on the farm, with only a few montlis' schooling each year.

Perhaps you will think it very hard that his father wanted two hundred dollars in money for his time till twenty-one, if he went away, but that was the custom of those days, and the boy agreed to pay his father that sum for the chance of seeing the world and earning his own living. This boy had never worn any other than homespun clothing, that is, clothes spun and woven into cloth by his mother at home. His wardrobe was not extensiv, either, for it was all tied up in a handkerchief, and that was homespun, too, when he started out to seek his fortune.

A brother took him in a sleigh fifteen miles on his journey, then bade him good-bye, and left him to pursue his way on foot to Portland, then fifty-four miles distant. On he trudged with stout heart, for he was young and brave, and was on a voyage of discovery.

"Why didn't he ride?" you ask. Well, he had only nine dollars and he wanted to be prudent and make his money go as far as he could.

One night he slept in a hotel, and breakfasted the next morning early on crackers and milk; but, after traveling awhile, he was so hungry that he had to hav a more substantial breakfast, which he obtained at Gorham Corners; then on he went again, getting quite tired and weary, but never losing hope or courage, all the way to Portland, where he engaged passage on a steamer for Boston, as this place was the Mecca of his hopes.

His scanty purse was almost depleted when he arrived there. The streets were full of people and everything was new and strange. He applied again and again for some work to do, but the brown-eyed, flaxen-haired boy, in his homespun jacket, stood a poor chance in a big city where there were plenty of boys with friends to help them to chances.

His father had often told the children at home about the time when he had worked for a morocco dresser in Cambridge, who had for a sign a golden sheep. That sign had often glittered before the boy's eyes, and now seemed to lure him on like a star of promis. So on he pressed toward the sign of the golden sheep, which he found readily enough, still swinging and sparkling in the sunlight.

"My father worked here once," he thought. "Surely they will be glad to hav his son work for them."

But no—they didn't want any more help; and what did they care for the son of a former workman?

The golden sheep lost its fascination as he turned disconsolately away. He would be so glad to work—to do anything he could get to do. His money was all gone, too, and he was hungry and cold, and nobody can wonder if he was a little homesick and lonely. After a while he did find employment, but he fainted at his task, having been long without food and comfortable shelter. Of course, they did not want a sick boy to work, and again he started on a search for employment. In a factory where hinges were made he was asked,

"Can you make hinges?"

"Yes," was the quick reply; "if somebody will show me how to make one hinge."

He required but little showing, and soon made a hinge to suit, but the old workman appearing at the forge, there was no place for him, and he again started in search of honest labor.

Sometimes he found what he sought for a short period, and once a dishonest employer wronged him out of a whole month's pay, which was a serious loss to one whose time was actual bread and butter. These were dark and troubled days, but the brave boy never once lost his courage or faith in ultimate success.

From town to town he wandered, pleading for work of any kind. One Sunday found the young hero, tired and hungry, in the town of Abington. The rosy diadem of the great world had almost grown to a crown of thorns that pierced his brow as he looked into the many strange faces on their way to church or Sunday-school. Finally he met an old gentleman whose face shone kindly beneath his broad-brimmed Quaker hat, and he ventured to ask him if he knew where a boy could find employment. He did know, and directed him to a manufacturer of shoes.

The manufacturer, whose name was Shaw, and his wife received the weary stranger pleasantly, and promised him work on the morrow. He staid in this place quite a while, and learned to make shoes. Industrious and prudent, in two years he had saved two hundred dollars to pay his father, and had something left beside.

Do you think he had forgotten his plan of an education? By no means. Soon he became a student at Gould's Academy, three miles from his old home, to and from which he walked to school, learning his lessons on the way, and by candle-light at home. He had to pay his board, for his father was verv strict in money matters, but when his money was exhausted he went to work and earned more.

With him difficulties existed to be overcome, and right bravely did he surmount them all.

In his heart, quick to feel for others' woes, was implanted sympathy for the toilers of earth, and for the down-trodden and oppressed of all natious. He became, as he grew into manhood, interested in the antislavery movement, and, in the face of severe opposition of friends and kindred, he boldly spoke ringing words for the enslaved, declaring their equal right to liberty and happiness.

This then unpopular doctrin repelled many from him, but he knew he was right, and bravely pursued his way, finished his course at school, studied law, and, mastering it, was straightway admitted to practice in the courts. The storms still beat upon him, however, for where they raged the hardest there he chose to be, battling ever for truth and freedom. Those who know him best loved and trusted him most. His unswerving honesty gained him choice friends, and when his old employer, Mr. Shaw, died the final settling of his estate was placed in the young lawyer's hands as one worthy of all confidence and trust. Other business of a like character has been entrusted to him, and every duty was discharged with the utmost fidelity. Once a mob surrounded his house, clamorous for a slave woman who was stopping there on her way from slavery to Canada and freedom. Calmly this heroic gentleman met the furious crowd and sent them quietly away.

So emphatic was he against another kind of slavery—that of intoxicating liquor—that three times the adherents of whisky and the dram-shops set his house on fire.

A short timé since he was nominated for representativ to Congress, and had he been elected no braver, truer man would hav met him on the floor of the nation's capitol. Now I hav been telling you of no fictitious character, but of a real, living man, who has arisen from homespun and a lowly condition to a position of eminence and trust. How did he do it? I'll tell you. By patience, perseverance, energy; by integrity, sobriety, honesty, and a correct and honorable dealing with all persons. The sign of the golden sheep, that lured him on in boyhood, has lost its gleam and brightness before a more beautiful, more glittering symbol—the sign of the golden truth—that has never left him for a day or an hour.

In the glory and splendor of mature life he is awake to every movement that would benefit humanity, and is quick to catch the inspiration of each passing hour. The working man has no better, no truer friend on earth, and "the cause that lacks assistance" need never look to him in vain. He is one of the true and noble men who make the world better for living in it. His fortune is in the virtues, the qualities that belong to a true manhood, and his example is a beacon light to travelers on life's highway. If you should go to Chicago, where he livs, I hav no doubt he would be glad to see you, and tell you more of his eventful history. His name is A. J. Grover.

Her Picture.

It is framed in satin and cherry,
And stands on a shelf in my room;
The eyes are as brown as a berry,
With a sparkle that scatters the gloom.

In the cheeks there's a hint of a dimple,
And a gracefulness lies over all,
From the make of the bonnet, so simple,
To the knob on the blue parasol.

The face is as fair and as sunny
As the figure is stately and bold,
And when I am counting my money
I reckon her in as pure gold.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—A METAMORPHOSIS—AND AN INFERENCE.

Let two score men and two
Stand in a line to view,
If from their midst one go away,
There's not a single man to stay;
For metamorphosed now they stand,
Just two score ladies in a band.
Nine tailors go a man to make—
To form one woman here you take
One man and just one fortieth more,
Or forty-one to make two score.
"Logic is logic"—so say I,
"And figures," so they say, "can't lie;"
Letters to form the words combine,
Each written word truth's visual sign—
Yet so am I, a man of beard,
By these smooth-faced Delilahs sheared.

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

2.—What is the difference between six dozen dozen and a half dozen dozen?

WM. SCOTT.

3—REBUS.

The central picture represents a familiar household vessel, and the surrounding objects, what it might contain.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 23, 1886.

1.—No. 2.—Haslet. 3.—John E. Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking." 4.—2560. 5.—Minie—rifle.

SOLVERS.—Edward Bamback, G. W. Williams, Wm. Scott.

J. K. P. B.—Your answer to "Something to Think About" is too long and too metaphysical for the minds of our children. "Little craft must keep near the shore."—ED. C. C.

Correspondence.

THOROLD, ONT., Jan. 18, 1886.

MISS SUSAN WIXON, Dear Madam: I hav seen so many little pieces in the Children's Corner that I thought I would send one too. I take great pleasure in looking at those funny pictures of people with horns and tails, the like of which I never saw before. This is my first time of writing to you, so I will close.

Yours truly, JOHNNY MOGILL.

COLON, MICH., Jan. 18, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I liv with my grandpa and grandma, and grandpa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a good many years. And we all like it ever so much. I read the Children's Corner; and I see so many letters from the little ones, and as you allowed Uncle John in the Children's Corner, and as I am nine years old, I thought you would allow me there too. My parents liv ten miles away in the country on a farm, and I stay here so I can go to school. We had two weeks' vacation through the holidays, and father came after us so we could spend the holidays over at home. We had a nice time. I hav a little brother, who will be six years old the 22d of February; and I hav a little sister, who will be two years old in June. We all had lots of presents at Christmas time. The baby's stockings were such tiny things she borrowed a pair of grandma's and got them full to the top. We think she is very cunning. She talks a little, and when she wants anything to eat she says, "Please, ma, pie."

Now, if you think this nice enough to put in the paper, I hope to see it there. Please find inclosed one of my cards. Yours truly,

FRANOIS B. CORNWALL.

LIBERTY, MO., Jan. 22, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I read in THE TRUTH SEEKER that you liked for girls and boys to write to you, and so I thought I would write a few lines. I am eleven years old. I go to the public school. I liv close to school. I hav recited several speeches taken from THE TRUTH SEEKER. I once took one to my teacher and she said it was not suitable for me; I asked her why, but she did not say why. I liv in the shadow of Williams Jewell College, where they manufacture Baptist preachers. There are few Liberals here, and we hav a hard road to travel. I am in the fifth reader. I like my teacher, though she is a Christian lady. We hav entertainments the end of every month. My pa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER several years, and I like to read the Children's Corner. We girls hav a nice time sliding and skating, for we hav plenty of snow this winter. I believe I hav written enough.

Yours respectfully, NELLIE HAYES.

GATES, TENN., Jan. 19, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to you. I am just thirteen years old. I am not experienced in writing letters. Pa is the only man in Gates that takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is only lately that I got interested in it. I like to read the Children's Corner very much; it is very interesting. There are not many that can be persuaded to read it, but pa loans his papers out sometimes, when he can persuade people to read them. If this escapes the waste basket I will try and write again, and will do better next time. Yours truly,

HARRY J. WINMAN.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,

Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE CANARY. A New and Remarkable Work on the Care of the Pet Canary. By mail, 50 cents. Contents table mailed free. Lady Agents Wanted. Murray Hill Publishing Co., 129 East 28th Street, New York.
3t4

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Weland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 4-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

PERSONAL.

A man 42 years of age, a Liberal, not wealthy, but having some means, would like to correspond with some lady who is also a Liberal, not over 35, of good family, fair education, and willing to work. Best of references given and required. Object, marriage. Address C. W. P.,
Care TRUTH SEEKER office,
2t4 33 Clinton Place, New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

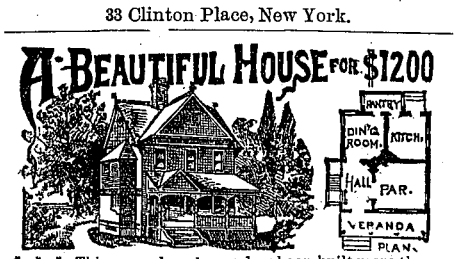
Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-paged colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents by



THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl or shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION,
(Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.

An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY

O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priets's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav these busts.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.
SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents.

10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WOMAN.
In the Past, Present, and Future.

BY A. BEBEL.

Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.

"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 27 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.

"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.

LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
Price, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.
For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, Now York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

Poetry.

The Village Oracle.

Beneath the weather-beaten porch
That shades the village store
He sits at ease, an aged man
Of three-score years or more.
That ample seat for him is placed
Beside the open door.

His face is very keen and shrewd,
And piercing are his eyes,
As with an air of prophecy
He scans the cloudy skies;
And children look with awe on him,
For he is weather-wise.

And jolly farmers, riding by
On loads of fragrant hay,
Call out, "Good morning, Uncle Dan!"
And, "Will it rain to-day?"
While boys who would a-fishing go
Await what he will say.

"Wall, ef the wind should change about
[They listen eagerly,
But he is very slow and calm,
For thus should prophets be]
Mebbe them clouds will bring us rain,
But I dunno," says he.

And ever, as the seasons come,
And as the seasons go,
The oracle is asked the signs
Of wind, or rain, or snow;
But still he never hesitates
To answer, "I dunno!"

Gold.

Man's evil passions gave to gold
The mighty charm it claims to hold.
Vice and gold, both hand in hand,
Receive the homage of the land,
While simple virtue's honest face
Can find on earth no resting-place.

Saints and sinners fight and pray—
The prize is gold, gold alway.
They ask a blessing from above,
And yet they make their god of love
Pave the streets of his abode
With sordid, vile, accursed gold.

Gold that crowds the church's aisles,
Gold that builds sin's stately piles,
Gold for love, gold for hate,
Gold for pride, gold for state,
Gold for sickness, gold for health,
Gold for life, gold for death!

Gold that fires the murderer's brain,
Gold that breaks the captiv's chain,
Gold that turns young hearts to stone,
Gold that blights where'er 'tis known,
Gold to barter, gold to sell,
Gold for heaven, gold for hell!

—J. H. Hollins.

Book Notices.

HELEN H. GARDENER, My Friend for Freedom: If I could speak the words in my heart after reading your new book, "Men, Women, and Gods," which you so thoughtfully and kindly sent me, how gladly would I proclaim them to the world, with the hope that all the ideals your fancy has pictured, and all the good your heart has wished for, might become realisties. It is not needed that the genius of the young womanly woman be praised, whose fair hand has showered upon the pate of superstition such golden nuggets of truth, for it is so emphatically apparent in and between the lines that unbiased intelligence will be delighted and feasted.

I hav read no work for years with so much pleasure and satisfaction.

"Historical Facts and Theological Fictions," the last lecture in the book, I had the pleasure of listening to at the Albany Convention.

Prior to reading "Men, Women, and Gods" I thought I hated superstition, believed myself versed in the so-called sacred writ, and alive to its errors and fanaticisms; flattered myself that I entertained grand ideals of man and his possibilities to an exalted estate on earth without the assistance of faith in the unknowable; supposed I was in favor of every liberty for woman which her advanced intelligence could conceive, and her purity of heart and purpose could desire; believed I saw the necessity of checking the encroachments of priestcraft upon mental and physical liberty; and I felt that I knew the ethics of humanity to be a grander and more comforting a theme to base a religion upon than faith in the efficacy of vicarious atonements. But now I hav taken a step in advance, and feel stronger and happier than before. I would that every human being could and would understandingly read "Men, Women, and Gods." Very truly,

LUCIUS C. WEST ("Uncle Lute").

MR. EDITOR: I hav just read with much satisfaction one of your latest publications, "Men, Women, and Gods," by Miss Helen H. Gardener. The introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll is pointed with facts and rounded with grace, and he is there, as everywhere else, on the side of justice and humanity. What do women not owe him for the death-blows he has dealt their masters—gods, priests, and church?

Like him does Miss Gardener launch out into the sea of wrongs in which womanhood struggles—reaching out her small but steady hand to rescue her sisters from the false education and religion which enslave them. Her stories of the cruelties inflicted on her sex by those twin monsters, church and priest, are horrible enough to open the eyes of the dead, and her statements are backed with proof which all intelligent people must accept. Yet so dead are many to the physical, mental, and spiritual outrages perpetrated upon them by man that they will not realize their position, even when so fully explained. Her statements are so comprehensiv that her readers hav no excuse for stumbling blindfold over the world any more. If this brave little author could only make the knowledge of the truths regarding woman's position fashionable, how rapidly eyesight and understanding would improve! For another evil of our false education is that fashion must reign though reason be stultified. Alas! for the weakness of human nature! We all hav our infirmities, but I am thankful that among my own I cannot class the Christian superstition. I am no idolater, and worship neither man nor man-made gods.

Miss Gardener's book is peculiarly fascinating and brilliant; forcible enough to be masculin, yet delicate and modest enough to be womanly in the truest sense of the word; combining sufficient of the male and female characteristics to make a perfect success of her work. I am proud of the production because it was written by one of my own sex. Could I hav my wish, every woman in America should own a copy, and all the clergy should hear it read aloud by a woman, just before their sermons were delivered. I think it would be a great inspiration(?) in their work.

I am so pleased myself with "Men, Women, and Gods" that I fear I hav monopolized too much of your valuable space, but my appreciation of Miss Gardener's work must be my excuse. Truly,

Cairo, Ill. AMARALA MARTIN.

Mr. John E. Remsburg, the well-known author and lecturer, of Atchison, has favored the Gazetteer with a copy of his new book, entitled, "The Sunday Question." This is the most exhaustiv treatis on the origin and history of the Sabbatic idea as applied to the observance of one day in seven, especially in its application to the first day of the week, that has come under our observation. Most of us were taught, when children, that the "Sabbath-breaker" was an awful criminal; to play on Sunday was not to be tolerated a moment, and we would not hav been surprised to hav seen the boy or girl who did visited by some dire calamity for so grievously tempting providence. And yet how few are aware that there is no command in the New Testament to observe Sunday as a holy or even a rest day! To Constantine and the pagan priests who preceded him, and subsequently to the edicts of the Catholic church, are we indebted for this custom of resting and worshiping on "the glorious day of the sun." Paul did not require his followers to observe the Jewish Sabbath, which he said was done away with under the new dispensation, and he knew no Sunday Sabbath. The fragments of Jesus's teachings that hav come down to us contain nothing that would indicate he considered one day any more holy than another, while he was an open violator of the Jewish Sabbath. There is no question about Sunday having been a great holiday with all nations whose religion was Sabian in its origin. The several days of the week were dedicated to the seven planets, Saturday to Saturn, Sunday to the sun, Monday to the moon, etc., and the evil influences believed to emanate from Saturn the Greater Infortunate, as he was termed, in all probability gave rise to the custom of refraining from all labor on that day. But the subject cannot be properly discussed in a brief newspaper article. We advise those who wish to pursue the investigation to read Mr. Remsburg's book. It can be had of the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, New York. Price 25 cents.—Dennison Sunday Gazetteer.

"Intellectual Development," by G. F. Rinehart, of Colfax, Ia., is an interesting, comprehensiv, and well-written book. Few will begin it without reading to the very end and wishing for more.

It commences the childhood of the race and follows the intellectual growth of each nation, showing the causes why and causes why not. It is a thoroughly Materialistic work. Speaking of the pioneers of human thought, he says: "Darwin, the true child of Nature, and one who knew more about his mother than any other child she ever had, has contributed more toward an intelligent solution of the 'whence' of human existence than all other thinkers who lived and died. Twenty-two years of thoughtful silence was required for the maturity of his 'Origin of Species,' but his book stands. He builded better than he knew, and to-day his theory of 'development' has passed into established science. It is maintained by every thinker of consequence on the globe. The time is near at hand when to deny evolution will be as idiotic as to deny the rotundity of the earth."

"The doctrin of 'development' was approached by Lucretius. It lingered in the dreams of Epicurus. It was a possible phantom in the mind ot Bruno. Aristotle had proclaimed it, Goethe had attained it, and Lamarck, Wolff, Wallace, and Spencer had superseded Darwin in its application and enunciation. Evolution is not new. It is just newly established. No one ever brought to it the mass of information accumulated by Darwin.

"None had removed it from the realms of necessary demonstration to the domain of established science.

"The doctrin of evolution is now an established fact. Darwin, Huxley, and Haeckel made it so."

Indeed, I hav marked so much of the book as excellent that I hardly know where to stop quoting. Yet I must giv a few ideas more, showing that matter is all there is:

"Creation is the result of the inherent properties of matter. Matter and force are one and inseparable, and 'force' is just as much a property of matter as form, density, or inertia. . . . Mind is molecular motion in the brain, or 'nerve force.' Each thought is accompanied by a disturbance and readjustment of the molecules of the brain."

I hope friends will order this epitome of the development of the minds of humanity from the Truth Seeker Company, and scatter the books far and wide as an antidote to the theologies and mythologies of the world, as well as spiritologies. Price 25c., and well worth it. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson and Unbeliever Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

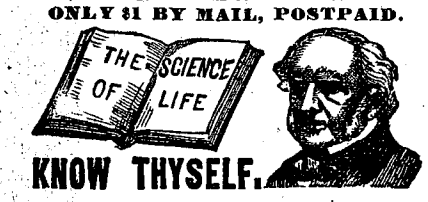
Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged, and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50 or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price, only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissel, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bullfinch St., Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

SCIENCE OF LIFE
KNOW THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

News of the Week.

According to the Hawkinsville News there are eight times as many bow-legged men as women.

A church in Westfield, Mass., is giving chromos as an inducement for outsiders to attend the evening services.

The bankers and some others are making war on the Bland silver dollar because it contains only .79.50 worth of silver.

All the theaters in Cincinnati, O., except two were closed last Sunday through the intervention of the "Law and Order League."

Dr. J. M. Gorman, a well-known physician of Nashville, Tenn., cut his throat last Saturday and lay down in bed beside his wife to die.

The breaking of a levee on Roberts Island, Cal., flooded 35,000 acres of land, 12,000 of which was in wheat. The damage is estimated at $600,000.

Four men were hanged at Warsaw, in Russia, on the 29th of January. Their crime was belonging to a society called the Proletariate, which is composed of Socialists.

Members of the Salvation Army at Joliet, Ill., hav been arrested for disturbing the public peace. They raise the cry of religious persecution, and receive some sympathy.

Mrs. Bayard, wife of Thomas F. Bayard, secretary of state, died in Washington, Jan. 31st. Her death was caused by the shock of her daughter's sudden death two weeks ago.

Ex-Banker Fish is out of the Auburn prison on a vacation, and is stopping in expensiv rooms at the Murray Hill Hotel. He is needed as a witness in a case soon to be tried.

Fire-engine No. 7 in this city has a diploma in its house showing that it can hitch up and get on the way to a fire in 1⅛ seconds, beating the best records of other engins by one-half of a second.

An absurd bill has been introduced into the Connecticut legislature, the object of which is to prohibit saloon-keepers from having a screen next to the bar to hide persons from sight from the street.

The Rev. George F. Babbitt, of the Maiden Universalist church, has decided that universal salvation is a mistake. He has resigned his charge and will join some denomination that believes in hell and damnation.

A circular, evidently written by Gorsuch the Anarchist, was circulated in Chicago last week, calling upon workmen to arm themselves to redress insults which hav been offered the Socialists of that city.

It is intimated from Rome that John J. Williams, of Boston, is likely to be created Cardinal as well as Mr. Gibbons, of Baltimore, so that America will hav two cardinals in the place of McClosky, defunct.

The grand total of the New York Grant monument fund at last accounts was $114,318.26. A bill is to be laid before the national legislature asking for an appropriation of $500,000 for the New York memorial.

Jacob Schaefer, of New York, and Maurice Vignaux, the French champion, played a 3,000-point game of billiards last week for a stake of $5,000. Schaefer won the game by 162 points, and received $1,500 gate money.

Pierre Lorillard, the stock-raiser, has announced his intention of retiring from the turf. In a recent letter in the North American Review Mr. Lorillard proclaimed himself the workingman's friend and a modified Socialist.

The Medical Era says that "the water drunk by Philadelphians, owing to the presence of cemeteries near the river, is a product of the rainfall into the Schuylkill, mixed with a large proportion of the distillate of the bones of their ancestors."

Six women and one man were publicly baptized amid floating ice in the Schuylkill river at Reading, Pa., on the 30th ult., by a Mennonite preacher. The male convert accidentally tripped the minister during the service and both went under the icy water together.

Some years ago Peter Dwyer, a disreputable citizen, experienced religion and turned over a new leaf. Simultaneously with his change of heart he changed wives, deserting his own wife and taking another man's. Then he hired a hall and set up as an evangelist. After numerous escapades with women, he has now disappeared and taken with him two female members of his flock.

Odds and Ends.

A minister, having taught his little girl the Lord's Prayer, was surprised to hear her repeat it with the following variations: "Giv us this day our daily bread, or biscuit and honey, if you please."

"There are two sides to the bread question, fellow-workmen," shouted a political speaker, "and my record shows you which side I stand upon." "The buttered side," vociferated some of his fellow-workmen.

Johnny (just after Sunday-school): "Say, Jack, what is a sockdolager?" Jack: "Why, don't you know? It's what they sing in church when they get ready to go home. The minister gets up and says, 'Let us now sing the sockdolager.'"

A little girl, aged nine, called her father to her bedside the other evening. "Papa," said the little diplomat, "I want to ask your advice." "Well, my little dear, what is it about?" "What do you think it would be best to giv me on my birthday?"

Papa: "Bertie, your mother tells me you struck the little Bird boy on the way home from the Sunday-school to-day. Now, that was very naughty, and if I hear of you doing it again, I shall hav to teach you a moral lesson by the use of the rod," Bertie: "But, papa, he tore my new coat." Papa: "What! He ruined that $12 coat? Bertie, I am surprised you didn't chastise him severely. Why didn't you throw your Sunday-school book at him?"

One day a flash of lightning struck a mortal;
The ghost he didn't yield—
Above his heart, and in his bosom pocket,
A Bible was his shield.

A marvelous deliverance, and worthy
Of any poet's rhyme—
But just suppose that mortal had been reading
His Bible at the time!

It was one of the pastor's best sermons, and he was describing heaven. It was a place of marvelous, matchless, transcendent beauty, he said. All the mansions were of red brick, with solid white shutters, four inches thick, no cornice, brass door knobs, and white marble steps, with angels continually scrubbing them through all the countless ages of eternity. "Eloquent preacher," said the stranger in the deacon's pew, at the close of the service. "Philadelphia man, ain't he?" "Ah!" said the deacon, "somebody told you."

At the revival.—Preacher: Young men should never go to a place where they would not take their sisters. Is there a Christian young man in the audience who thinks he may safely break this wise rule?" Young man under the gallery standing up. Preacher: "And what is this place, my young friend, which you think yourself justified in visiting, and yet to which you would not escort your sister?" Young man: "The barber shop, sir."

Now the man riseth up in the morning
And readeth the newspaper
With the Florida advertisment;
And he bloweth in Ten dollars
For orange groves in that sunny clime.
Then he goeth to Florida.
And he meeteth with swamps;
Likewise alligators;
Moreover snakes;
Also malaria;
And three-ply desolation generally,
And he sayeth to himself,
"Lo, thus early in the morning,
Even in the wintry A.M.,
I truly hav been Sold."—Puck.

A man with a grip-sack in his hand halted before a Detroit fruit-stand and priced a choice variety of peaches. When told that they were twenty cents a dozen he whistled to himself, walked softly around, and finally asked, "Are you a Baptist?" "Hardly." "Neither am I. I didn't know but that if we belonged to the same denomination you would throw off a little. Do you lean on the Methodists?" "Can't say that I do." "That's my case. I never did take much stock in the Methodists. Twenty cents a dozeu is an awful price on those peaches, considering how tight money is. I expect you are a Universalist, eh!" "No." "Neither am I. Can't you say fifteen cents for a dozen of these?" "Hardly." "Aren't you an Episcopalian?" "No, sir." "Neither am I, but I was afraid you were. I've been a sort o' looking you over, and I shouldn't wonder if you trained with the United Brethren. Come now, own up." "I never attend that church," was the steady reply. "Nor do I, either. Say, what are you, anyhow?" "I'm a hard-baked old sinner." "No? Whoop! That's my case to a dot! I'm called the wickedest man in Washtenaw county. I knew there was a bond of sympathy between us, if we could only find it out. Now do you say fifteen cents for a dozen?" The fruit-dealer counted them out without a further objection.

Gems of Thought.

Every struggle for liberty, every search for knowledge, every effort man has made in the past for more freedom and less faith, has placed the world ahead one step, and if it has seemingly relapsed, yet we know by the progress made to-day that it has still gone steadily though slowly onward toward the goal of universal liberty.—D. M. Bennett.

If only people would take the trouble of thinking about their religion; if only they could be led, or even provoked, into trying to realize that which they say they believe, then the foundations of the popular religion would be rapidly undermined and the banner of Freethought would soon float proudly over the crumbling ruins of that which was once a church.—Mrs. Annie Besant.

The spiritual leaders of every nation—obedient souls into whom the spirit enters and makes them sons of God and prophets—see the meaning which the popular notion hides; they expose what is false, proclaim the eternal truth, and as their recompense are stoned, exiled, or slain. But the march of mankind is over the tombs of the prophets. The world is saved only by crucified redeemers. The truth is not silenced with Aristotle, nor exiled with Anaxagoras, nor slain with Socrates. It enters the soul of its veriest foes, and their children build up the monuments of the murdered seer.—Theodore Parker.

I am not without hope, O judges, that it is a favorable circumstance for me that I am condemned to die; for one of these two things must necessarily happen, either that death will deprive me entirely of all sense, or else that by dying I shall go from hence into some other place. Wherefore, if all sense is utterly extinguished, and if death is like that sleep which is sometimes so undisturbed as to be even without the visions of dreams—in that case, O ye good gods! what gain it is to die! For what length of days can be imagined which would be preferable to such a night?—Socrates's speech as given in the Tusculan Questions of Cicero.

Where ruddy fire and beaming tapers join
To cheer the gloom, there studious let me sit
And hold high converse with the mighty dead.

. . . . . .

First Socrates,
Who, firmly good in a corrupted state,
Against the rage of tyrants single stood,
Invincible! Calm Reason's holy law,
The voice of God within the attentiv mind,
Obeying, fearless or in life or death:
Great moral teacher, wisest of mankind!
—Thomson's Seasons.

It is almost needless to observe that no wickedness could ever justify punishment without an end, that is, punishment for punishment's sake, and that the creation of human beings whose existence terminated in torture would be itself a far more terrible crime than any which the basest of mankind can ever commit.—Amberley's Analysis.

Although in all moral and religious systems there is a great mixture of important truth; and although it is in consequence of this alliance that errors and absurdities are enabled to preserve their hold of the belief, yet it is commonly found that in proportion as an established creed is complicated in its dogmas and in its ceremonies, and in proportion to the number of accessory ideas which it has grafted upon the truth, the more difficult it is for those who hav adopted it in childhood to emancipate themselvs completely from its influence; and in these cases in which they at last succeed, the greater is their danger of abandoning, along with their errors, all the truths which they had been taught to connect with them.—Dugald Stewart.

Christianity was rather too hard upon the old superstitions, even whilst pressing many of them into its service. Why should religion be deprived forever of the element which the Greek sense of beauty contributed to art and poetry? Why should our devotions be attenuated with the meager and repulsiv forms due to the medieval imagination? Let us hav a judicious eclecticism, such as is already provided in art, where classical and medieval revivalisms appear to subsist in friendly rivalry. The public mind is already prepared for the change. The popular commonplace is that all religions come to the same thing, though dissevered by a few external excrescences. The spirit is one though its manifestations are many. A new Eiseniken [bed of peace?] may be proposed with more hope of acceptance when theologians hav once recognized the truth, already perceived by the multitude, that one set of dogmas is pretty much as good as another.—Leslie Stephen.

If we reason only from established facts, we must conclude that the hypothesis of a golden age, a garden of Eden, a perfect condition of man on the earth in ancient times, is purely gratuitous. The kingdom of heaven is not behind but before us. No one can determin, by historical evidence, what was the primeval state of the human race, or when or where or how mankind, at the command of God[?], came into existence.—Theodore Parker.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no word, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.—Ecclesiastes ix, 10.

"Oh, those parsons! I hate 'em all," says Mistress Beatrix, clapping her hands together; "yes, whether they wear cassocks and buckles or beards and bare feet. There's a horrid Irish wretch who never misses a Sunday at court, and who pays me compliments there, the horrible man; and if you want to know what parsons are, you should see his behavior and hear him talk of his own cloth. They're all the same, whether they're bishops, or bonzes, or Indian fakirs. They try to domineer, and they frighten us with kingdom-come; and they wear a sanctified air in public and expect us to go down on our knees and ask their blessing; and they intrigue and they grasp and they backbite and they slander worse than the worst courtier or the wickedest old woman."—Thackeray's Esmond.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 7. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, February 13, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

THE EFFECT OF CATHOLICISM UPON THE AZTECS.

Notes and Clippings.

INFIDELS are wrong when they assert that death ends all. Death does not begin to end the Gaines case.—New Orleans Picayune.

THE Sun notes that the opening by Queen Victoria of the eleventh Parliament of her reign is a circumstance a parallel to which cannot be found since the time of Henry VI.

THE police of Brooklyn stopped a Parnell fund concert last Sunday evening by the enforcement of the law against Sunday theatricals. The churches gave concerts and shows as usual.

JUSTICE MEECH, of a Chicago police court, has sued the Rev. Dr. A. E. Kittridge (Presbyterian) for libel, placing the damage at $27,000. It is said that the reverend gentleman lied about the justice.

PARSON NEWMAN, Grant's pastor, preached in a Methodist pulpit last Sunday evening. The sly old parson is trying to pass himself off as a follower of Wesley, but he will not be able to deceive the Rev. Mr. Buckley, editor of the Advocate.

GENERAL BUTLER, in a recent talk with a reporter, condemned boycotting as a means of defense against employers. He had a notion that the solution of the labor problem would depend upon the election of some proper representativ to the presidency.

MR. PECCI, professional pope, doing business at the Vatican in Rome, was last week attacked with syncope, which means a temporary suspension of the action of the heart and other functions, and had to be carried to his chamber, where he shortly recovered.

A MAINE farmer astonished even the nativs by his ingenuity in keeping warm. On the forward part of his sled was rigged a small, tight shanty, in which were a comfortable seat and a hot stove. Two small holes admitted the reins, and a pane of glass let him see whither he was going.

CANADIAN lumber-dealers are now glad to buy the black walnut fence-rails which farmers split and used as they would any other timber twenty or thirty years ago. The long exposure has seasoned the wood thoroughly, and it is valuable as material for chair legs, spindles, and other small articles.

THE New York Times is authority for the following information: "Col. Robert G. Ingersoll is to open a law office down in Wall street, and New York in all likelihood will be his permanent home for many years to come. He has established his family on Fifth avenue, and in addition to his law practice he is said to be devoting himself to literary work which will be given to the public before long in the form of a good-sized volume. His theme is kept a secret, only friends being able to conjecture the subject."

AN anti-treating bill has passed one branch of the Washington territory legislature. It prohibits any person from treating or entertaining "gratuitously any other person or persons to or with spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, or any other beverage whatever, in any public barroom, saloon, beer hall, or grocery in this territory, or in any other public place of resort and amusement." The penalty is a fine of not less than $5 or more than $25, or imprisonment not less than five or more than twenty days, or both.

THE pope considers that England has not behaved well to him in the matter of establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican. It is a matter for query to the general reader why there should be any relations between a political government and a religious hierarchy anyway. The pope has what would in the slang phrase be called a terrible "gall."

THE bronze statue of Daniel Webster to be presented to the state of New Hampshire by Benjamin P. Cheney, of Boston, will soon arrive in Concord. It is eight feet high and made of Munich bronze. The dedicatory exercises will take place on June 17th, the Bunker Hill anniversary, and President Bartlett of Dartmouth College will deliver the oration. President Cleveland and Cabinet, members of Congress, and state governors will be invited.

A FATHER had been lecturing his young hopeful upon the evils of staying out late at night and getting up late in the morning. "You never will amount to anything," he continued, "unless you turn over a new leaf. Remember that the early bird catches the worm." "How about the worm, father," inquired the young man, "wasn't he rather foolish to get up so early?" "My son," replied the old man solemnly, "that worm hadn't been to bed at all. He was on his way home."

"WHAT Place Should Religion Hav in the Colleges?" was discussed one evening last week before Mr. Courtlandt Palmer's Nineteenth Century Club by President Eliot of Harvard College and President McCosh of Princeton College. President Eliot thought they should be either without religious teaching or wholly unsectarian. President McCosh thought it was of vital importance that young men should be trained in a knowledge of God. Unsectarianism would crystallize into Agnosticism.

A DISPATCH from Montreal to the World of this city givs an account of the funeral of Joseph Doutre, the celebrated advocate. The funeral occurred on the 6th inst. The dispatch says: "Joseph Doutre, the man whose fearlessness in the celebrated Guibord case made him famous the world over as an advocate, was buried quietly to-day in the Protestant cemetery, 'behind old Mount Royal.' With the eccentricity of a profound Freethinker he had bequeathed his body for the interests of science to the medical branch of McGill University, but this was ignored by request of his widow, and with the full consent of the college authorities. The body was followed to the grave by Freethinking members of the learned societies and personal friends. No religious ceremony was held. This remarkable man was the son of a beadle of the Notre Dame Cathedral, and educated for a priest. But his mind drifted into Liberalism, and he joined the bar, where he soon gained distinction. He fought the influence of clergy in elections and secured the abolition of feudal tenure in the Province. His fame rests on the well-known Guibord case. With Joseph Guibord and many others Doutre belonged to a Freethinking club called the Institute Canadien. It was ordered by the church to destroy its heretical library, and when Guibord died he was refused burial in consecrated ground. Doutre fought the case at the Vatican and in England, and compelled the church to giv Christian sepulture to his friend. He died, as he had lived, a Freethinker, declining all overtures of the church."

Communications.

An Examination of Church History.

BEING LETTERS TO A CATHOLIC.—IV.

I do not think it is worth while to go into your New Testament evidence. It has been written up so frequently that it has become almost an eyesore. You see, my friend, the difficulty lies in the fact that your religion is founded on a dream, and is supported by innumerable dreams. Your catechism tells you not to believe in them, for it is sinful; yet, if Mary had not dreamed, she might hav thought Joseph the father of Jesus; much misery would hav been spared the world; you and I would hav been the best of friends, and I would hav been saved many days of hard work looking up your authorities. But Mary's unfortunate dream has upset everything. If she had been directed in her dream to select the proper parties to record her son's doings, much trouble might hav been avoided. Just look at the simple recital of a woman anointing Jesus—the evangelists hav so mixed matters that whole libraries hav been written to support the hypothesis of Jerome "that it was the same woman who anointed his head and feet." Look at the simple story of his entry into Jerusalem—it is such a tangled web that all your commentators hav been unable to determin whether he rode on the ass or her colt, or on both, and hav compromised by declaring that "he first mounted one and then the other."

These ignoramuses of evangelists even claimed that Jesus declared that Moses and the prophets had testified of him. But, says one of your commentators, in despair, "Since the evangelists did not think it necessary to giv a precise account or deduction of the several prophecies which were alleged by him in proof of that declaration, it is sufficient to take it just as we find it, as being true in general." But what are we poor Infidels, lacking the eye of faith, going to do? Even your own Grotius, whose authority you cannot question, remarks, "When the evangelists cite the prophets in this loose and general manner, it frequently indicates a sense picked up from many separate passages, rather than from any single text." Now, if you will allow me as much latitude, nay, only a tithe of it, I'll agree to take any 300-paged book, written on any subject, and prove conclusivly the existence of one, three, or a million gods, or none.

The difficulty is that you stick too closely to that romancer Matthew. He commenced wrong. The idea of placing Jesus's birthday in a rainy month and calling a lot of herdsmen as witnesses! He should hav remembered that the cattle had been housed for nearly two months. Why didn't the Virgin post him? She was there when Jesus was born, and knew all about it. Then, the year should hav been definitly determined upon, for we are skirmishing from 4 B.C. to A.D. 15. Then Luke must mix up matters, contradict Matthew, and say he was born in a manger and not in the house, and that unfortunate Tertullian comes right in on top of them and says it was a cave and that the mysteries of Adonis were practiced there even during his time (A.D. 200) in honor of Jesus. Then they mixed his genealogy—one giving the mother's and the other the father's family tree. And then that unlucky Matthew comes in again and says he was born during the reign of Herod, knowing very well, as he was inspired, that Luke would say that it was when Cyrenius was governor of Syria, and Cyrenius was not governor until ten years after the death of Herod. No contemporaneous historian mentioned the "slaughter of the innocents," not even Tacitus, "who had stamped the crimes of despots with the brand of reprobation."

Then, again, he was not well advertised, for Justin Martyr had to remark, "Whilst our Lord's miracles are preserved by tradition alone, those of Apollonius of Tyana are most numerous, and actually manifested in present facts, so as to lead astray all beholders." Even Simon Magnus had a good manager, and his show paid, and the people erected a statue to him. But I blame Matthew more for finishing up as he did. He had no originality. In this business originality almost always leads to success. The scene on Calvary was all right as far as it went, but the attendant wonders—there is the trouble. They were a blank to the outside world, though every ordinary convulsion of nature was duly chronicled. The darkness was not original, as Virgil claimed that it happened at the death of Julius Cæsar. The Hindoo, Persian, and Egyptian saviors all went to hell, and Horace claimed the same for Mercury. Then, the ascension into heaven was an old affair, as it had been accredited to Zoroaster, Esculapius, and others, and Jerome says that even in his time the pagans celebrated the resurrection of Adonis.

I tell you, my friend, Matthew is to blame. Under pretense that Jesus's birthplace had been foretold, he romances again, and says: "He came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets—"He shall be called a Nazarene." How careless this was; an inhabitant of Nazareth is not a Nazarene, and there is no such prophecy in the Old Testament; and in consequence your church is obliged to come out and say: "Either Matthew's memory failed him in the recital, or he cited it imperfectly or inaccurately, on purpose to reprove the scribes and pharisees for the same loose and negligent method of interpreting the scriptures, in which they had frequently indulged themselvs." So this little joke of Matthew has caused serious trouble. If I had been writing that story I would hav been in dead earnest all the time.

Look at Peter and Paul. They can't keep their little quarrels to one another, but must blazon them to the whole world. The result is that both had to admit themselvs to be untruthful; if the quarrel had ended there it would hav been all right, but Paul must get wrathy and directly charge Peter with lying. Peter, remembering the cock story, very wisely kept quiet. The whole affair might hav died out if St. Clement had not raked it up, and said it was not our Peter but some other Peter. This called Jerome and Chrysostom on the scene, and, for the first time in his life, Jerome agreed with someone else. They declared that the quarrel was "wholly feigned and dissembled," because by this means Peter, could "insinuate himself into the favor and esteem of the Jews, and thus the more easily draw them to God." This was very rational explanation and suited everybody till, another unfortunate slip being made, some busybody attracted the attention of St. Augustine to it. The saint was at that time busy writing his "De Civitate Dei," and he hastily wrote an opinion, justifying it as "useful and seasonable lying."

You see, my friend, all the early fathers being inspired and in daily communion with the godhead, felt so sure they were right that they taught all their converts that they had "nothing to do with curiosity or inquiry, but when they had once become believers their sole business was to believe on." And this became so engrafted on your system that even the reformers, Protestants if you like, found it absolutely necessary to couple it with their reformed system. Only a short time ago Rev. Dr. Cuyler was reported to hav said in a Baptist minister's convention: "Brethren, if we hav any doubts keep them for the study; don't bring them into the pulpit. There are many things we do not comprehend. Who can comprehend the trinity? Who doubts it? I do not understand it, but I believe it. People say, 'Do you preach that which you do not understand?' Certainly I do. I preach incarnation; I do not understand it, but I believe it." Now, if the doctor be correctly reported, I personally hav no objection to his continuing on his present line. It is, I think, the natural outcome of the situation caused by the teachings of the early fathers, and he is at least honest in his declaration. And if he chooses to preach on a subject concerning which he knows nothing, and people are willing to pay to hear him, that is their business, not mine. But I started to make a comparison. Now, none of your early writers claims to hav seen Jesus, and their testimony, if you are inclined to value it, is at the best but hearsay evidence. Their character for truthfulness is summed up by that celebrated ecclesiastical historian, Dr. Mosheim, when he says: "The reader will find them all, without exception, disposed to deceive and lie whenever the interests of religion require it."

So the testimony of your early saints in regard to the existence of Jesus would be just as valuable to me as would be the testimony of the Rev. Dr. Cuyler on the incarnation.

In my next I will review your remarks about the Council of Trent. Yours truly, McARTHUR.

What is the Matter?

One man cries silver; another, no silver; a third, more currency; a fourth, protectiv tariff; a fifth, more protection; a sixth, eight hours, higher wages; a seventh, sees all our troubles in the usury on money, bonds, etc.; while the eighth cries, "Rent, rent, rent is the underlying secret." Well, all can't be right. As to rent, land is cheap, squatters abound, and suffer with the rest of us; as to currency, the hardest times known hav been felt where money was so superabounding you could pick it up. And where money fails its place is taken by bonds, checks, drafts, credits, orders, clearing-houses, etc., which do money's work, just as a rock or bit of iron will do the hammer's work. So all this blather about money and lands in our country is blatherskite. Granted that restrictions in trade cause regular crises; that specie basis is monopoly of money, and makes us the serfs of a money power; but we might be well-fed, comfortable serfs, and should be, here, in such a new nation, where land is so abundant and cheap.

No. There is an underlying cause. Our case is not little crowded England's or Germany's. It is more like Ireland's, inasmuch as about all the surplus earned by labor is slowly absorbed by absentees, who never redistribute, save at distant points.

Our railway system is controled by able men, but you shall find that about all the improvements in it are toward taking more from us, tempting or compelling us to more use. Very different from the postal service, or even the street railway service. Pools are made, palace cars, and Mann boudoirs, etc., but no reduction within the easy reach of the vast masses, women and children.

Had the post-office service grown to its present proportion and necessity with dear postage, what should we do? Yet the need of using the railroad and telegraph presses more and more on our more common life. The very men who work on the roads finally spend most of their wages traveling. The country people take the purchase money for seed to pay railroad fare on some desired journey, and no distribution, to speak of, occurs. If so, if I tell facts, any fool could infer consequences. It's a running sore, and "gets no better, fast." HOLT.

Freethought in Australasia.

The struggle for liberty has advanced another stage in the backward colony of Victoria. One point hav the bigots lost; one point hav the Freethinkers gained—and that is the right to charge for admission to their Sunday lectures. For many months past a series of prosecutions hav been pending against Mr. Joseph Symes for lecturing at the Melbourne Hall of Science on Sunday evenings, upon which occasions charges had been demanded for admission. One method after another had been tried by the advocates of existing myths to put a stop to the utterances of the Freethought lecturers, but each had signally failed, and the would-be inquisitors, driven to desperation, appealed to the government, by means of their newspapers and deputations, to extend its mighty power in helping to stamp out that unbearable menace to superstition, the free expression of opinions. The result was that Mr. Symes has been attending the police court and the Supreme court to answer the charges against him, witnesses pro and con hav been called and re-called, the case has been heard and re-heard, and the lawyers paid and re-paid. And all for what, or rather, with what result? Simply that our most arbitrary and tyrannical govern ment has been driven to make the humiliating admission that it is unable to obtain a conviction because a jury cannot be obtained which will agree upon it. Twice has the case come before the Supreme court; twice has a jury of twelve men been locked up for six hours to find a verdict; and twice hav the persuasiv powers of Mr. Symes prevented them from coming to a unanimous decision in the matter. A third trial had been called for, but the authorities hav formally announced that it will not take place, and Mr. Symes is at liberty to carry on the same system as hitherto. This is a great victory to achieve in our slavish community, and although it has not yet affected any of the institutions except the Hall of Science, it will probably not be long before it is taken advantage of by others; and before long Melbourne may, like Sydney, hav five or six Freethought lectures running each Sunday, instead of one, or at most two, as at present.

In the fight for the freedom of the press, Mr. Symes has not been so successful as in the fight for the freedom of the platform. The jury had found a verdict against him for neglecting to find the £600 securities against "blasphemy" and sedition" as required by the act, the penalty being fixed at £25. The full court, to whom several technical points had been reserved for consideration, decided against the defendant, thus making the verdict of the jury hold good, and Mr. Symes, from a legal point of view, indebted to the government to the amount of £25. This he said he had no intention of paying, and he has kept to his word. On the 9th inst. he received an official memorandum from the crown solicitor asking him to forward the amount, together with an additional sum of £100, 19s., 5d., for costs of the action, to which he sent a polite reply, giving an account of his estate, which he told them he had kept as near zero as possible. "Don't you wish you may get it?" said he, and he concluded the note with this significant postscript: "I'll pay the money at the resurrection if you and your clerical masters care to demand it." And there the matter stands.

Melbourne has been fortunate during the last few weeks. It has actually had two theaters open each Sunday night for the delivery of Freethought lectures. This addition has been made by Dr. J. L. York, who has just paid his promised visit to Melbourne, and delivered his four lectures: "The Science of Life; or, How to Be Happy;" "Individuality, Love, and Marriage;" "Thomas Paine and Jesus of Nazareth as Saviors of the World;" and "Romanism vs. Reason; or, the Auricular Confession." He also lectured on Christmas night, in the middle of a sacred concert, upon "The Reign of the Common People." Dr. York's lectures hav been very well patronized by the Melbourne public, and his jocular style, his merry mood, and his "Yankeeisms," hav attracted the sympathies of many of his hearers who would be repelled by the bitter, earnest language of Mr. Symes. In fact, Dr. York might be summed up as a Freethinking Optimist, and Mr. Symes as a Freethinking Pessimist—such, at least, is my opinion. Dr. York, however, has not planted his foot in congenial soil in visiting Melbourne—Liberalism not yet having been transplanted to these shores. The religious characteristic of Victorian society is that it is split up into clearly defined and rigid sects—Christian, Spiritualistic, or Secularistic as the case may be—and the result is that those who cherish Liberal principles as of superior import to their own particular opinions are isolated and rarely known to one another, and toleration is scarcely ever dreamed of. This Dr. York proposes to remedy as soon as possible by starting on a sound basis a Liberal association of Victoria, somewhat similar to the one at present existing in New South Wales.

Mr. Symes has temporarily discontinued his series of lectures in Melbourne; his many legal struggles hav necessitated his taking a holiday for a few weeks. In the mean time the Hall of Science platform will be filled by Mr. W. W. Collins in his stead. This gentleman, who made his debut in Melbourne on Sunday last, has come out to Australia under engagement to a syndicate of Freethinkers in New South Wales. He brings with him a good reputation, together with the special recommendation of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. The theater was packed to hear his opening lecture, which was keenly appreciated by his hearers.

Mr. Charles Bright has introduced a novelty into Freethought lecturing by bringing the magic lantern to its aid. He has been delivering a series of lectures in Sydney, New South Wales, upon "The Gods and Goddesses of the World," freely illustrating them with dissolving views. The lectures hav met with a fair measure of success, and are shortly to be repeated in Melbourne.

Mr. Thomas Walker, who has so long held the boards in Sydney, has now taken a trip to New Zealand on a lecturing tour, which promises to be very successful. The prosecution against him for lecturing, when in Sydney, upon Malthusianism, and illustrating the same with physiological and anatomical diagrams, terminated in his acquittal, owing to some technical inaccuracy in the summons. He was cautioned against redelivering the lecture. He has stated, however, that he intends to re-deliver it, not only in Sydney, but in New Zealand also.

In my last letter I told you that a Freethought hall company had been started in Melbourne, with a proposed capital of £25,000. This, however, appears to hav been premature, nothing further having been heard of it beyond the preliminary meeting at which a provisional directorate was formed, and a number of shares called for. Steps hav been taken in a somewhat similar direction, however, the Australian Secular Association having just purchased a piece of ground (situated in one of the suburbs of Melbourne, and at a very short distance from the city) on which it is proposed to build the long-looked-for Freethought hall—the land alone costing about $16,000 of your money.

There are two obituary notices to chronicle, and both are of a literary character. The first is the decease of the admirable Wanganui (N. Z.) paper, the Freethought Review, and the other is the same, or a similar, fate which has befallen the Melbourne Unitarian organ, Modern Thought. The latter has gone to its grave in hopes of a resurrection in a few months, but there is little to warrant the realization of such a hope.

The other new venture in the Freethought periodical line, the Rationalist, of Auckland (N. Z.) is progressing wonderfully. Its circulation and influence are rapidly on the increase; it has started a plant and machinery of its own; and it has floated a limited liability company with a capital of £2,000 (nearly $10,000) to run it. The company, which is entitled the "Rationalist Newspaper Company, Limited," is to take full possession of the paper and plant and all connected with it during the present month. It is proposed to send agents and canvassers for advertisments all over New Zealand, and to enlarge the paper at an early date.

A subscription has been started in Australia in aid of the fund for the Bruno statue at Rome, but unfortunately the time is too limited, and "funds" are far too numerous, owing to recent prosecutions, to admit of a large amount being raised. The amount collected up to the present time amounts to about $30, but probably a lot more will come to hand at the last moment. Mr. Symes lectured on "Giordano Bruno, the Atheist Martyr," a few weeks ago. The lecture, which was most opportune, was one of the most instructiv and most telling that has been heard in Melbourne for some time.

It is needless to say that the politicians are as busy as ever botching and manufacturing laws, and the officials equally as busy in putting them into practice. Some little interest was caused in Melbourne a few weeks ago when it was learned that the custom-house authorities had seized a case of books and pamphlets which were being imported by Mr. Terry, of this city, from the Truth Seeker Company. Objection was taken to "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," by D. M. Bennett, and the report of the "Trial of D. M. Bennett" for sending "objectionable" matter through the mails. Consequently the whole shipment was seized, and would hav been confiscated (as were the Freethinkers some time ago in this "free country") had not Mr. Terry severely protested both by letters to the press, and letters to the authorities. The result was that the whole case was delivered up to him, with the exception of the two books I hav named, and the volume of Truth Seeker Tracts containing the "Open Letter."

And once more sending you my best wishes, believe me, Yours sincerely, D. A. ANDRADE.

South Yarra, Melbourne, Dec. 28, 1885.

The Day We Celebrate.

IN CHICAGO.

The Chicago Secular Union, with its customary enthusiasm, suitably commemorated the anniverrary of him to whom America owes her greatest debt of gratitude, Thomas Paine, on Friday last.

A literary and musical program of an exceptionally high order had been arranged, and everything passed off to the satisfaction of the most critical and exacting.

Our president's brief opening address was in Orchardson's happiest mood. Miss K. Shaunessy, who presided at the piano, is the most artistic pianist I hav heard in this center of musical culture, and in the duet performance, "The Mocking Birk," her accomplished pupil, Lizzie Blunt, gave evidence of unusual capacity.

The oration by Mrs. A. M. Freeman proves this lady's limitless capacity. Few, after a triumph of a year ago, would attempt another tribute, on the same subject, for fear of repetition, nevertheless, her last apostrophe was more than eulogy, expressed more than vindication—it was a brilliant piece of retributiv justice, almost an apotheosis. La Rochefaucauld says, "True eloquence consists in saying all that is necessary, and nothing but what is necessary." This seems to be the secret of Mrs. Freeman's splendid success.

Professor Scully, formerly of the Illinois Institute of Elocution, rendered the "Closet Scene from Hamlet" in a manner that would make Booth or Irving envious. Chicago's great baritone, J. H. Rogers, sang "The White Squall" in surpassing style, both as to compass and vocalization. "Too late for the Train," by Miss Bessie Allen, whom Professor Lyman has had in training for years, and whom he considers his most successful pupil, was given in an inimitable style, and scored an encore. A. D. O'Neill, Jr., sang the "Old Rustic Bridge by the Mill," in a most acceptable manner. Oliver Wendell Holmes's "How the Old Horse Won the Bet" was the difficult selection Mrs. Josephine Tarbell gave with extraordinary elocutionary power, which is not surprising when we learn that this lady, now studying for the stage, has already received flattering offers from Lawrence Barrett and other leaders of dramatic art.

An original poem by our secretary, Ella Le Page, proved a palpable hit, and her cultured yet naïve delivery an agreeable surprise. The poem deals with the doubts and fears a lady of orthodox proclivities experiences while listening to Freethought lectures and debates, and which she communicates to her "John" with much foreboding. It bristles with irony, sarcasm, and humor, and should be published for use at Secular celebrations. The entertainment concluded with a song by little Bebee Smith, a young prodigy, who was enthusiastically encored.

The floor was then cleared for dancing. Several Secularists, known chiefly for forensic eloquence or profound research of philosophic subjects, found "surcease from sorrow" over suffering and superstitious humanity by shaking their heels with unalloyed happiness till early in the morning. The tendency of Freethought is to make old men young again in the enjoyment of happiness, and young men old in knowledge and experience. All endeavored not only to enjoy themselvs but to make their neighbors participants in the joy that was unconfined.

To the arduous labors of Mr. A. M. Freeman is largely due the success this anniversary proved. And allow me to acknowledge the debt we owe Messrs. E. S. McLeod, A. D. O'Neill, Chas. A. Fraenkel, Annie Foster, and L. H. Sawyer, also of the Entertainment committee. That they may not grow weary in well-doing is the earnest hope of

E. A. STEVENS.

IN PHILADELPHIA.

The one hundred and forty-ninth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was celebrated by Friendship Liberal League and Friendship Liberal League, No. 257, two distinct organizations. The exercises under the auspices of Friendship Liberal League were held in Memorial Hall, corner of Ninth street and Girard avenue. The room was prettily decorated with flags, pictures, etc. On the wall back of the speakers' platform hung an oil painting of Paine, flanked on either side by portraits of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin. The three pictures were inclosed by two columns, surmounted by an arch, all made out of different colored tissue paper, fastened to the wall. The arch had inscribed upon it in gilt letters the motto: "The world is my country; to do good my religion." A plaster cast bust of Paine stood upon a pedestal in front of the platform.

In the afternoon the exercises included instrumental and vocal music, an oration by C. H. Osgood, president of the League, and recitations by Mr. Maltby and Mrs. L. Zane. In the evening there were orations by J. Philips and J. C. Hannon.

J. C. Hannon acted as master of cermonies, being assisted by a committee comprising Wm. H. Bishop, C. H. Osgood, C. A. Rice, and C. W. Tweedy. About half-past five o'clock supper was served in another portion of the Memorial Hall building.

The members of Friendship Liberal League, No. 257, conducted their exercises at Industrial Hall, Broad, near Vine street, with the president, E. B. Riley, presiding. The room was appropriately decorated. Portraits of Henry George, D. M. Bennett, and others were hung on the walls. A picture of Thomas Paine hung behind the platform, and was surrounded by flags. Above it was the inscription, "The world is my conntry; to do good my religion. The author-hero Thomas Paine." Under the pictures of Bennett and Ingersoll were other inscriptions.

The afternoon exercises were opened by the president, who made an address, in which he alluded to Paine, and explained the nature of the League, which had, he said, "no positiv religious opinion, but accepted all thoughts that were built upon reason." The program included vocal and instrumental music, addresses by J. Wesley Shaw, James Buckle, and Damon Y. Kilgore, and recitations by Mr. Kershaw, R. Jauncey, and H. V. Hetzel.

The evening program consisted of music, addresses by C. M. Read, Mrs. Rhoades, and the president, and recitations by Wm. Barrows and others.

THE CELEBRATION IN MILWAUKEEE, WIS.

The anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was celebrated at South Side Turner Hall on the evening of the 29th ult. About three hundred persons, including many ladies, listened to three orators and a number of declaimers. Music was furnished by Duncker's band, and the Socialistic male chorus sang two songs.

Robert Schilling was the president of the evening. Among thirteen vice-presidents on the stage were four ladies. Mr. Schilling made a few remarks, and then introduced T. W. Williams. In the course of his remarks, the latter said:

"In 1775, after the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, four of the masterspirits of the movement had met together to determin upon what course to pursue. John Adams, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, and George Washington were the four who held the destiny of this continent in their hands. Franklin was the first to speak. 'What is to be the end of this?' he asked. 'Is it to obtain justice of Great Britain, to change the ministry, or to reduce the taxes? Or is it for——.' Here he paused, not daring to complete the sentence. At this critical moment Thomas Paine, born in England, was introduced. He understood the cause of the doubt and gloom which lay like an incubus upon all present, and, rising to his feet, broke the silence with this startling announcement: 'Gentlemen, these states of America must must be independent of England! That is the only solution of this question!' He had voiced a sentiment which all felt, but none had dared to utter. The spell was broken. The words acted like an electric shock. All sprang to their feet as if ready to cry 'treason, treason!' but the words were not uttered, and Thomas Paine proceeded to paint the glorious destiny of America. George Washington was the first to spring forward and grasp both his hands and entreat him to publish his views in book form. We celebrate the 149th anniversary of his birth to-day.

"It must not be inferred that Tom Paine was content with writing in defense of civil rights; every stroke of his pen was supplemented by one with the sword, and what he wrote in ink he was ready to seal with his blood. He was not only the author of the Revolution, but served in the army during the whole war of Independence. He stood the acknowledged leader of American statesmanship. The tribute of his greatest enemy was in these words: 'The cannon of Washington was not more formidable to the British than the pen of the author of "Common Sense."'

"Paine was by no means so far advanced as the majority of eminent thinkers of to-day whose religious views are scarcely inquired into. Even after he had written his 'Age of Reason' he delivered a discourse which would not hav done discredit to an orthodox minister. As to his averred recantation on his death-bed, it is simply an invention. So far as he had any religion, he was a Deist. He was mortal and had his faults like other men, but these we prefer to forget and remember only the good he did. He has lain in the grave for seventy-five years, but in the productions of his matchless pen he will still liv and exert an influence upon the world when it has forgotten that his defamers ever existed."

C. Hermann Boppe, of the Freidenker, said that Thomas Paine did not as yet occupy the place in American history that his genius and services entitled him to. He compared the names of Paine and others like him to stars in the present political and social night. The day would come. A man who very much resembled the American was Carl Heinzen. They both championed freedom and the rights of the masses, and repudiated the folly that nations should hate and make war on each other. Thomas Paine's activity redounded as much to the benefit of England as America, and, through the medium of France, to that of the world. He desired not only the freedom of America, but of the whole world. Unlike the people, the nobility and royalty presented a solid phalanx to defend their interests. Even in this country it would be better if there was less veneration shown for great men of the stripe of Bismarck. Thomas Paine was one of the first thinkers who dared assail the model state of England. Mr. Boppe thought that he had made only one mistake, to attach too much faith to the system of representativ government. There was but little difference between the American president and the English queen, except that the former had more power. Mr. Boppe dwelt on what he considers the imperfections of the American government, and quoted some of Paine's suggestions to help the working classes. Paine's religious teachings the speaker did not consider radical in the light of the present time. He believed in a God and hoped for immortality, but rebelled against the intolerance of the church.

Mrs. Juliet H. Severance thought there was need that a

Thomas Paine rise up to-day to show the people the dangers that threaten them from the politicians and monopolists. Otto Soubron read an original poem.

PAINE CELEBRATION AND PENNSYLVANIA STATE LIBERAL LEAGUE CONVENTION AT PITTSBURGH, PA.

The Convention was called to order by the president of the League, Prof. William Seymour, at 11 A.M., Saturday, Jan. 30, 286, in Maltby Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Harry Hoover was appointed secretary pro tem., and read the minutes of the last meeting at Altoona, Pa., Jan. 30, 285, which were approved. On motion, it was agreed that all delegates present be accepted, whether bearing formal credentials or not.

Adjourned to 2 P.M.

At the afternoon session the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Wm. Seymour, of Philadelphia, Pa.; vice-presidents: George Thorn, Clearfield, Pa.; George Longford, of Philadelphia, Pa.; F. A. Pierce, Pittsburgh, Pa.; secretary, Harry Hoover, Pittsburgh, Pa.; treasurer, S. F. De Jones, Pittsburgh, Pa; executiv committee: Roman Staley, Pittsburgh, Pa.; A. Cuthbert, Butler, Pa.; Wm. Burrow, Philadelphia, Pa.; George Starkey, Scranton, Pa.. Henry Luse, Clarksville, Pa.; Frank Bacon, Pittsburgh, Pa.; W. E. Baker, Tarentum, Pa.; finance committee: G. W. Baldwin, Linesville, Pa.; Simeon Nixon, Butler, Pa.; R. H. Wolfe, Pittsburgh, Pa.; D. M. Miller, Etna, Pa.

The name of the League was changed to "Pennsylvania Secular Union," and Prof. William Seymour elected state lecturer and organizer.

On motion, the organizer and secretary were empowered to collect all moneys and report quarterly to the executiv committee, said report to be published in Truth.

The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That all members of every organized society throughout the state be recognized as members of the state Union, and that a tax of twenty-five cents per year for each member of every local society be paid into the treasury of the state union on or before the first day of May of each year.

Resolved, That in districts where there are no societies organized, any individual may become a member of the state Union by the payment of one dollar for one year. Should there be an organization effected in his or her district during the year, said payment entitles them to charter membership in the local society, without any other initiation fee.

Resolved, That any member of any local society may become a representativ member of the State Union, and be entitled to a voice in the business meetings of the same, by the payment of one dollar for a certificate.

Resolved, That all moneys paid into the treasury of the State Union be expended for propaganda work in building up local organizations, spreading Liberal literature, and advancing the cause in the state of Pennsylvania exclusivly.

At 7:30 P.M. Brook's Dancing Academy was filled with a happy throng, anxious to honor the author-hero of the Revolution. The exercises were opened with music by Staley's orchestra.

The first speaker of the evening was Mr. Harry Hoover, his subject being, "The Verdict of History in the Case of Thomas Paine," and was followed by Prof. Wm. Seymour on "Secularism." He also paid a just tribute to the man who first wrote "The Free and Independent States of America."

After some neat recitations by Miss Miller and Master Arthur the floor was cleared and dancing began, which was continued with zest till midnight.

On Sunday, the 31st, at 2 P.M. Maltby Hall was densely packed to listen to Charles Watts and Dr. E. A. Wood. After a duet by Mr. G. R. Griffith and Miss Mary Jaseples Dr. Wood spoke on the "Sunset of Superstition in Medicin." The doctor appeared to be at home on this subject, and treated it to the satisfaction and edification of all present.

Charles Watts took for his subject "The Struggles and Triumphs of Science," and, although having just arisen from a sick bed and still suffering, he delivered a most eloquent and powerful discourse. Mr. Watts spoke again at 7:30 P.M. in Wilson's Hall in Alleghany City on "The True Philosophy of Life." This closed the Paine celebration at Pittsburgh.

HARRY HOOVER,
Sec. Pittsburgh Secular Society.

IN OGDEN CITY, UTAH.

From the Ogden Daily Herald (Refused publication in the Ogden News).

Yesterday (Friday) Ogden city did itself proud with the most numerous and successful Liberal demonstration ever given in Utah. It was not of a political or partisan complexion. Its scope was wider, its aim higher. It was in the spirit of the words of the man who was commemorated—"The world is my country, to do good my religion."

Half a dozen settlements, at least, furnished liberal contingents of men and women of Freethought, who came to worship at the altar of reason, and bow in homage to the sanctuary of freedom. James Horrocks had freely given the use of his spacious and well-appointed hall on the corner of Fifth and Young streets, and in the afternoon there was a joyous and plenteous picnic partaken of by the families of invited guests from the city and the country. It was a sociable prelude to the more serious and momentous program of the evening.

Near on eight o'clock the well-lit and handsomely decorated hall was crowded with an assemblage of between two and three hundred people, from the hoary-headed veteran to the toddling infant. It was, we believe, the most numerous gathering of the sort ever witnessed in Utah, giving evidence that the leaven of Freethought is fermenting among the masses. C. P. Lambert, chairman of the committee on arrangements, called the assembled multitude to order, and gave out the opening song, "Longing for Home," which expresses sentiments holier than any denominational hymn. He then, with a few appropriate remarks, introduced John A. Jost, the veteran Freethinker, who had been chosen orator of the day. In an elaborate address, a large part of which was in fluent blank verse, the speaker delineated the course and work of Thomas Paine through his disinterested life-struggles in behalf of humanity and against both kingcraft and priestcraft. He laid especial stress on the injustice of posterity in neglecting to do honor to Paine, whose pen had been as mighty in the establishment of liberty on this soil as had been Washington's sword. The whole oration, couched in eloquent language, breathed forth a noble aspiration toward the final emancipation of mankind from all unworthy fetters and follies. It was listened to with rapt attention, and rewarded with hearty applause.

After a fine instrumental piece by Miss Fellows, who exhibited considerable skill on the organ, a recess was taken for fifteen minutes. On resuming the program, John Ford sang the thrilling and ever popular song of "A Thousand Years," the chorus joining with him in his excellent rendition. After a few remarks by Leo Hæfeli, James Horrocks delivered "The Slave's Dream," in good strong voice, with excellent effect. Ed. Mann, of Hooper, then ascended the rostrum, and paid a powerful tribute of thanks to Thomas Paine for what he had done for the political freedom of this (his adopted) country, and the intellectual emancipation of the whole race.

Wm. Jones, the well-known venerable Welsh veteran of South Weber, made his feelings known in a few but well pointed remarks, wherein he established Paine's just (though unjustly withheld) claim for the victorious consummation of the purposes of the revolution. In a sweet and pathetic voice, Mrs. Hamlin sang, "When the Rover Comes Again," receiving well deserved applause from the audience, whose interest in the proceedings had by this time become fully captivated. C. W. Hestmark was greeted with applause when he took the stand and acknowledged the blessings that Thomas Paine's writings and teachings had proved to him and his family—teachings which lead only to freedom, virtue, honesty, and happiness.

The speech-making part of the program had come to an end and the beautiful art received some more attention by Mrs. John Ford, who rendered the soul-stirring song of "Close the Shutters, Willie's Dead," in a most charming and touching style, calling forth an encore to which she responded with the song of "The Newfoundland Dog," which she gave with exquisitly worked-out pathos.

The time was far spent, the hours had flown by on invisible wings without being noticed. Entertaining and instructiv though the meeting had proved, it had to come to a close. Votes of thanks were extended to the liberal owner of the hall, to the managers of, and speakers and singers at the celebration, etc.

A motion was made and carried to the effect that the Liberals of Weber County continue these gatherings around the shrine of Freethought, and form in a compact organization for the defense of independence on religious matters. The chairman made some appointments for an initiatory committee, and the celebration came to an end, all the participants dispersing with the feeling of having spent a useful, ever memorable evening.

The Liberal Club.

Last Friday night was a bad one to be out. The weather was so cold that everything creaked and cracked and popped under foot, and a fine snow blew across the pedestrian's face and sandpapered his nose. Considering the state of the weather the man with the badge-pin was more or less surprised to find that a large number of persons had preceded him at the 398th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. These stood around the steam heater to get warm. Dr. Eccles was warming himself up by attempting to demonstrate to Dentist Andrews the vital necessity of gold as a money standard, and Mr. Wakeman experienced some difficulty in calling him to order so as to open the meeting.

The chairman first said that the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER was remarkable for its report of the Paine celebration and its illustrations. Everyone should read it. Dr. Lambert was the speaker of the evening upon the question of alcohol. He proposed to treat the subject scientifically. Charts were hanging on both sides of the platform to aid the doctor in carrying out this design, but he referred to these but briefly, confining himself mainly to reciting the constitution of various substances including, incidentally, alcohol. The point which he wished to impress was that all forms of intoxicating drinks were unhealthful, and that adulterated liquor was no worse than pure liquor. Some time was spent by the speaker in describing what he called a Torgulis. The Torgulis, he said, was an animal developed in fermentation which eats sugar and passes alcohol. There were seven million Torgulises in an ordinary yeast cake. The effect of alcohol on the system is to cause a series of microscopic explosions. Alcohol goes through the part of the brain most used, because the blood vessels are larger there. Thus a man shows up in his true light when filled with firewater, and hence the origin of the saying, In vino veritas.

By some preconcerted arrangement Dr. Eccles was the protagonist. Mr. Wakeman said that a blackboard would be necessary to illustrate Dr. Eccles's remarks, and Deacon Deane roused one out of the little room beside the stage and set it on a chair. On the upper part of this the speaker made some mysterious marks mixed with capital letters and superior figures. Then on the lower part of the board he made some more of the same. By reducing these to their lowest terms, inverting the divisor, and canceling common factors, the doctor reached some result or other which he announced with great energy, and the audience applauded, though what it was all about nobody seemed to understand. In an eloquent manner the speaker denied that Torgulises were animals; on the contrary, they were surrounded by cellulos. Dr. Lambert was entirely wrong in regard to the penicillium glaucus, or words to that effect. Alcohol produces a hobnailed liver. The medical terms used in this report are not vouched for. The writer intercepted them with his ear as they cavorted down the aisle, but some of them got away. Those captured are not found in the dictionary, encyclopedia, or concordance.

Mr. Wakeman followed Dr. Eccles and supported Dr. Lambert. The fact, he said, that alcohol was produced in a lower stage of digestion showed that it could not be fit for food; and the fact that it was thrown off by the stomach and not allowed to pass into that portion of the digestiv organs where food is assimilated proved that there was no nourishment or stimulant in it. It was merely an irritant.

For some reason or other Mr. Wakeman here repeated the charge, for which there is no foundation, that Paine, whose birthday had just been celebrated, was a victim of strong drink. It is reported that the Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they said, "Behold a wine-bibber and a glutton," yet there are few Christians who hav faith enough in the Bible to believe that Jesus Christ was a drunkard. The cases of Paine and Christ are parallel, and the accusation is as unjust in one case as in the other. There hav been able liars in all ages of the dim and misty past, and some still survive.

Dr. Lambert closed the discussion with further reference to his charts, and by replying briefly to Dr. Eccles. But it was getting late, and the audience gradually dissolved and flowed out through the door, so that when the meeting was dismissed there were few present to enjoy the benediction.

At the next meeting Madam Delescluze will talk about "Oratory and Dramatic Reading." She is a student and teacher of those arts, and she will therefore speak, as Mr. Andrews says, under the fire of her own guns. It is safe to promis that the occasion will be one of great interest. The following week Henry Appleton, of Boston, will talk about "Scientific Anarchism;" and next the Rev. William Lloyd will discourse upon "Personal Immortality in the Light of Science." These two last lectures being mainly upon speculativ subjects, a large field for discussion will be opened. All for five cents. Presbyterians admitted without any cents.

LATER.—An Irregular Meeting of the club was held at the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER Monday morning at 11 o'clock. There were present Messrs. Scott, Somerby, Sutherland, Richards, of Kansas, and the attachés of the book-store. The financial problem was ably discussed. Mr. Scott defended the silver dollar. Mr. Sutherland opposed, and was in a fair way to suppress his opponent when the timely intervention of Mr. Richards reinforced the silver man. Mr. Richards proved to be a person of great eloquence, and Mr. Sutherland suffered the fate he had come so near inflicting upon Mr. Scott. An adjournment was then had. There was no admission fee charged. The writer was not present; this report is obtained from the bookkeeper, who witnessed the proceedings with great glee.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Newark Liberal League will celebrate its eighth anniversary on February 15th, at its hall, 177 Halsey street, cor. Market, by a musical and literary entertainment, followed by dancing. Madame Elizabeth Delescluze, W. G. Mayo, Wm. Whittick, H. G. Avery, Miss E. L. Simmons, and the brothers Frankel will contribute to the enjoyment of the evening. All are invited.

THE Industrial Appeal says of C. W. Stewart's recent discourse in Ottumwa, Iowa: "The lectures Professor Stewart delivered at Liberal Hall last Sunday, morning and evening, were ne plus ultra. Many of his hearers went to him in the evening and complimented him personally on the excellence of the entertainment. In our opinion Mr. Stewart is the most accomplished and instructiv lecturer the Liberals hav ever had in their hall. We wish he could be retained during the entire winter."

MRS. F. C. REYNOLDS made a beginning as a Freethought lecturer at Jobstown, N. J., last Sunday afternoon. Her subject was "Reasons for the Religion of Humanity." Mr. C. B. Reynolds spoke in the evening on "Salvation." These two evangels of Freethought will make engagements to lecture Sunday afternoons and evenings, and will devote their efforts to circulating Liberal literature, obtaining subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER and other papers, and building up local unions. They will lecture on week-day evenings in any place, in public hall or private house, where there is a likelihood of starting a small or large society or science school. They can be addressed in care of this office. Immediate application should be made.

MR. CHARLES WATTS, having thoroughly recovered from his recent sickness, left Canada last Saturday week for Pittsburgh, Pa., where he lectured two Sundays to crowded audiences, and on Monday and Tuesday at Alliance, O. He is now in Chicago, where he will deliver four lectures, after which he speaks in several Western cities. In April Mr. Watts returns to Canada to fill the engagements he was necessitated to cancel in consequence of his illness. He will then come East previous to going to England to fetch his wife and family. Mr. Watts's lectures in Ayr seem to hav been most successful, judging from the opinion of the local press. The Ayr Recorder of Jan. 21, 1886, says: "The two lectures given in Reed's Hall last Wednesday and Thursday evenings by this talented Secularist were well attended, especially Thursday evening meeting. Mr. William Algie, of Alton, presided very efficiently on both occasions. To say that the lecturer is a vigorous speaker of rare elocutionary abilities, great intellectual attainments, one capable of presenting his views in the strongest possible light, is only an imperfect testimony to Mr. Watts. No matter how his hearers may differ from his views on theology, they must admit that his expositions of skeptical Freethought hav embodied in them some of the most rhetorical utterances and seductiv logic that it has ever been their privilege to listen to." Friends in the West wishing to communicate with Mr. Watts should address him, up to March 6th, care of Mr. A. D. O'Neill, 107 Park ave., Chicago, Ill. After that to Mr. Watts's permanent address, 82 Berkeley st., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged.....	$1,933.02
Daniel De Milt (paid).....	1.00
John Engstrom (pledge)	25.00
Total,.....	$1,959.02

PLEDGES PAID.—Morris Johnson, $5.00; Samuel D. Moore, $1.40.

PARTIOULAR NOTICE.

I would like the addresses of Mrs. Russell and Joseph Burgess, who contributed to the Campaign Fund at the Cleveland Congress.

CORRECTION.—The name Samuel Sharp on the list of contributors at the Cleveland Congress should be Simeon Sharp, Salem, O., who contributed $10.

News and Notes.

The following from Canada is a note of encouragement indeed, and the vigor of old age is still an example for youth:

WELLAND, ONT., CAN., Jan. 27, 1886.

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND PUTNAM: I would like to say something in the way of encouragement in the good work you are engaged in, in trying to get the museums, etc., opened on Sundays for the benefit of a class of people with hard hands and few friends.

Wealth procures friends and all the good things of this life, while the poor toiler's time is fully occupied in procuring bread, and too often comes short of that. His opportunities for recreation, enjoyment, or improvement are but few. His situation calls for help, and who so likely to heed his call as humanity? I need not say persevere in your work; you will do that. By nature you are fitted for the work better than many are. If you accomplish it you will hav your reward, and if not it will be so much done in the way of education upon the subject. I can hardly be selfish upon this subject; at the age of fourscore years I may not visit the museums. I am one of the toilers, a poor but rich man, so inclosed find one dollar to help in the work. Desiring your encouragement and success, I am, Yours very respectfully, JOHN RAY.

The following is equally cheering—the great West joins with the solid North:

S. P. PUTNAM, ESQ., Dear Sir: I am with you with all my heart for the good cause that the American Secular Union is advocating, and if I was able I would giv $1,000 to push the battle for freedom. You may put me down for $25. I shall also try to do what I can among friends.

Very truly yours, JOHN ENGSTROM.

The news from Denver shows that a good field is open there:

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I hope you will deliver a few lectures in Denver. I know they will be appreciated. There is no city in the West more thoroughly in need of a movement like that in which you are engaged. It has been nearly two years since we had a Liberal lecturer here. This is a city of about sixty thousand inhabitants and fifty churches.

Our Christian opponents are working hard this winter, holding revival meetings nearly every week, but with very poor success, as I can testify from my own observation, and as is also shown by an address delivered before the Young Men's Christian Association convention by the Rev. Cameron, a prominent D.D., who has been assisting in these revivals, and who says "that at the present time not more than three per cent of the young men of Denver are church-members."

Hoping that you will favor us with a visit,

Yours truly, FRED. WARREN.

They are evidently busy at Fillmore City, Utah, and it is well that what they are doing should be known. Let some of the rearward ranks close up with quicker step when they see what this gallant troop is accomplishing:

FILLMORE CITY, UTAH., Jan. 27, 286.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Branch 76 of the American Secular Union held its annual election Jan. 10th, with the following result: president, John Kelly; secretary, Geo C. Veile; treasurer, Geo. Greeway; editor, A. L. Robinson; and librarian, Edwin Bartholomew. We hold regular meeting every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The young form part of our audience, from whom we get select readings, recitations, and essays. They also help answering questions, which are always given out the previous Sunday and must be answered in writing. We also hav songs and music, and a short lecture from some of the older persons. Our order of business is: first, roll-call; second, reading minutes of previous meeting; third, answering questions; fourth. debate or essays; fifth, select reading; sixth, recitation; seventh, lecture not exceeding thirty minutes; eighth, new business; ninth, select reading; tenth, recitation; eleventh, song and music; twelfth, adjournment. We are taking pattern after the church—we begin to train from the cradle up. They say there is no other way, and we believe it. Hence our program.

Respectfully, GEO. C. VEILE, Secretary.

The following waft from the big prairies of Illinois givs good music for the Union:

MECHANICSBURG, ILL., Jan. 31, 1886.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Received charter all right. Hav just organized and elected our officers. President, A. H. Martin: vice-president, John Thompson; secretary, W. A. Beck; treasurer, C. B. Hall. We hav a very good organization, all our present members are live men. We expect to hav soon a strong society. W. A. BECK.

Montana wheels into line:

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Your communication of 23d inst. received. I am making effort for combined territorial movement to contribute to our national fund. I am not discouraged, knowing, as I do, that there is a predominant Liberal sentiment prevailing in our territory, only awaiting proper methods to be aroused to action.

My experience as a member of the national executiv committee has convinced me that it is impossible for any one man with time and attention divided between work for our cause and his personal business to accomplish what is needed. Solid and permanent work must be done in the organization of societies, and to keep them alive. If these societies can hav a strong man upon whom to rely, who will champion their cause and fight their battles, it would inspire all with confidence. I firmly believe that Montana could sustain an able lecturer, and contribute financially to the national cause. This I hope will sometime be done.

Pay us a visit, if only as a John the Baptist to prepare the way for the real Christ of a permanent Liberal organization.

Yours truly, THOMAS BURKE,
Chairman of Committee of Montana Territory.

I now expect, without fail, to begin my Western lecture tour in March. I expect to be in Chicago the third Sunday in March, and from there go westward via Omaha and the Union Pacific to Salt Lake City. I desire all Liberals on this line of travel to make arrangements for lectures. Pay the expenses of a hall and advertising, and I will come. If you cannot secure a hall, hav a meeting in your own houses. Parlor lectures are of great benefit, and will be the beginning of much enduring Liberal progress. I shall remain in Utah about a month, probably the latter part of April and first week in May, and hope to visit every county in the territory.

Attention, Liberals of Utah, and don't fail to hav one meeting and more, if possible, in your county. We hope to strike Montana and the Pacific states. J. D. Shaw is making arrangements for a State Convention in Texas, which we expect to attend during the summer. There is plenty of work, but we can not do it alone. The Liberals must, in their own vicinity, push the enterprise. And furthermore, all the Liberals in the country who desire to see our cause advanced in every place and organization begun and perfected, are solicited to unite in making contributions for the pioneer work. I shall go into many places where only the hall-rent and advertising expenses can be guaranteed. Of course, something more can be given when interest and enthusiasm are aroused. Such a lecture-trip as I propose, however, cannot by any means be a money-making one, and therefore only through national cooperation can it be a successful undertaking, giving promis for larger attainment in the future. So I hope for a generous response from the Liberals of every state and section furnishing the sinews of war, so that the secretary of the Union shall not be obliged to leave any field on account of insufficient remuneration. The Liberals of New England, of New York, of Pennsylvania, of Illinois, etc., can aid the Liberals of Utah, and giv them, by their generous aid, an opportunity to grow and become a political and social power. This outside assistance will be of immense benefit. The great social and political problems of Utah can only be solved by the triumphs of Liberalism.

Mormonism is founded in the Bible, and only by the overthrow of the authority of the Bible can this mingling of superstition and enthusiasm be cleared of its errors, and what is absolutely humane and truthful in it remain to be of service to the civilized world. I want to lift up the banners of Freethought in this country in behalf of public virtue, of moral progress, of intellectual advancement, of social nobility. Liberalism should be a practical power in politics and society for the selection of what is best in the prevalence of an enlightened reason. Only thus can the mighty problems which now press upon the troubled way of man be answered with clear and decisiv wisdom. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Thomas Paine's Religion of Humanity.

Several years ago I underscored the words "Religion of Humanity" in Paine's "Crisis" No. VII. Brother Wakeman now notices the expression, tells us that the general supposition that it came to us from Auguste Comte is a mistake, and raises the question whether it was ever used by anybody before 1778, when "Crisis" No. VII. was written.

Before O. B. Frothingham left the pulpit he published a volume of essays entitled, "The Religion of Humanity." And that phrase has long been a favorit one with advanced religious teachers of the Frothingham type. Theodore Parker, I presume, used it frequently, and yet when he was invited in 1843 to attend the celebration of Thomas Paine's birthday, he excused himself by saying: "With what I understand to be the spirit of his writings on theology and religion, I hav not the smallest sympathy."

"Education consists in getting rid of prejudice," said the late Wendell Phillips. It was one of the best things he ever said, and yet when the same brilliant orator affirmed that Buddhism stole its ideas from Christianity, he showed that his own education was not half completed. The wolf in the fable, seeking a reasonable excuse for devouring the lamb, accused him of riling the water. The lamb replied, "Water does not run up stream." Then the wolf said, "You insulted me last year." "Not so," said the lamb, "for I was not born till this year." But the cultured lamb, being unable to overcome the prejudices of the uneducated wolf, got eaten up. The late Rev. W. H. Channing once characterized Thomas Paine as "the turkey-buzzard of literature." Nowhere in Paine's writings can be found such a foul epithet as that used by the aforesaid clerical champion of the Religion of Humanity. Theodore Parker lived long enough to think better of Paine's religious writings, and had his life been prolonged to threescore and ten, like that of his disciple, Channing, it is quite likely that his education would hav been more nearly completed. BURR.

Kansas Statesmen.

To-day, January 29th, is the quarter-centenary of the admission of Kansas into the Union. During this period nine men hav been elected to the office of governor: Robinson, Carney, Crawford, Harvey, Osborne, Anthony, St. John, Glick, and Martin. It is a notable fact that out of these nine governors not one was a church-member. St. John ought to hav been, but was not. During the same time we hav had eight United States senators: Lane, Pomeroy, Ross, Caldwell, Harvey, Crosier, Plumb, and Ingalls. Of these eight senators, not one, with the exception of Pomeroy—an exception most cheerfully chronicled—was a church-member.

It must be refreshing to the Religious Amendment fanatics to know that of the two Kansas politicians who hav so zealously espoused their cause the one was a bribe-giver, the other a bribe-taker. Is this an index to what may be looked for when this amendment is carried? When this party triumphs—when 'none but religious men are elected to office,' will bribery cease to be a barrier to political preferment? It may be argued that the incentivs to bribery would in a measure cease because "Christian statesmen" aspiring to official positions would no longer be compelled to match their money against Infidel brains.

J. E. REMSBURG.

Answers to Inquiries.

C. ORNOLD.—There is no truth in the clippings you send.

OLAF OLSEN RAY.—We hav not seen the resolutions to which you refer.

S. M. BARKER.—You will find a full account of "How Voltaire Died" in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

MRS. M. E. ARCHIBALD.—"Last Words of Infidels" is a Christian "yarn." See "Paine Vindicated," by Colonel Ingersoll, and TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886 for account of Voltaire's death.

E. CHANTLER.—If you wish to know just what Clark Braden is get from the Index office "The Kind of a Man Clark Braden Is," by B. F. Underwood, and from L. L. Luse, of Wilber, Neb., "Braden Unmasked." You might also inquire of G. H. Walser, Liberal, Mo.

J. B. TRAVERS.—We preface the detailed answer to your questions by the general statement that the Rev. Mr. Sweeney, of the Christian church, is a liar. 1. Mr. Bennett was not "kicked out of a church." 2. He never had anything to do with Paine Hall, which building is not now a Bible repository, but is completed, owned by Freethinkers, and held as a worthy monument to Thomas Paine. 3. In regard to Paine, get "Paine Vindicated," by Colonel Ingersoll. 4. The slander upon Mr. Ingersoll's relativs is infamously false, and the author deserves a cowhiding.

J. W. W.—1. No; wheat does not turn to chess. 2. The origin of Christmas is pagan. The "heathen" nations regarded the winter solstice as the beginning of the renewed life and activity of the powers of nature—in other words, the birth of the sun. The church adopted the custom, only calling it a celebration of the birth of Christ. 3. Yes; we believe that as the terms of the public debt make it payable either in silver or gold, the government can honestly pay it in silver. The output of $150,000,000 would, it seems to us, make better times. A man who owed a large debt, upon which he was paying interest, yet kept a vast amount of money stowed away in his safe, drawing nothing, would be regarded as a poor financier.

ELLA E. PAGE, secretary of the Chicago Secular Union, writes: "The charge is often made against Freethinkers that their work is destructiv, and not constructiv. That this charge is not true, the Secular Union of Chicago had illustration last Sunday night. Mr. E. A. Stevens delivered before it his new lecture, 'God in the State,' and it was admitted by the large and appreciativ audience present to be the clearest, most practical, and strongest presentation of the Nine Demands that has yet been given to our society. Mr. Stevens cited the various states where discriminations are made in favor of believers as against Freethinkers; where church and state are practically united, the amount of untaxed property held by theological organizations, the stealthy and successful work of the Catholic church to obtain political power in this country, and the inevitable future of ignorance, tyranny, and oppression for the people if this work is not counteracted by a united and determined effort on the part of the Liberal element of the country. Mr. Stevens's lecture should be published, and thoroughly circulated among the people, as it makes a strong appeal in regard to the danger threatening our liberties through the activ aggressivness of Romanism, a religion, as he demonstrated, the more dangerous as it is foreign to our soil. As a deserved tribute to an earnest, vigilant worker, I send these few lines."

What is Secularism?

Secularism is the term applied to a system of ethical principles begun to be advocated about 1846 by G. J. Holyoake. As the system has a considerable number of adherents, and comes not seldom into public notice, a brief account of its leading doctrins is here given.

The secular is defined as that which pertains to this life, and is treated as a thing apart—as independent of, rather than as necessarily opposed to, any other mode of thought and duty.

Secularism, as regards opponents, claims that to ignore is not to deny. As the geometrician ignores chemistry or metaphysics without a thought of denying them, so Secularism, which concerns itself with this world, refuses to be held as conflicting with that "other-worldliness" which, if demonstrable, must be based on an experience to which Secularism makes no pretension, and toward which it considers itself to incur no responsibility. Secularism commences by laying down the proposition that intelligent sincerity is sinless. It does not maintain that even intelligent sincerity is errorless, but that it is without conscious guilt, even when it is, as it may be, dangerously mistaken.

The conscience thus educated, thought may be entrusted to inquire, and the search for truth may be begun.

Secularism takes the term "Freethought" as expressing the central idea which it inculcates. It defines Freethought as the unrestricted application of the powers of the intellect to any subject, the absence of any threat or penalty, legal, spiritual, or social, for the exercise of thought. The Freethought it inculcates is not lawless thought; it is guided by methods of logic, limited by evidence, checked at every step by experience, which is omnipresent, and corrected by the results of science.

Freethought is not the rebellion but the judicial action of the understanding. Reason, the faculty of following the pathway of facts, does not despise intuition, nor instinct, nor the voice of nature, nor authority. It uses but revises them. It does not pretend to be infallible, but to be the best arbiter we hav. To the conception of Freethought is also necessary the free publication of opinion, for no one could profit by the thought of other minds unless it was freely communicated. Hence the diffusion of thought becomes an obligation on each thinker, and silence or supineness a social crime. Again, Freethought that would command respect must be submitted to free criticism. Thought is often foolish, often mischievous, and sometimes wicked, and he alone who submits it to free criticism givs guarantees to society that he means well, since by criticism comes the exposure of false or foolish opinions; and the right of criticism is the sole protection of the public from error.

Freethought must end in the free action of opinion, since he thinks to no purpose whose thought is inapplicable to conduct, and he withholds the sign of his own sincerity who does not unite his thought with action.

Such is that education in Freethought which Secularism attempts. It holds that skepticism is the pathway to affirmativ truth. So far from being a crime, skepticism is scrutiny. So far from being the end, it is the beginning of inquiry—the first condition for the recognition of unknown truth. He who would be master of his own mind and know what is in it, and would hav no principles there but those which are pure, true, and reliable, must refuse to believe anything until he is compelled to believe it, it being no more safe to keep one's mind open to all notions than to keep one's door open to all comers.

It is clear that the use of Freethought may be a nuisance, a terror, or an outrage, unless courtesy takes care of it. Therefore Secularism provides that advocacy shall be directed to the exposure of error and the elucidation of truth, without moral imputation upon those whose opinions are controverted, and contends that all advocacy wanting in consideration toward others shall be regarded as a crime against Freethought. The quality of the thought, and not the motiv of it, is the proper and sufficient subject of discussion.

Secularism further imposes upon the action of Freethought the limit that everyone shall concede to others the liberty he claims for himself, and shall permit to others, and shall recognize in each individual, liberty of action in all things by which others are neither injured nor damaged.

Secularism, regarding the one object of all Freethought as the attainment of truth, finds in the study of nature its immediate sphere of exercise. Freethought is prompted by a desire to fathom the knowable, and nature and human life are the immediate sources of truth and duty which it most concerns man to master. Therefore respect for this life, respect for pure physical conditions, respect for the moral capacity of human nature, are conditions of Secular belief.

Secularism is not committed to denying that there is other good—it does not meddle with that question; it says whether there be other good or not, the good of the present life is good, and it is good to seek that good. It holds that the secular is sacred, and seeks "to find that material condition in which it shall be impossible for a man to be depraved or poor."

It does not say that all things are material, or that there are no spiritual agencies; it does not enter upon these propositions, but confines itself to showing that there are material agencies in this life, whatever else there may be, and that these, as far as they can be discovered, are the calculable forces of this world, which cannot be neglected without folly or hurt, and that it is wisdom, mercy, and duty to attend to them.

Without entering upon the question of the interference of providence, Secularism contends that science is practically the providence of life; that conscience is higher than consequence; that deliverance from calamity is more merciful than any system of consolation which only acts when calamity has occurred; and that it is not the pursuit of happiness, but the performance of duty, which is the end of life. Secularism proceeds in the path of Positiv Philosophy, not asking for errors, but for truth; not busying itself with negations, but with affirmations. In sacred writ it seeks for guiding truth and thought which commends itself to reason and experience, accepting the intrinsically true without entering upon the vexed questions of inspiration or authenticity. Whatever principles Secularism inculcates, they are affirmativ in their nature, relate to the welfare of humanity, and are determined by considerations purely human.

There is unquestionably a vast outlying class in every European country, and especially in our Indian territories, who are without the pale of Christianity. They reject it, they dislike it, or they do not understand it. Secularism is intended for these, and for all who find theology indefinit, or inadequate, or deem it unreliable. The object of Secularism is to afford these classes a knowledge of principles addressed to their common reason and intelligence, by an appeal to principles of a Secular nature, common to humanity in every state and clime. It may be a misfortune that the principles of Theism, or the acceptance of the Bible, cannot be rendered promptly acceptable to them. Since, however, this is not the case, it must be of advantage to interest them in rules calculated for the moral guidance of their conduct. Upon these Christianity may be, if shown to be tenable, subsequently superinduced.

The principles of Secularism are intended to constitute an education of the working-classes, which begins with their reason, grows with their intelligence, and ends only with death.

Secularism is not an argument against Christianity; it is one independent of it. It does not question the pretensions of Christianity, it advances others. Secularism does not say there is no light or guidance elsewhere, but maintains that there is light and guidance in secular truth, whose conditions and sanctions exist independently, act independently, and act forever. Secular knowledge is manifestly that kind of knowledge which is founded in this life, which relates to the conduct of this life, conduces to the welfare of this life, and is capable of being tested by the experience of this life. Geometry, algebra, botany, chemistry, navigation, political economy, ethics, are secular subjects of instruction (distinct albeit from Secularism, which includes the education of the conscience). They are founded in nature, they relate to the uses of this life, promote the enjoyments of this life, and can be tested by personal experience. That which is secular can be tested in time; that which is theological is only provable after death. If a sum in arithmetic is wrong, it can be proved by a new way of working it; if a medical recipe is wrong, the effect is discoverable on the health; if a political law is wrong, it is sooner or later apparent in the disaster it brings with it; if a theorem in navigation is erroneous, delay or shipwreck warns the mariner of his mistake; if an insane moralist teaches that adherence to the truth is wrong, men can try the effects of lying, when the disgrace and distrust which ensue soon convince them of the fallacy; but if a theological belief is wrong, we must die to find it out.

The standard of Secularism is utilitarian. Utility is made the test of right, not the utility which is sensual and selfish, but that which takes into account the highest attributes and noblest aspirations of humanity. It is not the agent's own happiness, but the happiness of others, which the utilitarian is bound to promote. The adoption of this rule makes intelligence a necessity. Secularism is not skeptical. It seeks everywhere positiv truth and regards doubt as a difficulty and a danger. It is not infidel, for that is a state of mind treacherous to the truth, and truth is the first thing to which Secularism teaches allegiance.

It is not Atheistic, Atheism being alien to Secularism, which concerns itself with the affirmativ. Secularism might call itself religious, if it were allowable to use the term without including some distinctiv theory of Theism, which is equally excluded from the subject-matter of Secularism, as not coming within the region of positiv knowledge.

Nothing in Secular morals can be insisted upon with effect save those statements which appeal to the common experience, and with which you can dare the judgment of mankind; but if that may be called religious which appeals to demonstrativ intelligence, which addresses itself to the conscience, which inculcates love, and truth, and justice; which claims service and endurance from all men; which places happiness in duty, and makes the service of humanity the one object of life and the source of consolation in death, then Secularism may be so defined, and in this sense it has been described in the following definitions:

Secularism is the religion of the present life; it teaches men to seek morality in nature, and happiness in duty; guiding the conduct and educating the conscience of those who do not know, or who, from conscientious convictions, stand apart from Christianity. Secularism teaches a man to acquit himself well in this world as the purest act of worship, to study the truth, to judge by reason, to regulate human interests by considerations purely human, and to act on that rule of utility which conduces to the greatest good of others; thus endeavoring to deserve another life by the unresting pursuit of duty in this. —Chambers's Encyclopedia.

Canadian Notes.

The Toronto branch of the Canadian Secular Union held their annual meeting and election of officers at their rooms, Grand Opera House, on Sunday, January 17th, with the following result: President, J. A. Risser; first vice-president, George Piddington; second vice-president, F. Strange; secretary, J. Preistman; financial secretary, George Beals; treasurer, Alexander Earsman; who, with the following committee form the executiv committee for the coming year: Scott, Jopling, Harrison, R. Earsman, Kelly. Secretary's address, 76 Richmond street East.

The election of friend Risser to the office of president is one that reflects credit upon the members and does honor to one who is in every way worthy, and who has done perhaps more than anyone else in Toronto for the good of Secularism and the cause in general. With the pioneer of Canadian Secularism, Wm. Algie, as president of the Union, and friend Risser as president of the Toronto branch, together with the able executiv just elected, and such valuable additions to the ranks as Messrs. Scott, Preistman, and Jopling, it will indeed be strange if the coming year does not prove the most successful in the history of Canadian Freethought.

The executiv committee held their first meeting Wednesday evening, and proceeded to appoint subcommittees and make preparations for activ work as soon as they take possession of their new quarters, which they expect will be about the first of February. Among the committees appointed is one on public lectures, composed of Messrs. Scott, Preistman, and J. Harrison, chairman. Any communications on the subject of lectures addressed to him at 103 Hazelton avenue, Toronto, will receive prompt attention.

Mr. Watts lectured here on Monday evening, Jan. 11th, under the management of a committee composed of some of the officers of the Irish National League, the president and secretary of the Toronto Trades and Labor Council, and members of the Secular Society, in the new Temperance Hall; subject, "Home Rule for Ireland, and the House of Lords."

This lecture was delivered on a former occasion, and repeated at the request of a few of the gentlemen above mentioned, who happened to be present, and who, in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, expressed the opinion that it was the grandest exposition of the true state of affairs in Ireland they had ever listened to, and one that should be heard by all friends of liberty. After consulting his friends, Mr. Watts consented. The lecture was well advertised by bill posting and through the press; it was brought before the Irish societies and trades unions by the members of those bodies who were on the committee, and there was every reason to expect a crowded house at the lecture; but there is an old saying that "man can appoint and God can disappoint," and if God didn't do it on this occasion, his self-appointed agents did. As soon as the lecture, was announced the clergy and the Irish societies took fright. "It was Watts, the Infidel, who was to lecture and nothing good could come from a man who was opposed to God and religion." The result was that when the hour for the lecture arrived there had been barely enough tickets sold to clear expenses. However, the lecture was given, and the audience fully made up in enthusiasm what they lacked in numbers. It was one of Mr. Watts's best efforts, and well deserved the hearty applause which he received throughout. At the conclusion of the lecture the president of the Irish National League, in a few well-chosen remarks, moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Watts, which was ably seconded by the secretary of the same body, and carried unanimously by a standing vote, every one of the two hundred present rising at the call of the chairman.

The lecture committee held a meeting on the evening following that of the lecture at the rooms of Mr. O'Connor, Queen street, where Mr. Watts, who was present by invitation, was presented with a neat purse (which had been subscribed the night before) by the committee, as a token of their appreciation of his efforts in the cause of humanity in general and of the Irish people in particular. After spending a very pleasant evening, during which friendships were formed which may bring about great good in the future, the committee separated, well pleased with the work accomplished.

This is perhaps the first instance on record in Toronto where the friends of political liberty on the one hand and the friends of mental freedom on the other hav tried to work together in harness, and the result must be considered highly satisfactory. It is a good and promising sign where men of extremely opposit religious views can unite and work together for the common good, and proves the truth of the old adage that blood is thicker than water.

Mr. Watts lectures here this (Sunday) evening, on the French Revolution, after which he goes to the States for two months, and, as at present arranged, returning in April.

The Toronto friends propose to celebrate Paine's birthday with a social, which will be the last in their old quarters. It is also proposed to hold a celebration on the occasion of taking possession of their new rooms, the particulars of which hav not yet been arranged, but which will be duly advertised.

Toronto, Jan. 24, 1886. J. NOSIRRAH.

Change of Fashion in Virgins.

It seems that some curates are too fast for their pious congregations. L'Agriculteur de la Haute Saone records a curious scandal of the village Lure.

Last Sunday the curate unexpectedly announced to his flock that he had condemned the old Virgin which had adorned the chapel for the last sixty years, and was going to replace her by a new one, a Virgin of Lourdes, where they sell the miraculous water and the best chocolate. The old folks are in quite a stew about this. They say if the old Virgin is of no account, then what becomes of our prayers to her? She was good enough, they say, for our old curate, M. Guiron. Comparisons are odious. The new curate's orthodoxy is seriously questioned. Such an innovation may disturb the pious faith in relics. It is true that the priest recreates God in the real presence at each communion service, but it seems that the rite of transubstantian was omitted at the installation of the new Virgin. Another heterodox idea of this curate was in offering her to his flock free of charge. That is making goddesses too cheap. The value of mediation is estimated by its cost to the purse of the mediated sinner. The greater faith and piety of Catholics is proportional to the greater enforcement of collections, and the method by which all the important events of life, including death and burial, are rendered tributary to the church.

EDGEWORTH.

Let Polygamy Die Gradually.

The Mormon church came into existence a good many years ago, and now that it has grown to a formidable size, it is proposed by Senator Edmunds to wipe it out of existence at one grand sweep. Likewise slavery came into existence a good many years ago, and it was suffered to go unmolested until it had reached monstrous proportions, and then it was wiped out of existence at one grand sweep. What did it cost? Take a history of the late war and read of the human butchery and the destruction of property that were kept up on a grand scale for four years. To sum it all up, you find that it cost nearly a million of lives and billions of property to effect the removal of slavery; and the result is, the negroes, notwithstanding they hav their freedom and the privilege of voting for the Republican party, are worse off to-day than they were before the antislavery agitation commenced. It takes time to remove any evil. It takes time for a boil to get well, but it is better to giv it time, and help it along, than to cut it out and wait still longer for the wound to heal.

Slavery could hav been removed gradually and peaceably. It could hav been done without bringing financial ruin to the South, and it could hav been done in such a way as to prepare the negroes for freedom instead of turning them loose without education or means of support.

The Republican party, which claims the glory of having abolished slavery, now proposes to take hold of the "other twin," and achieve some more glory. The Republican party is in a very bad way, and something must be done. The "bloody shirt" is worn out, and they must hav a new one. Senator Edmunds comes to the front with a bill to do away with the Mormon church and confiscate its property. This, of course, means bloodshed, but then you know bloodshed always goes along with glory. The Republican party must hav a new lease of life, and if it costs a few hundred thousands of lives and billions of dollars' worth of property, what does that signify when we consider the glory of having the "grand old party" in power again.

Now instead of compelling the Mormons to fight for their religion, suppose we endeavor to solve the difficulty peaceably. In my opinion it would be wrong to break up marriages, even polygamous marriages, that hav been contracted in accordance with religion and custom. Suppose we put a stop to any further polygamous marriages, and let those already contracted remain as they are, and the next generation would see polygamy a thing of the past and that without interfering with established domestic relations. In the mean time, if any parties already bound in polygamous marriages desire to obtain their freedom, they should be given a divorce on the ground of polygamy.

We would hav considerable more faith in the motives of the Republican party, and of Senator Edmunds in particular, had they not shown themselvs in favor of the wholesale immigration of the Chinese, with the "twin relics" slavery and polygamy in full force and practice. COKE EWING.

Conclusion of a Remarkable Introduction.

Courtland Palmer at the first of this season's sessions of the Nineteenth Century Club.

In concluding this introduction, I would dwell for a moment on one more point, and I do so in order to correct a somewhat prevalent misunderstanding. Even yet, certain of the unco guid who are pleased to regard themselves as par excellence, the aristocracy—even yet, such ones, or some of them, at least, are disposed—and honestly so, I presume—to look somewhat askance upon us. They take us—if they take us at all—as they would a dose of medicin. To these I would say that it is not so much as a Liberal reformer as it is as an aristocrat that I hav founded this club. As far as in me lies I would be an aristocrat of the aristocrats. This, I know, sounds like braggadocio, so I must define what I mean by aristocracy. I do not mean the aristocracy that bases its pretensions on mere birth and wealth. I mean the aristocracy of culture, the aristocracy of art, the aristocracy of goodness, the aristocracy of faithful and fruitful service to humanity. There is but one gentility, gentleness; there is but one nobility, nobleness.

I hate with all my hatred the social phariseeism, whose daily prayer ascends: "I thank thee, Lord, that I am not as other men are;" and which, like the Levite of old, "passes by on the other side." Hence, "our set," as such, will hav, with my consent, no hold upon this enterprise, "Our set" may hav its use and place, but this club has no place or use for it. Instead of "our set," I would see every worthy set included here, to form in their ensemble a beautiful and harmonious mosaic. The gentleman of the future is to be an inclusiv, not an exclusiv man. As Emerson says: "The exclusiv excludes itself." Therefore, Mrs. Grundy, I trust, will never receive a notice of election here. I hope she will not even obtain a ticket of admission to any of our exercises. Should she ask any of you to let her in, tell her she had better go to hear the Mikado, or to see Dixie in "Adonis." The aristocracy of which I speak is the only aristocracy consistent with democracy. Against any other kind, against any meaner kind, the people are sure, sooner or later, to rise to assail and to overturn it. In this high sense let us become, if we are not now, the real leaders, the veritable aristocracy of New York, and, through association with similar societies, the essential aristocracy of the United States and of the world. Through good luck or good management we hav scored a success. By continuing the courageous prudence which has characterized us in the past, we can develop this enterprise into an institution possessed of its own club house independent of my own or of anyone's special personality. This is what I would see.

The club of the future, my friends, is not a man's club or a woman's club, but a man's and woman's club, designed, first, for high humanitarian endeavor; second, intellectual culture, and third, for social recreation.

A Social Dream of Thomas Paine.

The omitted Portion of Mr. Wakeman's Paine Address.

Thomas Paine forecast the true line of political evolution. Our statesmen, reformers, Socialists, philanthropists are at fault in not taking up the great movements of the present as continuations of the great designs and revolutions of the last century—traced nowhere more clearly than in the conclusion of the "Rights of Man." As there shown, so now, liberty, peace, prosperity, and relief from crushing taxation are impossible except under a federation of the civilized nations. Now, as then, America, France, England, and Holland, could (should they try) compel such federation by force of public opinion, and an appeal to the manifest interests of all other civilized peoples. Now, as then, the great obstacle is the Tory aristocrcy of England. Let England become a republic, and soon, very soon, home rule would be the fact in every land, and federation would make mankind a family of nations. Thus the political dreams of Thomas Paine would be realized! Until the government of these personal dynasties is broken in Europe, what possible escape is there from armies and their officers, nobilities, privileges, taxes, slavery, cruelty, superstition, and ignorance? The priests, and officers, and tax-gatherers continue the policy of the feudal system cast into the forms of national governments. While that continues, liberty can only whisper, suffer, and die—or fly to America. Paine was right, then, that liberty can only exist when secured and protected by the democratic republic in federation with similar republics. The first step of progress must ever be those of political emancipation, as the frame-work, security, and guarantee of all other reforms.

This brings us to refer briefly to his Social Dreams, which revolution should in his view render possible. Open at his pamphlet, "Agrarian Justice," and you will strike at once his solution of the most important social problem of civilization. He shows that in the lower forms of human society land is communal and social, and has no value nor ownership except by the user, because everyone has all he wants. In civilization, however, the increase of population enables but a few to actually occupy the land, and thus they usurp and expropriate the many from all interest in the land, which is the common right and inheritance of all, and which has its chief value because the many are extruded from their right to it. The owner so-called, even when the user really adds but little to its value by his improvements, and only temporarily. But the wrong does not end here. All there is of riches, wealth, or capital, though not land, comes from land and labor. Wage-labor is only paid enough to keep itself alive, and its surplus of product is held by the owners of the land or of capital, as rent, or profit, or interest. Thus, he says, civilization tends to defeat itself—the rich to become richer and fewer, the poor to become poorer and more. The result is seen in ever-recurring rebellions of the outs against the ins, by strikes, violence, and agrarian laws, and various means of re-appropriation. Thus progress and poverty ever go hand in hand as civilization advances.

Does this remind you of the speculations of Mr. Henry George? Does it remind some of you of the plans that hav been presented by me at certain sociological and other meetings through the last five years in this city, whereby, by means of wages, salaries, and pensions, especially to women, the redistribution of the products of labor is sought to be achieved more justly and equitably?

Of course, I cannot answer for Mr. George, but I must candidly confess that, upon a review of Paine's "Agrarian Justice" within the last year, the old motto came forcibly to mind—"Cursed be he who has said my good things before me." Only we should say blessed, not cursed; for the step that follows is surer and firmer than the step that leads. Let those who wish to pursue sociological speculations intelligently commence where Paine left off; that land belongs to the people fundamentally; that wealth is social in its origin because the product of labor, recent or remote; that it should be redistributed after being gathered as rents, profits, interest and taxes; that this redistribution should be made in the interest of the public welfare by means of wages, advances, salaries, and pensions. This seems to be his plan concisely stated. We wait for some one to rise and show a plan that is more just and practical. Of course, the figuring used by Paine to illustrate this plan is now out of date, but the plan itself seems to be the only feasible one of the hundreds proposed to remove human poverty and misery. Attention to it may yet be an incalculable blessing to mankind.

From his tracts on finance it is clear that, in his view, the money of a people should belong to the people, and be under the control of their government instead of usurers or speculators.

All Are Invited.

To the friends of individual liberty, the supporters of free press and free mails, and the foes of Comstockian laws and methods, greeting:

The National Defense Association, with which you were formerly acquainted, and to whose funds for the defense of earnest Liberals you contributed generously, has not been dead nor sleeping. It has been for two or three years quietly, steadily, and with very little expenditure, holding meetings, watching the operations of the enemy, and in all cases of injustice and oppression affording such assistance as it could in the way of giving good points or such advice as the experience of its members made possible. Its useful documents hav been distributed where they would be likely to do the most good, and now they are running short. Much material or history has been accumulating which ought to appear in convenient printed form to be used as ammunition while the battle goes on, and to those who may not hav been in a position to know of it we will say that assaults upon perfectly legitimate domains of literature and art continue. The enemy with whom our valiant leader, D. M. Bennett, so hotly contended is yet on the war-path, yearning for the scalps of progressiv men, but we feel that the unflinching soul of D. M. Bennett still goes marching on in the hearts of those who backed him up in his great trial, and we trust that a goodly number of them stand ready to aid in a work in which he would be activly engaged were he among us—the protection of principles of individual liberty, at least to the extent that we know them to be guaranteed by constitutional provisions.

"Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty" is the motto of the Defense Association, and we are vigilant. We hav acted as wide-awake pickets at the posts of danger, but we now need the sinews of war to enable us to throw hot shot in the enemy's camp and hold them at bay. It is for this we invite subscriptions from those who several years ago exhibited so generous and patriotic a spirit. Let those now send who never sent before, and those who used to send now send the more. We will not only duly acknowledge contributions, but in course of time we will render to all subscribers an accounting of our actions, and prove to them as we hope that we shall hav acted wisely and to some effect. Though we were compelled to chronicle the death of our noble president, Hon. Elizur Wright, but a few weeks after he had written accepting the position, we hav voted to retain his honored name at the head of our list of officers for one year at least, for the mere name of such a leader is a tower of strength, and an incentiv to continued and earnest devotion to the cause with which he was in full sympathy.

Contributions may be forwarded to our treasurer, E. W. Chamberlain, 120 Broadway, New York; the secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, or in care of the Health Monthly. E. B. FOOTE, JR., Secretary.

E. W. CHAMBERLAIN, Treasurer.

Doubted!

From the Jewish Reformer.

Progressiv and enlightened Judaism, stripped of its oriental garb, freed from its shell which now threatens to smother the long-hid precious kernel, rid of all its shackles, is destined to win the entire world for its sublime and simple truths.

To the Swansea (England) school board, the Rev. Canon Richards made the exhortation: "Put only the New Testament in the hands of the children; don't giv them the Old if you hav any regard for their morality." Comment is unnecessary.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 13, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of many great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures this year, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

Two Preachers Who Differ.

Years ago old Jacob Harsen left the Bloomingdale Reformed church a large lot of land at the upper end of New York. As the property paid no taxes, and the city grew rapidly in that direction, the real estate turned out to be a bonanza for the Reformed church, and last fall a $300,000 edifice was erected from the proceeds of the sale of the land. In this building the Rev. Carlos Martyn preaches to a handful of people. On Sunday, the 7th, he undertook to explain to them why the museums should not be opened on Sundays. There were three sorts of people, he said, who were advocating such opening. The first class is men and women born abroad, the second class is Europeanized Yankees, and the "third class is a little knot of open and avowed Infidels and Atheists, organized under a propaganda called the American Secular Union, whose president is the notorious Colonel Ingersoll, and its secretary a busybody nobody—S. P. Putnam."

This is encouraging. When the clergy can do or say nothing else, they take to calling names. Being destitute of reasons why the museums should not be opened, Mr. Martyn seeks to excite the prejudice of his people against the petitioners, and thinks he scores a point in calling the secretary of the American Secular Union a busybody nobody. Such talk only shows Mr. Martyn's bad breeding, the weakness of his cause, and the damage done him mentally by his religion.

In striking contrast to the meager audience in the Reformed church and the intolerant language of its pastor, are the immense attendance at Heber Newton's church, and the sensible remarks of Mr. Newton in favor of Sunday liberty. The subject was "The true Sacredness of Sunday," as a text for another sermon on the museum question. Every seat was filled, and many sat upon the chancel steps. "Sunday," said the preacher, "is the workingman's holiday. Rest involves recreation. The true Sabbath has always carried in it more or less of this idea of recreation. The Catholic church has always preserved this aspect of Sunday. It was reserved for Puritanism to reverse the ancient idea of heresy, and make it consist in eating a warm dinner and indulging in a hearty laugh on Sunday. In this recognition of Sunday as a feast day or festival is involved the whole question of the lawfulness of innocent amusements or pure pleasure on that day. Our Sunday is sacred to worship. But worship covers a far larger scope than most men suppose. In its highest form known to us worship is the emotion kindled by noble thought, the light and warmth from the fire kindled in the mind. And so I say that our day of worship is sacred to the intellectual education of man. We are not compromising with conscience or yielding a dangerous concession to popular clamor in advocating the openings of libraries and museums on Sunday afternoons and evenings. We are urging a legitimate and historic use of the day which is sacred to the higher life of the intellect."

Between the Rev. Carlos Martyn and the Rev. R. H. Newton there is a vast intellectual chasm.

Mr. Burnham Hardly Meant What He Said.

Our esteemed friend Burnham sends us the following in reply to our criticism of his article upon religious toleration in a late issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER:

"MR. EDITOR, My Dear Friend: I hav read with care your friendly criticism on my article on 'Religious Toleration.' I am happy to inform you that I heartily indorse the most of it. I confess, however, that I am at a loss to know where you find your data for your criticism. I am sure that it is not in the paper to which you refer—that is, only to a very limited extent. You say: 'Neither can we assume as does Mr. Burnham that religions are useful.' Mr. Burnham's utterances are too well-known to be guilty of this assumption. Only in accommodation to others, I said that 'it may be assumed that religions are useful.' I assume that religions are not useful, nor do I believe that they are in any way useful; but if they are in any degree, I do not make war upon them or meddle with them, nor with the opinion, or belief, or honest conviction of anyone. All of this is stated in my article. It is the bad, the criminal, in the practice of beliefs that I object to. I am fully of the opinion that those religious practices to which I referred in my article are thus classed. They are bad as criminal to a greater or less extent. Your reference to the Mormons certainly must be called a mistake. My reference to Mormons was only to polygamous Mormons. I may very likely differ with you as to the criminal character of the practices of religions. I only plead for the intervention of statutory enactment in those cases which are either a nuisance or criminal in practice. Many practices are tolererated on the ground of being religious which would not be upon any other ground. This is why I demand we should hav provisions made in the statutes for the punishment of such criminals. Reference to foreign religions and gods—I hardly thought anyone would take it very seriously. Many of the rites of religion would not hav been tolerated only that they are religious. Mutilations would demand the extreme penalty of the law, as would polygamy, had they not been religious, and the former I think a greater sin than the latter, because it is a crime against an unresisting and speechless childhood, and thus it is with all religious rites. It makes unsuperstitious decency shudder, these vile practices performed in the name of the filthy gods of religion. The one religious practice of the Mormons is now to be suppressed by the strong arm of the nation, while sacred lying and sacred gambling, and filthy, degrading religious practices, are allowed to take place on the ground of home and fashionable religion. I say No; let them be punished just as you would punish the Mormons, If religion will not conform to decency in its practices, I do not see how anyone can tolerate it.

J. H. BURNHAM."

The best way to show our friend how mistaken he is is to quote his own words. In his communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 30th he said:

"I deny that any authority in this country has the right to tolerate or in any way protect crime. There is no liberty in such protection. There is no liberty in such toleration. Tolerate Freeman in his religious rite to kill his daughter. Tolerate the Mormon in his religious rite of polygamy. Tolerate the priesthood in wringing from their stupid devotees the secrets of their lives. Tolerate the incarceration of women in nunneries. Tolerate inquisitorial fires and hells where crime forever goes unpunished. Tolerate forced fastings and rites which are in violation of the common decencies of life. Tolerate baptism in ice-cold water. Tolerate the lawlessness of the Salvation Army and the Free Methodist; and thus we find that every kind of foolish, harmful, and wicked practice is in vogue among these tolerated religious outlaws, and decency has no hearing or toleration unless it comes under some of these abominable superstitious religions. I ask those who are in the interest of freedom—not that of Anarchy, but freedom, which demands that no practice among those tolerated religions shal be tolerated or allowed that is inimical to the health of this community, or the interest of the commonwealth—ought not this nation to reserve the right to abate a nuisance at all times and in all places?"

It seems to us that in the above Mr. Burnham is pleading against the toleration of the practices mentioned, and we candidly confess we see no reason why a man should not fast if he wishes to, or why a Free Methodist should feel the strong arm of the law. And, as we asked before, who is to say what is for the health of the community, or in the interest of the commonwealth? Again, Mr. Burnham says:

"These representativs of a foreign religion and a foreign God should not be allowed to bring their religion or their gods with them any more than they should be allowed to bring their contagious diseases along. If any are to be excluded, there would be less danger to the nation in the exclusion of the former than the latter."

Again:

"Such people should not be allowed, when they become citizens of this nation, to worship any foreign gods. They should worship the gods of this country—American gods; they are bad enough for all practical purposes. Is it not in violation of this nation's protectiv decency when those who hav found asylum here are disturbers of the peace through the importation of habits and customs nativ in despotic governments, but only elements of discord and danger here? Importation should be denied to all of these, whether they come in a religious or a political form. The most of our riots and crime come from these sources, and they should not be tolerated in these disturbing practices."

We think we hardly need remind Mr. Burnham that governmental interference with habits and customs approaches dangerously near to despotism.

And once more:

"Whenever they [religious devotees] interfere with childhood, enforcing vows, baptism, or mutilation, then they should be pronounced criminal or a nuisance; and if criminal should be punished, and if the latter, abated."

And lastly:

"It may be assumed that religions are useful, and therefore should be tolerated and protected. So far as they are useful, that is all right, but this is not the point in debate."

These are the sentences in Mr. Burnham's article to which we took exception, arguing that not religions should be dealt with by law, but only those religious criminals who hav interfered with the rights of others. But if Mr. Burnham did not mean what the above-quoted sentences say, then we can only deplore the faulty method of expression he uses, which conveys to the reader the opposit of the idea he intends. Whether the blame is with our esteemed friend Burnham or the English language we are not prepared to say. We are glad to note, however, that he has not availed himself of the immense advantage he might hav gained by laying the blame all on the printer.

Marriage of a Catholic.

A very amazing instance of ignorance and faith on the part of a Roman Catholic woman has afforded the newspapers of this city considerable spicy fun. At the same time, the affair well illustrates the folly of allowing ecclesiastics to interfere in temporal matters.

Maud Miller is a daughter of Joaquin Miller, the poet. She is also a Roman Catholic. Some time ago she married a son of the well-known theatrical manager, Mr. Steele Mackaye. Her husband, Mr. Arthur Mackaye, not providing for her, she went upon the stage to earn a living. While thus engaged, she met a Mr. Loudon McCormick, with whom she fell in love, and recently married, without, however, procuring a divorce from Mr. Mackaye, or compassing his death. The reason she givs for her bigamous action is that her husband, Mr. Mackaye, was never baptized into the Catholic church, and therefore her marriage with him was null and void, though regularly performed by a priest. To sustain her in this queer position she quotes the written opinion of one Father Preston, of this city, to whom she wrote concerning her alliance with Mr. Mackaye. His answer was that so far as the church was concerned she had never been married to Mr. Mackaye. With childish ignorance of law and a devout woman's faith in the church, she thought this settled the matter, and took a second husband.

Naturally, the first husband sues for divorce, and one would suppose he would hav no trouble in procuring it—least of all that she would contest the proceedings. But here the amazing part of the religious comedy comes in. Her lawyer contests the divorce on the ground that there never was any marriage, and of course no divorce can be granted where no marriage occurred. The claim is made that Mackaye induced Miss Miller to marry him through fraud and misrepresentation, and that the marriage ceremony was for that reason null and void. The allegation of fraud is based upon the statement made by Mackaye before the marriage that he had been baptized and christened in the Roman Catholic faith. Miss Miller's council asserts that Mr. Mackaye had never been baptized or christened!

Of course the laws of this country are not yet so religious that a failure to comply with church regulations can make a civilly legal marriage null and void, and Miss Miller can hav no case. The statute granting priests and ministers power to unite men and women in marriage says nothing about such union being incomplete because of the failure of one party to comply with certain Catholic mummery. So long as there are no civil impediments the ceremony is binding. It is surprising that a lawyer should even think of setting up such a claim. Miss Miller's counsel must imagin he is living in some South American country where the church is also the state.

But it all goes to show how incomplete the education of a woman is under Roman Catholic instruction, and what a state of affairs we should hav if Roman Catholicism could get control of the country.

Homeopathy and Catholicism.

The Roman Catholic papers of England are discussing a very serious problem for them—a problem whose consequences are tremendous and far-reaching, even to the next world. Upon the solution of the question depends the eternal happiness or misery of thousands of Roman Catholics, and the transient fatness of homeopathic physicians' purses. The discussion is, as the cable informs us:

"Whether homeopathic globules are either food or drink. If they are, one cannot be taken before Holy Communion. If they are supposed merely to dissolve in the saliva, and become a part of that, then, it is argued, they can."

Our readers will see at once the importance of a right decision upon this question. If by any means a bit of food should get into the stomach of a Catholic before he partakes of the communion, he is a doomed man, unless he pays the priest to giv him an indulgence, or dispensation, or absolution. If the little harmless-looking globule should be food, then the man who takes it is a goner. But this puts a sick man in a tight place. If the medicin it necessary to save his life, and he takes it, his soul is gone. If he does not take it, his body is gone. Either way, he is in a predicament, and he must make up his mind which is worth the most to him, his soul or his physical life. But if on the other hand the globule assimilates with the fluids of the body, then he can hav both his soul and his body. The church ought really to resurrect some of the Jewish physicians and chemists she once burnt to decide this question.

But what is the use of paying a man for making infallible decisions if the old gent at Rome cannot settle the matter off-hand? And considering the great stakes involved, he should decide that homeopathic globules bear no resemblance whatever to food. It makes no difference whether they do or not—the decision must be made for the greatest good of the greatest number. A fact should never be allowed to interfere in religious matters.

Doing a Good Business.

Under the provisions of section 210, chapter 410, Laws of 1882 (New York city Consolidation act of 1882) police magistrates are permitted to commit children to the care of various so-called charitable institutions. For this care the law allows the managers to charge $2 per week. Under this law the Board of Estimate hav appropriated from the Excise fund the following amounts to pay last September's bill:

Institution of Mercy	$7,281.71
St. Joseph's Asylum	3,636.14
St. Stephen's Home for Children	3,832.79
Mission of the Immaculate Virgin	8,155.43
Missionary Sisters, Third Order of St. Francis	3,784.86
Asylum Sisters of St. Dominic	3,216.57
Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary	2,965.71
Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans	945.85
St. James's Home	1,153.14
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls	178.86
St. Ann's Home	252.57
American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless	829.57
Asylum of St. Vincent de Paul	471.43
St. Agatha's Home for Children	1,076.43
St. Michael's Home	388.29
Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society	3,161.71
Ladies' Deborah Nursery and Children's Protectory	3,359.05
Total	$44,690.06

From the Excise fund was also voted $230.96 to the "Home for Fallen and Friendless Girls." Out of the special appropriation which was included in the final estimate for the year 1885, entitled, "For the Support of Children Committed by Magistrates to various Charitable Institutions in the City of New York, at a per capita allowance of $2 per week—Deficiency for year 1885," the above tabulated institutions hav drawn for October, 1885, $47,586.35, and for November, 1885, $46,573.64. For the same months the "Home for Fallen and Friendless Girls" has drawn from the Excise fund $498.49.

These institutions seem to be doing a very good business, and their profits ought to be large enough to enable them to pay their taxes. But would it not be a stroke of economy on the part of the state to hav the children committed to the Children's Aid Society, which supports them at an average rate (as Dr. Foote, Jr., pointed out in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 23d) of $37.90 per year, instead of to these religious corporations which charge $104.00 annually?

One of the sections of the petition to be presented this winter to the legislature of this state asks for the repeal of the laws appropriating money from the public treasury for the support of the institutions founded and managed chiefly by sectarian denominations. In considering this clause, the legislature could not do better than to appoint a committee to investigate these institutions trafficking in charity. A thorough investigation would, we believe, reveal a thoroughly rotten system.

Editorial Notes.

WE acknowledge with sincere thanks the donations of J. G. Rodman, of Locust Valley, of $4.50, and Newton Whitehead of this city, of $4.75 toward illustrations.

REV. MR. TALMAGE was in Washington recently, and took advantage of the visit to pray to the senators. He had an audience of four. The rest entered the Senate chamber after the prayer was finished.

MR. JOSEPH COOK, the Boston Monday lecturer, informs the universe that "the chief trouble of Ireland is that it is Ireland." The chief trouble with Joseph Cook, retorts the Sun, is that he is Joseph Cook. If he had been somebody else he would hav had sense.

TALMAGE lectured in this city last week upon "The Absurdities of Evolution." He said that the human race is going backward instead of forward. We admit that Mr. Talmage's existence is an argument in favor of this theory; but then, one swallow doesn't make a summer.

IT is in and by these (Christian) schools that the Catholic faith, our greatest and best inheritance, is preserved whole and entire.—Leo XIII.

This is the office of the Christian school—the preservation of the Catholic faith.—Catholic Union and Times.

Precisely. We all know that, and it is just the reason why the American people do not propose to divide the school money.

ONE of the sharpest of THE TRUTH SEEKER contributors writes: "I see that Tucker and Appleton gave you 'fits' in Liberty. I hav heretofore regarded Appleton as an able writer, but when I found him capable of giving utterance to this absurdity, 'Civil government and theological are one and the same thing,' I concluded I had been vastly overrating him as a reasoner." As we said, our correspondent is very sharp.

"Now that the bitter cold weather has come, and thousands of wretched men and women and children out of employment, it is pleasant to think," says Helen Wilmans, "how warm and comfortable they can keep, leaning up against the outside walls of the magnificent church buildings of this and other cities. If it were not for this they would be tempted to warm themselvs about the stoves in the saloons and dance-houses. What a glorious boon to humanity the religion of the churches of to-day is, anyway!"

Too much Christianity is not good for ignorant negroes. One of them went "up to the Lord" on the 25th ult., at Henderson, Ky., because he had too much faith in biblical promises. A week ago last Sunday morning Calvin Simpson visited the house of Mrs. Graves, an aged woman living with her invalid son and two daughters. All were in bed, the hour being one o'clock. He broke down the door, and the language he used left no doubt of his intention. The women ran screaming from the house, habited only in their night clothes. The son ran to a neighbor's. Simpson followed the old lady, and struck her upon the head with a club, crushing in her skull. The girls hid under a bridge. The son brought the neighbor, who seized Simpson, and, with the help of others who had become aroused, lodged him in jail. The next Sunday morning about fifty men visited the jail, took Simpson from his cell, and led him out to a grove a short distance from the town. The leader of the men then asked him whether or not he was the murderer of Mrs. Graves. To this Simpson answered "Yes" in a sullen tone. To the question as to his reasons for committing the murder he replied: "The Lord commanded me to kill her, and I had to mind him." "Up you go to the Lord, then," replied the leader. Simpson was told to do what praying he desired to, and he began by declaring that he had a commission from God and praying that his life might be spared by divine interposition. The divine interposition not arriving, the negro was swung up and some fifty bullets lodged in his body. The people around Henderson regard his religious professions as sham, but we see no more reason to doubt the reality of his Christianity than that of Freeman.

AT the request of the Sabbath Association, Mayor Smith, of Philadelphia, last week issued a proclamation calling the attention of the people of that city to the law of 1794, forbidding any worldly employment or business on Sunday. The Sabbath Association thought this would scare the people of Philadelphia into going to church, or at least into closing their stores. But the proclamation had no effect whatever. Proprietors of cigar stores, barber shops, and confectionery stores continued to do business in the usual way. Milkmen and newspaper carriers went about their usual avocations without fear of the vengeance of the Sabbath Association. The published penalty of a fine of $4 or a six days' imprisonment in the House of Correction for any violation of the obsolete and almost forgotten law, did not seem to hav any terrors for the class of people whom the Sabbath Association desire to reach, and we recommend the association to establish an inquisition.

A LETTER in the New York Times of February 1st reveals a funny state of affairs at the Young Men's Christian Association in this city. The writer says:

"Being a strauger in New York, and wishing to read the North American Review, I called at the library of the Young Men's Christian Association, Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue, hoping to find it there. I was told by the librarian in charge that his instructions were not to let any one hav it or any book of fiction to read on Sunday. But he condescended to say that, if I would tell him what particular article I wanted to read, he would see if it was admissible for me to hav the magazine for that purpose. I had seen a good deal of narrowness in the work of this association elsewhere, but thought if Mr. Vanderbilt had provided so liberally for the New York Association in his will it might possibly be different. In the library or reading room were fifteen or twenty persons reading the good books selected for them, and the only English magazines were the Presbyterian and Methodist reviews, and Home Missionary reports."

ONCE in a while we find a sentiment in church papers that we can heartily indorse. Here is one from the Christian Advocate:

"Of all absurd methods of trying to convince men and women of sense of anything, a list of the opinions of great men seems to us among the most absurd. No man's opinion, except as an expert in matters of fact that no one but an expert can understand, is of any value except to children and weak-minded persons, only as the reasons upon which that opinion is founded are valid; and every man of sense must judge those reasons for himself before he adopts the opinion, no matter who holds it."

This is a good deal truer than gospel. But in arguing with Infidels Christians will ransack the graveyards of the world for names of those who hav been believers in their particular superstition. But they might as well bring the tombstones from which they get the names and set them in a row before the Infidel to convince him. For, as Dr. Buckley says, there is not one thing so impracticable, so monstrous, so pernicious, that some men or woman of great intellect and learning hav not believed in it.

OF the thousands of dollars subscribed to relieve the victims of the recent earthquakes in Spain, a correspondent of the London Times is unable to find that more than a fractional part was ever applied to the object for which it was intended. The correspondent says: "It was explained to me that the late archbishop had received a great deal of money for the victims of the earthquake. No account, however, is forthcoming of the expenditure. The present archbishop is equally reticent. On the other hand, extraordinary activity is displayed throughout the province in the restoration of churches, convents, and other religious establishments. These works are not limited to the edifices damaged by the earthquake, but many buildings that were only injured by the effects of time and neglect are now being renovated. I was shown two such structures in Granada. People hav not failed to wonder how it is that buildings which had been left to their fate for so many years happen to be repaired within a few months after the receipt of the subscriptions for the earthquake."

THE New York Tribune says:

"'Sigma' writes to THE TRUTH SEEKER that during the last few months he has been endeavoring to ascertain how and by what means he was converted from Christianity to Infidelity. 'And, strange as it may appear,' he states, 'I hav come to the dispassionate conclusion that the simple reading of the Bible has done it.' Indeed, that reminds us. Some nights ago a policeman ran across a chap uptown, where a great building is being erected, who was vigorously assaulting an immense block of granite with something which he held in his hand. "What are you doing there?' sharply inquired the policeman. 'Strange as it may appear,' was the chap's reply, as he held up the remains of a cooked vegetable, 'I am trying to pulverize this granit block with a boiled carrot.'"

This is a very brilliant hit; though where it hits we are unable to see. It reminds us, however, of the little girl's argument against Atheists. The story says: "A little western prodigy of a religious turn of mind, aged three years, has given forth the following moral lecture in the shape of a story: 'Once there were two colts. One of them belonged to a man who had a God and the other belonged to a man who didn't hav any God. One of t em looked over the fence and didn't hav anything to eat. His man didn't hav any God. The other colt eat lots and lots of grass in his pasture, and he grew, and grew, and grew, until he got a tail and a buggy to him. His man had a God.'" If the Tribune writer and the little girl continue their efforts, Infidelity and Atheism will soon be unknown.

Letters from Friends.

CHICAGO, ILL., Feb. 3, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The editorial, "Religious Toleration," in your issue of January 30th, is so in accord with my sentiments that I cannot forbear thanking you for expressing the same so admirably. How often hav I insisted, "The state has no right to prohibit any act not vicious or criminal. The state has no right to interfere with a person not trespassing on the rights of others." E. HOPKINS.

FARGO, D. T., Jan. 24, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 on account of TRUTH SEEKER. The paper comes regularly, and I cannot say too much in praise of the policy pursued by you in your effort to present to the people of this and other couatries the great truths embodied in our principles as Liberals. We must be up and at work. The daggers that are being thrust by the monstrous church are striking at the vitals of all our public institutions. Their effect is already too plain. We must organize and prepare for the conflict, and fight the battles of right against wrong.

Our good friend, E. A. Nugent, called on us last evening to consult as to what would be the best course to pursue. We first decided to organize at the earliest day possible, because in unity alone there is strength.

We decided to obtain the name of every Liberal in this city, then distribute Liberal literature among them—THE TRUTH SEEKER to everyone if possible—then call a meeting, and organize a branch of the American Secular Union. We hav plenty of material at hand to draw from, which we hope to demonstrate to you at a later day. We hav men of brain, weight, and influence. We hav the church also, with all its glory, superstition, and ignorance in our midst to comfort, but we are determined to be fearless and outspoken, and battle for the right and stand by the consequences.

Very truly yours, JOHN PETERKIN.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find check for $5. Send me one ALMANAC; the balance I donate to THE TRUTH SEEKER'S pictures. NEWTON WHITEHEAD.

JOLIET, ILL., Jan. 18, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I don't know as I can say anything to express my views as to the merits of your TRUTH SEEKER, but I am surprised at some of your correspondents who claim to be Liberals, and claim that they are right and every one that don't think as they do is all wrong. Do they ever think that there are no two faces alike, or any two minds alike; that we are all differently constituted, and therefore it is simply impossible to think alike? If they are as Liberal as they claim to be, why not concede to others what they claim for themselvs? It make no difference what a man or woman believes, if they are honest in that belief. Belonging to a certain church or belonging not to any, makes a man no better. It is a matter of his own choosing, and he is responsible for his own choosing, and no one else. I like Miss H. H. Gardener's writings very much, and shall send for her book very soon.

I will try and be more punctual in the future. Wishing you long life and success in your noble undertaking,

Yours for universal liberty, J. T. MILLSPAUGH.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Jan. 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Well, sir, I went to church again last Tuesday evening, to hear the Free Methodist, and after the meeting was over I had a tilt with the preacher just before starting for home. That evening he gave out word that he would visit any one at their homes if they wished him to do so, and after the meeting was over I handed him my card, and invited him to come and see me. "Are you a Christian?" said he. "No, sir," said I. "I am one of the strongest Infidels you ever saw." "Well," said he, "may I pray in your house if I come?" "No, sir," said I, "for I want no such foolishness in my house; but I hav some very good reading matter there, such as Thomas Paine's works, Colonel Ingersoll's works, together with the New York TRUTH SEEKER and many other Liberal works. I also hav the Bible there, and if you will come, I think I can amuse you very well for an hour or so. And," said I, "I will giv you the first chance to convert me, and if you make a failure on me, then I will try and convert you." "But," said he, "I can't convert you?" "How do you know?" said I. "You hav not tried yet." "But I know I can't," said he. "Well, then," said I, "giv me a chance on you." "Oh, you can't convert me," said he, "and if you will not let me pray in your house I will not come and see you." "Did you ever get anything you prayed for?" said I. "Yes," said he; "God cured me of a very bad cold one time." "Well," said I, "some old woman would have done as well as that for you. But I never got anything that I prayed for, and I can make as good a prayer as you." Then I bad him good-night, and went home.

But the next evening I went there again, and took THE TRUTH SEEKER with me, and after the meeting was over I went to him and said: "Since you will not come and see me, I will make you a present of this paper, if you will read it." "Oh, I hav seen plenty of truth seekers," said he, "but it is not the truth they are after." "I beg pardon, sir," said I, "but it is the truth they are after, and nothing else; and you will find more truth in that one paper than you will find in your whole Bible." The next evening I went there again, and when an opportunity offered I asked him if he had read that paper. "Well, no," said he. "I found that it smelled of tobacco, and I put it in the stove." "Ah!" said I, "that was only an excuse for not reading it," for I am very careful of my reading matter, and no tobacco had been near it. Just then another man came up and spoke to him, when he turned upon him and said, "I will not talk with you; you are drunk." Now, I will swear on the Bible, or the TRUTH SEEKER ALMANAC, that the man was not drunk, and had they been out of doors the man would hav knocked him down for his insolence, and I would hav said, "'Tis well."

I hav never been to that church but what he has insulted me as well as others. The first evening I went there he asked me my name, and I gave it to him, but he was not gentleman enough to giv me his, and the last evening I was there I took occasion to remind him of it. "If I approach a stranger, and wish to learn his name," said I, "I will first tell him mine, and then ask for his name. I can at least teach you what the character of a gentleman is."

I shall probably not go there any more, for I do not wish to be seen in such company. I get THE TRUTH SEEKER every Saturday night, so you see I am prepared for church every Sunday. This Free Methodist preacher finally told me his name, Rev. Mr. Sheppard, and said he was from Illinois, and I guess it must be so, for all he does is to make a noise. Talk about shouting, he only seems to be mad because he cannot make more noise; but he don't get many converts, and this is a good season, too.

Please do not forget my books.

Yours always, GEO. M. HARE.

MIDDLEBURY, IND., Jan. 29, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me a word in the hair-snake discussion. A hair-snake occupies the same position in evolution that all the lower animals do. According to J. D. Steele, F.G.S., and many other authors who are regarded as standard, they hav an origin entirely different from that given by your subscribers, a hair never forming even a part of the animal under consideration. The above author says: "The hair-snake is so called from the erroneous notion that it originates from horse-hairs soaked in water. Probably by the eggs being eaten the larvæ obtain access to the bodies of grasshoppers, etc., and, coiling up within the cavity, reach a length of ten times tenfold that of their host. At maturity they desert the insects at whose expense they hav been nourished, and seek the water to lay their eggs and die." The above is quoted verbatim from Steele's "Zoology," and more authority might be easily given to show that a hair never did or could change or be changed into an animal—at least it could not without the process of digestion and assimilation. As the exact origin of the animals under discussion is not very well understood, even by our best naturalists, it is evident that the description of them given by Messrs. Wallace and Van Pelt hav but a single merit, viz., the introduction of the subject and consequent inculcation of truth in the minds of the many readers of the much-valued TRUTH SEEKER. It will also be noticed that, while they are both positiv of the origin, naturalists are not quite so certain, and say "probably." Are there not cases on record, regarded as authentic, of hair growing after death, the hair using the decaying body in its growth, the same as vegetation uses the nutriment in the soil? Here it becomes, or at least acts the part of, a plant, while Mr. Van Pelt, of Cleveland, would hav it change to an animal. C. D. Wallace's description of the "hair-snake" given in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 9th will not bear investigation. Would the millions of animalculæ that make their home in the "slime and dirt," as he asserts, hav the power to move the hair? If they could, would their movements be in harmony or unison? Would they not exert their millions of movements in as many different directions, making an equilibrium, so that hair, mud, and all would remain in a state of relativ rest forever if there be no other disturbing cause? Would not this be in accordance with one of the first laws of motion, made known to the world by Sir Isaac Newton? Again, does the sponge (which is not an animal, but a colony of animals, or "subaqueous city," as Huxley remarks) hav the power of locomotion? Or is not man the only animal having sufficient intelligence to take possession of a home and then transport it about with him? And finally, is the sacred, old, and identical story of Samson and the foxes in accordance with the well-known and fixed laws of nature? If it is, so is friend Wallace's, and vice versa.

M. R. TEESDALE.

FARMINGTON, O., Jan. 18, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Apropos of Mrs. Wheelock's letter in the last TRUTH SEEKER, I wish to say that thirty-five years ago I lived neighbor to a good Methodist family, in which was a girl not over four years old that had not attended school, and in her normal state knew nothing of writing, and yet, under some influence that would come upon her, she would write; and the writing so done would claim to come from the dead, so-called. I tested her myself. The writing would be short sentences addressed to friends, and signed by some deceased person.

Now, in the light of facts like these, and ten thousand others, it is the grossest assumption and inconsistency for Truesdell, Miss Gibson, Elmina, etc., to assert that Spiritualism is fraud. Let them meet our facts. I must say that the disregard for facts and logic which some of our Materialist friends evince is some palliation for severe language, to say the least. Do you say we are credulous? Let us see who is credulous. You admit—we all admit—that Truesdell takes a clean slate, puts a bit of pencil on it, and ties a slate on this, or puts the first slate tight up under the table-leaf, and writing is done on the slate. Ella tells us she is sure, yes, she may say she 'knows Truesdell did it." Elmina gets the name "D. M. Bennett" under the same circumstances, and "Truesdell did it." We say spirits did it, using for the purpose an element they find in Truesdell that they do not find in all—in fact, in few—and utilizing a law which we, as yet, do not understand. Now, in all candor, I ask, who is most credulous? Why, my dear good sisters, if you see a man tugging away at his boot-straps, and he, by common consent, rises up in the air, you at once say, "Of course he raised himself," if so saying (and so "believing," of course) is necessary to serve the cause of Materialism!

Why do we say it is spirits? Elmina has told us; "D. M. Bennett" on the slate; "H. W. Curtis," a deceased brother, on a slate in my possession, with a glass screwed over it to preserve it, and the slate full of writing, and this slate I washed with a wet towel, and no one touched it but myself, and I held another slate over this as tightly as the glass now is, while the writing was done. Here are the sublime facts, my sisters, before which we rest. Truesdell knows full well that I hav given the true version.

From the time of the Twing rap till now, and be the phenomena of whatever phase, it has ever claimed to be spirits. It is not mundane. Are we then such fools? My dear friends all, you will hav chance to work for Liberalism after you hav thrown off the mortal coil. E. F. CURTIS.

PEOA, UTAH, Jan. 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing nothing from Peoa in your highly-prized paper, perhaps it would not be amiss to drop a few lines.

I hear from a friend that S. P. Putnam will be around here this winter. Would that he was here, and could stay in this polygamy-ridden country for at least six months. I think he could make more converts in that time than the Mormons could in the Sandwich Islands in that many years.

Three years ago there was not a person in this town that dare say he was (what they call us now) an Infidel; but now there are a good many. But most of them are mighty timid for the reason that they are depending on the community in a measure for their livelihood.

I think the people of Utah are opening their eyes a little since hearing Liberalism, and if we could hav some of our good speakers here it would do much good.

I am of the same opinion as our friend W. F. Jamieson. I think we ought to do more than we hav been doing for the children, and a better idea could not be hit upon than sowing broadcast Liberal leaves, such as would set them to thinking.

The saints are in a pickle in Utah about the new Edmunds bill, and hav not got over the scare of the old one yet, as the underground railroad is loaded all the time with God's chosen people (the polygs).

Hoping we may see S. P. Putnam soon, I remain,

Yours, as ever, H. B. WRIGHT.

OGDEN, UTAH, Dec. 30, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I thought it my duty to write you concerning our missionary work and what appears to me as our further prospect in Utah. Knowing the space in THE TRUTH SEEKER to be valuable, I shall be as brief as possible. What we need in Utah is a territorial Union, organized under the auspices of the American Secular Union. We are all well aware that organization is the indispensable condition of effectiv action. It should be borne in mind, though, that organization can only utilize elements already existing, i. e., in order to hav a right organization, we need the right kind of men and women to form it; thus if the individuals are not in any respect right in character and development, they are unfit material to enter into true organization, and wherever we find a man who claims to be emancipated from the religious creeds and dogmas, but who proves himself in his freedom selfish, who takes no interest in the world's well-being, who will associate with nobody in behalf of progress, whose sympathies are shut off and his purse-strings tightened against every appeal for coöperation and help in the emancipation of his fellow-beings from the thraldom of their religious superstition, such a man is unfit material to enter into true organization. He is quite as unlovely an object to look upon as the orthodox Christian fanatic who is weighted down with his religious dogmas. For my part, in choosing, of the two men I would prefer the Christian by far, for then we would know what we would hav to contend with. I am sorry to say we find quite a number of this class of men in Utah, and a great many of them call themselvs Freethinkers. This kind of Freethinking is no benefit to humanity. The world would be much better without it. I will state here that on my missionary trip through southern Utah I found some men who imagined that to be a Freethinker was all that was necessary. But we find that there are other things that are equally, and some even more, necessary than Freethinking. Radically right thinking means a vast deal more than merely Freethinking. Freethinking may think right or it may think wrong in the exercise of its freedom. Again, our Freethinking may be useless or injurious rather than beneficial, unless it is right thinking or critically exact, and this is what we find to-day—that all of our leading reformers and agitators are men that are practically and radically scientific, not teachers of wild speculations and that which is unthinkable, but are teachers of the definit knowledge of principles, laws, and methods. I shall now speak of another class of Freethinkers in Utah, and I am sorry to say that they are few and far between. Now, this is the class of men and women who are composed of the right kind of material to form into a true organization. They can realize the benighted condition of their fellow-beings. They hav the true spark of humanity within them. They are ready and willing to do all they can in reason, and in some instances they do more than they really should—i. e., I mean according to their circumstances—to liberate their fellow-beings from the thraldom of superstition. If we had enough of this kind of material to form a territorial organization, I would hav no fear for our cause in Utah. The men that we can tie to here, generally speaking, are in moderate circumstances, and some very much so, and the only prospect that I can see for our cause in this benighted, priest-ridden territory in the future is to get assistance from somewhere, in order to start the ball a-rolling until such time, at least, that we number sufficient to form a territorial Union. Now, here is a grand opening for some of our philanthropists who has the means to spare and who is desirous for the spread of Freethought. There is no place in the world that needs it more than this benighted territory, Utah. Their names would go down to posterity as benefactors. Now, to be plain in this matter, all that is wanted here is sufficient means to hire a Radical lecturer, one who is well acquainted with the tenets of Mormonism, and means at his command to hire halls to lecture in. He should be well supplied with Freethought matter, Ingersoll's lectures, etc., for distribution. If such a man could be kept in the field say for twelve months, with a fair salary and traveling expenses paid, and thus lecturing, discussing, and traveling from place to place so as to keep the pot continually on the boil, I hav no doubt in my mind that at the end of the twelve months we would hav a strong territorial Secular Union firmly established, and a large subscription for our papers. Then we would be able to hold our own and assist the general cause, instead of being beggars. Persons coming to Salt Lake City, or Ogden, can form but a vague idea of Mormonism. In order to find out the manners and customs of the Mormons they must go to the outside settlements, of which there are a good many, stop a while, and associate with the people. By this means they would soon learn what Mormonism is and its power. The Mormons are like other Christians in this practice of putting the best in view. They will tell you that they believe in being as wise as serpents and harmless as doves, but let me tell you they are very far from being harmless. The Mormons as a mass are credulous and very tenacious. They are generally well posted in the Bible, and can get away with any of the Christians with regard to it, and when arguing with Christians they invariably take the Bible in its literal sense, and thus you will readily see that none of the Christian sects are able to hold their own with them. They take this course, though, only when it suits them. They are up to all the trickeries of Christianity, I can assure you. Besides places of worship or meeting-houses, as they call them, I will state here, they hav also temples, but they are only used on special occasions and for special purposes. On Sundays their meeting-houses are generally well filled with the credulous mass listening with a feeling of awe to some elder, priest, or apostle who is rolling his eyes upward, imploring vacuity and nothingness to feed and clothe them, to confound their enemies, and to bring the wisdom of the wise to naught (climax), with emphasis, and, "O Lord! thou knowest that no man can serve two masters." Generally speaking, though, the Mormons are honest in their belief, and they will often come with sentences like this, strongly emphasized: "I know that Mormonism is true. I know that John Taylor is a prophet of God, and I know that he is God's vicegerent upon the earth." You can see by this the kind of material we hav to work amongst.

But when they do get their eyes opened, they invariably make good Infidels and good citizens. Problem: How can a man be a true citizen to a Secular form of government and at the same time be a sworn citizen to the kingdom of God or an autocratic government? It is absolutely impossible.

If this kind of Christianity is not checked and kept down, it will only be a matter of time before it will fill our free country with a strong smattering of the worst kind of traitors.

I will draw my letter to a close, or it will occupy too much of your valuable space, but before doing so I will make an appeal to the Freethinkers, Spiritualists, Materialists, and Agnostics of Utah. I think that the time has come when we should wake up to a true sense of our duty, be on the alert, and coöperate, work with zeal and with a pull all together. Although few are we in numbers, yet by using proper tactics we can accomplish much. This we should always bear in mind, that all of the Christian sects are our bitter enemies. We can look for no favors from such quarters whatever. We should distribute all the Freethought matter possible among our neighbors, and get all the subscribers we can to our cause. For ours is the holiest and noblest cause that a man can belong to. It is for the emancipation of our fellow-beings from the slavery of superstition, and let our main object be, and as soon as practicable, to organize into a territorial Secular Union. By this means we will grow stronger and stronger, and we would soon become a power that would be felt and respected in this territory, instead of being, as we are, scattered with our energies, ostracized and ignored.

Yours fraternally, ROBERT WILSON.

ELMO, ARK., Jan. 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 9th inst. appears an article from our friend, Mr. D. Priestly, of Milwaukee, Oregon, which I suppose he intended for an answer to my proposition published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 5th, 1885. In that proposition I said that I would pay the subscription price of THE TRUTH SEEKER two years to any person who would prove by geometrical calculation that the sun was over 12,000 miles from the earth. I say so yet. It must be a geometrical calculation shown by figures and diagram, based on known facts, not by a train of imaginary reasoning based on imagination and the theory of astronomy which was advanced near 2,000 years ago by persons who thought the earth was flat.

I hav not yet said what I thought the distance was from the earth to the sun. I make these propositions simply for information, not to call down upon myself an avalanche of personal irony from persons who are inclined to use that instead of fair argument. It seems reasonable that if there ever was a geometrical diagram illustrating the distance that intervenes between the earth and sun, it would still be extant, and could be produced by some of the scholars of our country. Mr. Priestly says that astronomy is no guess-work. This I admit in part. As to the relativ movements of the heavenly bodies, as they are generally termed, astronomy is no guess-work; that can be determined to the fractional part of a minute. But this is accomplished entirely by their relativ movements, not by their supposed distance. I would say this, that there are some things advanced in the teachings of astronomy which I am loth to believe, such as this: First, That the earth travels in its orbit at the rate of 65,000 miles an hour. If this were the case, it looks reasonable to suppose that the earth would be void of atmosphere, as that would trail behind and be left in the wake. A cyclone traveling 150 miles an hour carries nearly everything before it. Second, It is said that light travels 185,000 miles in one second, and that there are planets so remote from us that it takes light traveling at that rate 60,000 years to reach us. This seems to be drawing it rather fine. My philosophy is this, that light and sight travel at the same speed. A man would be very old, and then hav to be able to prolong his sight to several generations of his posterity before these remote planets would be visible. Third, It is hard for me to accept the prevailing theory in regard to the distance from the earth to the planets. It is said that it is 2,000,000,000 miles to the pole star, yet when we travel north one geographical degree the pole star seems to rise about one degree. The pole star is not visible at a point farther south than forty degrees south latitude. These things being the facts, it is easy to estimate the approximate distance to the North Star. For fear that I am occupying too much space, I will close by saying that I will, by the first of next April, prepare and send to you a diagram illustrating the reasons that I hav for doubting the truth of the supposed distance that intervenes between the earth and sun. In the mean time I am not much afraid that my friendly correspondents will force me into very deep water in this matter. JOHN HINDMAN,

Surveyor and Civil Engineer.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WIS., Jan. 26, E.M. 286.

MR. EDITOR: It was Ben Franklin that startled a plundering world with the wonderful announcement that "honesty is the best policy." Now, as the Congress of the United States are a part of this plundering world, would it not be at least prudent in our statesmen to heed this gentle admonition of the great Infidel philosopher? Would it not be wisdom in them to call a halt in their reckless career for place and power, when they are tempted to pander to the most corrupt elements of society and waste the people's wealth upon the rich and aristocratic? Do they not know that through their bogus legislation millions groan under the iron hand of oppression, and thousands perish for want of employment? Did it add one jot or tittle to the honor of ex-President Grant to giv his wealthy widow $5,000 a year of the people's hard-earned money? Did it add one jot or tittle to the comfort of Mrs. Grant, who had already been more than provided for? Our government has run the gantlet of a vicious mob of plunderers for a quarter of a century, and when she escaped that G. O. P., though bleeding from many wounds, the people rejoiced at her deliverance. But, alas! she has fallen into the hands of a fresh horde of plunderers, and the end is not yet. Yours for the best policy, NELSON HUNT.

SCOTCH RIDGE, O., Jan. 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I received a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 26th, and was much pleased with it. I am a school-teacher and a Freethinker. I am a young man twenty-two years old, and some of my friends think that I hav taken a bad step, but it was through investigation I became what I am, and not ignorance of facts. When I was a boy I read the Bible as many do at the present time, that is, without reasoning, but believed it all, because it was found in the Bible. I think we should read the Bible as we do any other book, and accept that which is truth and reject the error. The great trouble with folks is that they think the Bible is infallible and a true guide in all things; but it has long since been proved to be fallible, and contains error. Oh, the doctrin of hell is, to my sense of justice, worse than the old Spanish Inquisition. In short, all that I can say for it is that I do not respect a man that believes such a doctrin. Folks are too apt to close their reason and open their Bible, and so believe it all because they did not giv it a moment's thought as to whether it was true or not. For my part, I will run my chances, and liv in strict obedience to the laws of nature and the religion of humanity, which is sovereign justice, which ought to be the essence of all religions.

I will write again when I get older in the cause, and more in love with nature. I remain as ever a firm friend to the cause, and think your valuable paper would be an educator and a safe guide.

Inclosed you will please find $1 for your paper till that time expires. ALVA KOONS.

MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H., Jan. 28, 235.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 with the name and address of a new subscriber. I am in hopes to send you some more names soon. There are quite a number here who indorse the sentiments of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but dare not be outspoken enough to take an Infidel paper. Hoping that the circulation of your paper will be increased, and that the cause of Freethought will prosper in the future,

I am yours truly, MRS. MARY A. HORNE.

WANSHIP, UTAH, Jan. 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Is it not strange what ridiculous things people will believe and do when they are under the influence of a religious craze? For instance, "us Mormons" do not get our lives insured, as we use a "life preserver," which makes Utah a poor field for insurance companies. It is a very simple and inexpensiv device, and I do not think it is patented. It simply consists of two three-cornered holes cut in your underclothes, one on the breast and one on the knee. The only difficulty you will hav in procuring L. P. drawers and undershirt is to hav the "presto change" said aright over your initiatory suit, which must be said in some of the temples here. It is true that a party of saints were blown up (L. P. underclothes and all) near here last week, and that trees fall on us, lightning strikes us, assassins kill us, we drown and smash in railroad accidents, etc., etc., the same as you poor folks who do not wear the life preserving underclothes, and still they will not see the fallacy or absurdity of such claims, but are rushing to the temples all the time to go through their mnmmery. They are also married there at the same time for all eternity (?) (bad for a fellow who happens to get a scolding wife). You remember when Christ was cornered on the problem of "who would hav the woman—in the sweet by and by—who had seven husbands here," he kept up his reputation of being smart by answering, "There is no marrying or giving in marriage there." So on that passage our temples do a land office business, as none of them want to be without a good supply of wives there, although at present the efficient United States officers here make it risky to indulge in plural numbers now.

WM. REYNOLDS.

WEST CHESHIRE, CONN., Jan. 26, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please send by mail to me the following: "Men, Women, and Gods," by Helen H. Gardener; "Sabbath-Breaking," and "Bible Morals," by Mr. Remsburg, for which find one dollar's worth of paper in this.

I think Miss Gardener is the smartest writer you hav in the camp. I read her address to the clergymen and others to discuss the point in public. I think that the most sensible thing she could do under the circumstances. I like Miss Gibson, too; I think both are splendid, peerless women, and I hope they may both liv long enough to see woman man's equal in all things under the law, as she is now his superior in many things. In morals, virtue, and temperance, she is man's superior. But I must say I was happily surprised to find that woman could reason as well as a man if she only has a chance, as Miss Gibson shows plainly in her comments on the acts of old Bible characters. I wish we had more such women for teachers, I think we might sooner look for the millennium. I admire her fairness in investigating Mr. Truesdell. I read Mrs. Slenker's pieces with pleasure. I may say that since I commenced reading THE TRUTH SEEKER I hav believed more than ever in woman's rights as equal in all things before the law. Oh, how I wish we had a few rich men in the faith of regenerating the world to Freethought. If I had a million of money I would hire all such women as Miss Gardener, Miss Gibson, and Mrs. Slenker to go out as home missionaries to convert our home people. It seems to be women's place to act as teachers. I like Colonel Ingersoll, Mr. Watts, Remsburg, Putnam, and all our men lecturers and writers, but somehow I like the women's sentiment the best. Could you not get more of the Freethought women to write for THE TRUTH SEEKER?

Yours in the faith forever, L. P. A.

NEW GLASGOW, N. S., Jan. 31, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I was much pleased to see in a recent issue of your paper a letter from Dr. Baran advocating the establishment of colonies of Freethought. I hav often thought of this, and believe it would do more than anything else to advance the cause of "Universal Mental Liberty." If such a colony was formed in an agreeable part of the country, I for one would locate there. I believe in this way we could prove to the world that Freethinkers as a rule are better living people than those who profess Christianity. I would like to see, through the columns of your valuable paper, the opinions of Liberals on this question. What is your opinion?

Another thing I would like to mention, and perhaps it has been done although I hav not seen it. I think it would be a good plan to ascertain, as near as possible, the number of outspoken Freethinkers in the United States and Canada. Now that the American Secular Union has lecturers in nearly every state in the union, and portions of Canada, I think it could be done without much trouble, and I believe that the advantages we would gain by our strength being known would pay for the trouble. I would also like to see a Liberal political party as soon as possible.

Very truly yours, F. M. BORDEN.

MCCUNE, KAN., Jan. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: My TRUTH SEEKER still comes to hand. I want to say to my Liberal friends, let us stop calling each other hard names or quarreling among ourselvs. We hav enough to do to fight the enemy. M. S. GOWIN.

DANVILLE, IND., Jan. 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5, which please place to our credit for subscription on THE TRUTH SEEKER. We like your paper much as a fearless advocate of human rights, also the fair and impartial manner of treating all your correspondents, however they may differ. As long as the paper pursues its present liberal course consider us not only subscribers, but firm advocates of human rights. Fraternally yours,

MRS. L. H. GURLEY.

LONG LAKE, MINN., Jan. 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I do not pretend to be a censor of your paper, but I do claim to hav some understanding of the amenities of life and the usages of civilized journalism, and I say that when you published that low, senseless diarrhœa of abuse in the issue of Jan. 2d, signed by Chas. F. Blackburn, you violated those usages to the extent of offending not only all of your Spiritualist readers—and I believe they constitute the majority—but every decent Materialist as well. At first I could scarcely believe the evidence of my eyes that THE TRUTH SEEKER would lend its columns to the publicity of such billingsgate—there surely must be some mistake about its getting in. You cannot afford to publish such a production, which, if it had not the respectability afforded by your columns, would be beneath the notice of every self-respecting person. I like your paper in general, so I will not say, "Stop my paper," although when I read the thing in question I came nearer to it than I ever before thought I could come. JOS. H. LYDIARD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Seasons.

SPRING.

When the spring has come again,
With the sunshine and the rain,
And the violets are peeping through
The earth;
Then the birds with joy will sing,
To welcome in the spring,
Making all things joyous with
Their mirth.

When the rills begin to flow,
And the grass begins to grow,
And the trees are putting forth
In leaf;
When lovely Nature wakes—
Our life of hers partakes,
So beautiful are her gifts
Beyond belief.

SUMMER.

When spring has come and gone,
Then summer-time will dawn,
And farmers' boys will rake the fresh
Mown hay;
With the ripe corn and the wheat;
Amid the clover blossoms sweet,
The busy bee is humming all
The day.

In the summer's fiercest heat,
To the woods we oft retreat,
And watch the flickering sunlight
Come and go,
On many a knoll and nook;
Watch it sparkle in the brook;
As it bubbles and it splashes
In its flow.

AUTUMN.

When the summer's passed away,
Then autumn comes so gay,
And is the glorious time of all
The year;
She to all of earth will giv
Half her life that we may liv,
And she of all the seasons is
The peer.

When the golden and the brown
And the crimson shower down,
You see, and love, and want to Gather all;
Nature shows what she can do,
In the old, but ever new,
Changes of her colors in
The fall.

WINTER.

Then cold winter will be here,
Merriest time of all the year,
When we gather round the firelight's
Cheerful blaze,
While outside the wind will blow,
Drifting high the spotless snow,
Making things sparkle to
Our gaze.

And it covers everything—
The filigree work of the great frost king,
And we wonder which we would hav
Always here,
The budding spring, the summer heat,
The golden fall, the winter's sleet;
Which of all the seasons do we hold
Most dear?

MRS. FLORA W. THOMAS.

An Engineer's Story.

A few years ago the writer was employed on one ot the great Western railroads in the capacity of an engineer. We were running in what we call the chain-gang, the first in the first out. Our road was one of the loveliest in the country—through valleys where the neat farm building and the sleek herds of cattle and sheep spoke of thrift and comfort, then through woods where no habitation would be seen save that of some wood-chopper or tie-maker, ornamented with coon-skins stretched to dry on the rough, unhewn logs of which its walls were composed. Emerging from the wood or timber, the road for miles skirted the banks of one of our largest Western rivers, while on the other hand high bluffs reared their peaks hundreds of feet above the level of the river, and in many places would actually overhang the road, in consequence of which the road was very crooked, and after heavy rains was dangerous to run on dark nights, on account of earth-slides and huge masses of rock that would be washed down the ravines and lodged upon the track, or the bridges that might be washed away. Every few miles, where the people could find a place on the hill-side to build a few houses would spring up little towns, and that you may better judge of the places where they would build a village, I will say that often a building would be three stories in front, while you could step from the ground onto the roof at its rear.

At the time of which I write business was good, and the roads were doing their utmost to keep the freight moving, and thus avoid blockades; consequently every man was worked early and late, night and day. Often the engin men and conductors would not hav an opportunity for sleep or rest, except as they sat on some side-track, awaiting an opposing train. On one occasion we had been perched up in the cab for the space of over sixty hours, getting down only to oil the machinery or get a bite to eat at the lunch counters kept at different stations along the road, and we were about worn out.

It was nearing dusk as we approached the end of our run. The sun had gone down behind banks of heavy black clouds, and, as we pulled the long train into the yard, the rain began to fall in that quiet, easy manner that givs promis of a dark, gloomy, disagreeable night.

But we did not heed it then; our only thought was to register our trip, and find some place to stretch our weary limbs and rest till morning,

I will tell you how we were sorely disappointed. While we were reporting work to be done on engin, orders came to send the engin to R—— for stock train.

There was one engineer to go out ahead of us, and he was called. In a few minutes he was in the house, looking sad and broken-hearted, for his little girl, a beautiful child of seven years, was very ill and not expected to liv through the night.

We knew instinctivly that he longed to stay with his sick child, and worn out as we were, and terribly exausted, we volunteered to take his run. What did that mean? It meant 263 miles, or about twenty-four hours without sleep. Our orders read, "Eng. v. Eng. 394. Run wild from W. to R. O. K.—A. T. I., Supt."

We had passed over nearly half the distance and arrived at Junction M. There was no green light out, so we hurried on, but we knew that we must hold at the next station to meet express, or to get orders to run on her time to the next, still eleven miles on. Everything went well for a few miles, when I found that I had more than I had contracted for to watch ahead and keep the others awake. I got down, threw in a few coals to keep awake myself, filled a short, black clay pipe and lay back on my seat sure that I would not close my eyes, for in three minutes we would be on the siding where we could get a few moments' rest, but I did close my eyes, and when my head fell forward and struck the framework of the cab I awoke. There was no station in sight; I looked out, and almost beneath us, by the aid of headlight, the water of the river was plainly visible. We had passed and left the station eight miles behind. I woke the fireman and looked at my watch. It was three miles to the next station, and in five minutes the express was due to leave there. I put on steam; should she be one or two minutes late we would make it. At this station, and about an eighth of a mile from the depot, was a curve in which stood a large elevator, obstructing the view of men on opposing trains. We were almost there. I reached for the whistle lever, when around the curve shot the rays of light from the engin of the express. To stop our engin, reverse, and start to back was the work of a moment. "Jo," I said, "put out that headlight!" which he did in very short order. The coming train was then about a quarter of a mile ahead of us, and running at a full rate of speed. We had ten miles to back and keep out of the way, and to gain enough time to allow us to get into the switch; then commenced such a race as I would never run again to hold a position on any road. Backing at a high rate of speed is very dangerous, the tender is so short and jumps around, and there is nothing to hold it steady. But we made it, and when the express drew up to the station we were ready to register verbally, and compare time as though we had sat there for hours. We had been reported as having run through against green signals, but the conductor told the operator that he must hav been dreaming, as we had sat there for a long time, and that it was a pity for one so young to be so addicted to strong drink that he should imagin he saw engins and trains running wild without and against orders!

Of course the operator was right, and we knew it, and had the matter been looked up and proven, it would hav lost us our position and debarred us from ever finding employment on other roads.

But nothing was ever said about it—as the officers of the engin department knew how it was, and they were short of competent men and did not like to lose one.

But I am taking too much of your valuable space and will only say that little Gracie Reed did not die, but that the last time I saw her she was a fine little girl of eleven years, and, like her father and mother, was a Free-thinker. B. I. G.

In the Nursery.

Shoulder to shoulder they march along,
To the rollicking air of an old camp song;
Jasper is captain, eager and grand,
And he pompously issues his words of command;
First in the ranks comes curly-haired Ray,
With bright-eyed Bennie and sweet little Fay,
And following close, with martial tread,
Are blue-eyed Bertie and Baby Fred;
"Forward! march!" and away they go,
Shoulder to shoulder, to meet the foe.

Shoulder to shoulder they drowsily lie,
While mother sings softly a lullaby.
Jasper and Bennie are deep in thought,
And Ray still muses on battles unfought,
And little Fay wonders, with half-shut eyes,
"If birdies ever fly up to the skies;"
While Baby Fred's soft, tiny hands unclasp,
And from mother's strong fingers loose their grasp
Shoulder to shoulder, away they creep
To the Palace of Dreams, in the Land of Sleep.

—Our Little Ones.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PUZZLE.

Ohw wetes si elfi nehw ehop is ghih,
Dan optins su to eth olga
Werhe lasepures adcen ni eryve yec,
Nad sojy retih gwins fulndo.

Overton, Ga. SUE BELL.

2.—ENIGMA.

I am composed of 17 letters.
My 10, 13, 4, 8, is what none of us would like to be called.
My 1, 7, 17, is an organ of the human body.
My 6, 5, 2, 11, denotes sex.
My 9, 12, 16, is a useful tool.
My 15, 5, 6, 11, is a coin.
My 9, 3, 17, is necessary to life.
My whole is the name of a friend of Miss Wixon. PAPA A.

Westboro, Mass.

3.—CHARADE.

A bright red jewel is the whole,
Latin diminutiv for coal;
A boil of long continuance sore,
Malignant, without central core.
Its first, a vehicle on wheels,
Or carriage for railways, reveals.
Its second serves at night for bed,
By day it serves for seat instead;
A wooden case—it may be said
To be as well sweet cake or bread.
Your parent's brother is its third,
And these combine to make one word.

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

4.—MATHEMATICS.

If a boy be seventeen years old to-day, how much money must be put at compound interest so that it will amount to $5,000 when he is twenty-one years old? WM. SCOTT.

5.—MATHEMATICS.

If sixteen rails fence a rod, how many acres in that square field of such extent that every rail will fence an acre? G. W. WILLIAMS.

6.—REBUS.

Motto for young workers.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JAN. 30, 1886.

1.–It reads the same both ways. 2.–2,029. 3.–Bogosloo, one of the Aleutian islands.

4.–B
TEA
BEADS
ADZ
S

5.–Deer-stalking (dears talking).

SOLVERS.—Willie Alexander, Edward Bambach, D.D., Wirtemburg.

Correspondence.

CHATHAM, N. Y., Jan. 24, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and mamma reads the Children's Corner to brother Robbie and me. I never hav seen a letter from Chatham, so I will send one. I am six years old and hav never been to school, only to mamma, but am nearly through with the Second Reader.

Yours with love, LILLIE L. BROWNING.

ONEIDA, ILL., Jan. 23, 1886.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: I thought I would write you a letter. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as I can remember. I like the Children's Corner very much. I am nine years old. I hav been going to school a month this term. School is going to last two months more. I hav two sisters and five brothers. I hav one little cat—she is yellow. I can play with her. I hope my letter will be published if you can read it. I must stop now. Good-bye.

EDITH REES.

GEORGETOWN, COL., Jan. 28, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would like to write you a letter.

I am nearly nine years old. I go to school every day. I am on page 103 of Swinton's Second Reader. I want to tell you of our pets. We hav a lot of chickens, and a fine old cat, twelve years old. He is tamer than some cats. He lets the canaries get on his back and he never hurts them. We hav a parrot, and I hav fine fun with him; he bites my hair and begs for butter and pie. He gets on the end of papa's walking-stick to play with me. Last summer he used to fly on the mountain and go around with the pigeons and go in their box. He would look at their little babies, and fight the old birds, and would not let them go in. He is very fond of a bath. He has a whole bucket of water to splash in.

Mamma takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I should like to see my letter in it, if you think it nice enough. WILLIE WESTCOTT OLD.

WESTBORO, Jan. 29, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I ought to hav written you before, but I go to school now, and don't hav time to write. To-day I am at home with a cold, so I thought I would write. I got the handkerchief all right. I think it very pretty. I sent you a penwiper—did you get it. Papa sent for THE TRUTH SEEKER from Dec. 1st for three months, so as to be sure and get December 19th, but he got all but that.

Papa wrote out an enigma for me last night, and I am going to send it to you to find the answer. ELIZA MAY ALEXANDER.

[Thanks for the nice pen-wiper. We did not know who sent it till we received your letter.—ED. C. C.]

J. E. REMSBURG'S APPOINTMENTS.

J. E. Remsburg left Atchison for the East on the 3d inst. The following is his program so far as arranged:

Albany, Mo...Thur., Fri., Sat., Sun., Feb. 4, 5, 6, 7.
Brookfield, Mo.....Mon., Tu., " 8, 9.
Mechanicsburg, Ill.Wed., Thur., Fri., " 10, 11, 12.
Geneseo, Ill.....Sat., Sun., " 13, 14.
Earlville, Ill.....Mon., Wed., " 15, 17.
Paw Paw, Ill.....Tu., " 16.
Battle Creek, Mich.....Thur., " 18.
Wayland, " .....Fri., " 19.
Hastings, " .....Sat., Sun., " 20, 21.
Holland, N. Y.....Mon., Tu., " 22, 23.
Java Village, N.Y..Wed., Thur., Fri., " 24, 25, 26.
Troy, " .....Sun., " 28.
Warrensburg, " ..Mon., Tu., Wed., Mar. 1. 2, 3.
Cohoes, " .....Thur., " 4.
Saco, Me.....Sat., " 6.
Portland, Me.....Sun. (10:30 A.M.), " 7.
Boston, Mass.....Sun. (7:30 P.M.), " 7.
Providence, R. I.....Mon., " 8.
Meriden, Conn....Tu., Wed., Thur., Mar. 9, 10, 11.
New York.....Fri., " 12.
Baltimore, Md.....Sun., " 14.

In addition to the above, Mr. Remsburg will speak in Greenwich, Mass.; Salamanca, N. Y.; Naples, N. Y.; Kent, O.; Perrysburg, O.; Tontogony. O.; Carey, O.; Bradford, O.; Spiceland, Ind.; Burr Oak., Mich.; Paris, Ill.; Chebanse, Ill.; Cleopatra, Mo.; Maitland, Mo.; Quitman, Mo.; Robinson, Kan.; Morrill, Kan.; Republic City, Kan.; Cawker City, Kan.; Council Grove, Kan.; Brookville, Kan.; Urbana, Kan.; Halstead, Kan.; Newton, Kan.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Weland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 4-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.
Containing
COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE
Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.
The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-paged colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.
Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents by
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.
SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.
Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.
Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.
Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702.) N. Y.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820-1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.
By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.
This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.
As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.
Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.
Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.
SECOND EDITION.
Price, 25 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Sabbath-Breaking.
By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.
The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.
Large and Handsome Print.
SINGLE COPIES, 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.
A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.
Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.
A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.
Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.
Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.
Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.
Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.
Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.
The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.
Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.
Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.' "—INGERSOLL. $1.
Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.
Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.
Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.
Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.
For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.
The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.
Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.
Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.
Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.
Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.
The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.
Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.
Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.
Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.
The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man 30 cents.
All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.
A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.
BY JAMES PARTON.
This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.
Price, - - - - - - $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WOMAN,
In the Past, Present, and Future.
BY A. BEBEL.
Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.
"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 27 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.
"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.
LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL,
Price, 25 cents.

Book Notices.

COMMON SENSE IN THE CARE OF THE PET CANARY. By Mrs. M. E. C. Farwell, assisted by Mr. Canon Rittenhouse and Mrs. Helen Francis. Appendix by E. B. Foote, M.D. Murray Hill Publishing Co. Price 50 cents. For sale at this office.

The first book we pick up from the deeply-loaded shelf is this brilliantly-covered book of 135 large pages. If by following the rules of the book as handsome birds can be raised as adorn its two outside pages, the 50 cents it costs will be extraordinarily well expended. The inside of the book tells how to buy, keep, feed, tame, mate, and breed canaries; how to nurse them and cure their ails; how to treat their many peculiarities of temper, habits, etc., and all else pertaining to the pet canary's life. Not being a practical bird-keeper, however, we are no authority on the subject, and borrow the opinion of Dr. Foote, in whom we hav great confidence. He says: "This little volume from the pen of Mrs. Farwell is a production of the heart as well as the brain. The milk of human kindness has trickled down the pen and mingled with every drop of ink as the manuscripts were indited. The gifted author loves birds, and has had a long experience in the management of an extensiv aviary. Her affection for the bird and her experience in the care of it are embodied in the pages of the book. The most minute rules are given for mating, for the care of the cage, for the preparation of the food, and finally plain and easily-obtained prescriptions are given for the care of the bird when sick. This portion of the work is very thorough, and takes in all the ails to which the little bird-life is predisposed. The book is invaluable not only to amateurs who keep a bird or two, but for those who raise birds for the market. The low price of the book brings it within the reach of all. Those who are fond of stories exhibiting the wonderful intelligence of animals, even if they hav no canaries, would enjoy reading this book, as it abounds in fascinating little narrativs of canaries which hav been so trained as to exhibit intelligence only a little inferior to that shown by the human mind."

GOOD SENSE; or, The Religion of Christ is the Religion of Reason. An Infidel's Plea for Christianity. By C. M. Clark, Seward, Neb. Price 10 cents. For sale by the author.

Mr. Clark thinks that Christ pointed out the best way for mankind to liv in this world—the way that would produce the most virtue and happiness; and that if there is another world, the life recommended by Jesus would produce the best results there if there is any difference. We can agree better with Mr. Clark in his criticisms of the different churches than with his estimate of the value of Christ's teachings. Mr. Clark is a Communist, and because Christ taught that method of life Mr. Clark allows his sympathy to override his judgment. Measured by utilitarian standards most of the original teachings of Christ are immoral.

MUCCA SCOB; or, Threads of Prehistoric and Present History Concatenated. By T. M. Kelly. Price 50 cents. Sold by the author at Oak Bar. Cal.

Mucca Scob, the person, not the book, is an aborigine resurrected by Mr. Kelly, who learns from him many things which he considers important truths. The book "is designed to entertain and instruct you, whether you be philosopher or fool." Whether it fulfils its mission or not is for each individual reader to say. We think not; but it may be because we are not a fool, and we hav Mr. Appleton's word for it that we are no philosopher.

INQUIRENDO ISLAND. By Hudor Genone. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

"Inquirendo Island" is a satire upon those religious sects who pay much attention to the "mint and cumin" of religion, but neglect the "weightier matters of the law." The tale is that a young man from New York went out sailing and was blown away from home, and finally landed on an island whose inhabitants refused to believe that there was any other country than their own. It is in describing their customs and beliefs that the author satirizes the Christianity of to-day. He is, however, very careful to say that he believes in religion, putting just enough heresy into his work to make it readable, and enough pandering to Christian prejudices not to destroy the sale of his work among religious people. The book contains some good writing and sharp hits, and closes with considerable pious hog-wash.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE. Proof that William Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his Bride, A.D. 1590. Bacon identified as the concealed Poet Ignoto, A.D. 1589–1600. By W. H. Burr. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER readers will remember the Shaksperean papers contributed to these columns some few months ago, and which excited a great deal of interest. Mr. Burr, the writer, has collected some of these, added to them "proof that Shakspere could not write," and other literary discoveries concerning Shakspere, and put them into an attractiv pamphlet with colored cover. Concerning the matter of the work Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker writes:

"Wm. H. Burr, of Washington city, has written a startling book, that will revolutionize much that has passed into history as truth and fact. He has unearthed indubitable proofs that the great and world-renowned poet, William Shakspere, whose alleged works hav been pronounced as superior to anything else ever written upon this planet, could not even write his own name. No one can read this little book and fail to see that Mr. Burr has ten times over made out his case, unless said reader wilfully shuts his eyes to all evidence and clings blindly to preconceived opinions and is, in fact, a bigot

> "Who, convinced against his will,
> Is of the same opinion still."

"Whatever Mr. Burr writes is always based upon bed-rock. You cannot get behind, under, over, or around his defenses. They are insurmountable and impregnable. He proves that the so-called Sonnets of Shakspere were written by Bacon to the earl of Essex and his bride A.D. 1590, and that Shakspere at that time was a mere nobody. Even his daughters were uneducated women. Judith in 1611 witnessed two instruments by making her mark, and Susannah in 1642 showed herself equally illiterate. If you want real history, read Wm. H. Burr. If all historians had his pertinacity, perseverance, patience, and purity of motivs, we should hav more reliable and readable histories of our past. Those who desire to know the real facts, the truth as to whether Bacon was the bona fide Shakspere, will find it in this book or not at all."

MARY JONES; or, The Infidel School-teacher. The Handsomest Woman. By Elmina D. Slenker. W. S. Bailey's Liberal Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price 20 cents. Sold at this office.

Under the title of "The Thinker Library," Mr. Bailey, publisher of the Nashville Liberal, has issued these two stories in one pamphlet volume. Almost every Freethinker in the country has read the pen-productions of Mrs. Slenker, and feels for her a tender regard, for the good work she has done for Freethought. Mrs. Slenker does not set up for a novel-writer, and her "plots" are not intricate and her "situations" are not dramatic. Nevertheless, she tells a simple story in a way interesting to thousands, and conveys at the same time many moral lessons, with common-sense objections to the prevailing system of religion. Her books hav done a very great amount of good, and we sincerely hope that this one will command a wide sale.

THE BEAUTIFUL SNOW. Duet for Soprano and Alto. Words and music composed by Wm. McDonnell, of Lindsay, Ont. For sale by Strange & Co., 120 King st., west, Toronto, Ont.

Everybody has read poems entitled, "Beautiful Snow," but we do not suppose one person in ten thousand knows who wrote the original, and a query to that effect is as likely to go unanswered as is another common question as to the identity of the individual who inflicted a blow upon William Patterson. The words of the original "Beautiful Snow" were first published by Mr. McDonnell in 1841. Since then scores of imitations hav appeared. The same year the verses were set to music in England and sung with great applause at the London concerts. Mr. McDonnell, however, did not like the music, and, being a musician himself of no inconsiderable talent, has written music for the song, which is now printed in Toronto. Mr. McDonnell is author of "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," and "Family Creeds," which are among the most interesting of Freethought novels.

FREETHOUGHT: Its Rise, Progress, and Triumph. By Charles Watts. New York: The Truth Seeker Co. Price $1.25,

Of this book Helen H. Gardener writes: "I am very often asked by Liberals where to find certain statistics and records in the past of our movement, or from whom they can be procured.

"I hav said that I had heard Mr. Watts deal more directly with this phase of the work than any one else, and that his lectures and debates, so far as I had heard him, usually deal to a certain extent with the history of the cause.

"In debate or controversy Mr. Watts impresses me as standing alone in his peculiar ability and forcefulness.

"I hav never heard his equal in this department of the Freethought work. Once or twice as I heard him I hav, although on his side of the case, felt heartily sorry for his adversary, and like calling a halt in what seemed almost a case for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

"As I say, therefore, this seems to me to be Mr. Watts's distinctiv point of superiority, but he is also very able as a lecturer, and as a writer he is forceful and logical.

"Those who hav not read his 'History of Freethought' hav, therefore, in store for themselvs a real pleasure and much useful information.

"It is not a book that one will run over hastily or lightly, but is what its title says—a 'text-book for Freethinkers.'

"It will giv them many of the records of which they stand in need in their battle with superstition.

"It recounts some of the fierce battles which science had with the church in her day of power, and proves with what potent agencies she upheld ignorance and dwarfed the intellect of the whole Christian world.

"It shows how, with a devil borrowed from the pagan world, she succeeded in nourishing, long after he should hav died, the only real devil that this world has ever known—the devil of ignorance.

"It punctures many of the air-castles of the clergy, and leaves in a collapsed state many of their favorit balloons.

"Read it if you want to inform yourself in a 'text-book of Freethought,' and if you wish to know the able English debater also as a writer and a student of history."

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and other Lectures. By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. The Truth Seeker Co., New York. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker says: "It is with extreme pleasure that I speak a few words in recommendation of Helen H. Gardener's book, "Men, Women, and Gods." It is a brave and beautiful book, and one well worthy of the brave and beautiful author, and I prophesy for it a success few other books of the age will obtain. We hav so few young women writers among us that this very fact will attract attention to the work. Youth and beauty generally win, and, when combined with genius, talent, wit, humor, and solid sense, they must be triumphant. It is an honest book, and written for a purpose—written earnestly, thoughtfully, and kindly, and yet so strongly and solidly logical as to be incontrovertible in its arguments against Bibles, creeds, and churches. It is one of the most effectual pleas against the old Jew book as a defamer and degrader of woman, and it is full to the brim of sound, logical, good sense ideas in favor of her perfect equality with man, giving oceans of proof that while the Bible is held in law and public opinion as the first and best of books, woman will continue to be a slave to man, and a victim to his caprices, whims, and passions. I hope every Liberal woman will buy the book, read, and circulate it, emulating our 'Heathen Helen' in doing good work for freedom, and for this world."

Of the same work we clip the following notice from the Banner of Light:

"The author of these lectures has been termed by the New York Sun, and not inaptly, 'Ingersoll done in soprano.' Large audiences hav greeted her appearance on the public platform. She analyzes the teachings of the Bible and their effect upon the condition of women in language epigrammatic, witty, eloquent, and pathetic by turns in the lecture that furnishes the title of the book, and in like manner, which partakes largely of that of the great iconoclast who supplies the introduction, treats upon 'Vicarious Atonement,' 'Historical Facts and Theological Fictions.' A portrait of the author faces the title page."

The Chicago Times is one of the most awake and independent newspapers in America. Its daily circulation is 43,000 copies; its Sunday circulation is but a few hundred less than 50,000. The daily edition is never less than ten pages, while its Sunday edition often reaches twenty. Helen H. Gardener may therefore congratulate herself that her book has induced so widely read a journal to giv its world an opinion so damaging to the claims of Christianity as the following notice of "Men, Women, and Gods:"

"Men, Women, and Gods, and Other Lectures," by Helen H. Gardener, is a duodecimo volume of about 160 pages, containing three lectures with an appendix, setting forth some of the authorities from which the lecturer draws some of her material.

The first lecture gives the title to the book, the second is on "Vicarious Atonement," and the third on "Historical Facts and Theological Fictions."

All are keen, vigorous, and acrid attacks on the Christian church forms of theology. They can scarcely be said to be attacks on religion or religious feeling, since the flower of that plant is charity of thought and action, and in this Miss Gardener sees the highest end of man's emotional side, as in absolute freedom of investigation and opinion she sees the highest end of his intellectual side. Her leading purpose seems to be to show that women, of all persons, should least support the Bible and the churches which hold it in reverence.

The first lecture is a surprisingly bitter and scathing denunciation of the Old Testament as the sum of all cruelty and brutality toward women, and she makes up a startlingly strong case from the pages of the book itself. If any one does not think the case can be made strong let him read carefully this book and also the thirty-first chapter of "Numbers."

The second lecture arraigns vicarious atonement as an inexcusable injustice in itself, weakening and corrupting in its influence, like indiscriminate almsgiving, and points out that is not peculiar to Christianity, but is found in some form in every religious system known to history.

Both these lectures are strong productions, but are disfigured with a good deal of flippant phrasing, designed, no doubt, to catch the popular attention by tickling the popular ear. The lecturer's strongest work is done in the third lecture, where her purpose is to show that our civilization is in no sense based upon Christianity, and that the Christian religion has especially not contributed to the elevation of woman in any respect. Here she drops largely her flippancy of style and settles down to earnest work.

Civilization she holds to be chiefly the creature of environment, the basis of which, in this world, is in climate and soil. In support of her view of the position of woman she quotes largely from Sir Henry Maine, showing, among other things, that the position of woman in Roman law and usage, before the introduction of Christianity, was in advance of what it is even now in some respects, and that the tendency of the canon (church) law was invariably to force her back into the degradation from which she had been rescued by a long and painful social evolution.

In this lecture, too, she answers the questions as to what she would substitute for the sanctions of Christianity, and she takes considerable pains to show, what one would think need scarcely be insisted upon in our day, that the morals of civilization—morals in general indeed—are not at all based in or dependent upon religion, certainly not on Christianity, since the so-called "golden rule," the highest principle of morality, antedates Christianity a thousand years.

But space fails to more than thus meagerly call attention to this remarkable book. One can only express a regret that its vigor and suggestivness are weakened by the flippancy of manner alluded to. Its material is quite worthy of being freed from trifling of this kind, although it must be admitted that there are minds whose attention cannot be so well gained in any other way.

Without saying anything about Miss Gardener's "flippancy"—which is mighty entertaining—or dwelling especially upon the many commendatory paragraphs in the notice, there is one point we would call attention to, and that is the opinion that in this age of the world the claim that religion is the basis of morals is hardly worth serious refutation. The clergy and religious people generally hav insisted so loudly upon the claim that they hav made a good many—including some Freethinkers who ought to know better—believe in its truth. Over and over again hav we pointed out how Utilitarianism is the only philosophical and scientific basis for that general good conduct which goes by the name of morality, and that religion—"certainly not Christianity"—has no legitimate claims to be called the conservator of morals. We are very glad to be able to add so influential a journal as the Chicago Times to the list of exponents of the Freethought side of the question.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. Ingalls. 12mo, cloth, pp. 320. New York: The Truth Seeker Co., 33 Clinton Place.

The author maintains that we are living under a system of capitalistic aggrandizement, or commercial monarchism, that has no parallel in the history of mankind. His aim is in this volume to direct the attention of all to what appears to him to be true, namely, that there exists a natural relation between the worker and the soil—a principle of law which will giv an equitable share of the products of industry to each who shares the labor. Intelligence—an exact and systematized knowledge of the great governing laws of life—he considers to be the only solvent of the great problems of the age—Banner of Light.

Ingersoll's Work

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth,
In five lectures, comprising, "The G
"Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Indivi
ity," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Woman, and Child," "The Declaration o dependence," "About Farming in Illi
"The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexa
Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Li
Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Inger

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 5( cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 5( plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved?
per, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R
Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and
George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth,

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, pa
10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Print large, clear type, and containing as mu could be delivered in two ordinary lect
This makes a grand missionary docu
Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answe
a Number of Vital Questions Propound
the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cer cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copi
Millions of these should be circulated by thinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine
the attacks of the New York Observer, by ert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights
Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete.
Bound in one volume. To meet the de for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher ha all his lectures, except the latest on "C doxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in calf, library style, and containing over pages, which is sold at the exceedingly price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so m
applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribu
His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "C
Banquet Toast," and the recent address
"Little Harry Miller's Grave," that the been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, minated border, and in large, clear type, s
ble for framing, and the four will be forwa to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either for 25 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of apostles of Religious Liberty should hav busts.

Photographs of Colonel Inger
Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10
$3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 2

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 5 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson and Unbeliever-Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.

An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

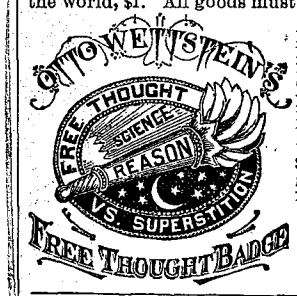
PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

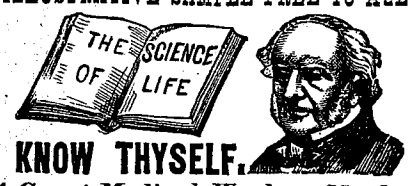
Otto Wettstein's

Popular Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.



Genuin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver watches, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jewelry, silver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy goods. 3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., $10.50; 4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 jeweled, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold cases, warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, $21; 11 jeweled, $23.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, $31. Best filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best cases, $20, 7; $22, 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled movements. Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11; $32, 15 jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents equally low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and returned per registered mail. Best spectacle in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.
ILLUSTRATIVE SAMPLE FREE TO ALL.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged, and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 25 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50 or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price, only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample free to anybody. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissel, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bullfinch St., Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated succe ssfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

News of the Week.

THE governments of the Dominion and of Quebec will extend $4,000 relief to the Gaspé fishermen.

THE Rev. W. H. H. Murray, the ex-preacher, is lecturing in New Hampshire, where he is regarded as a great orator.

THE drivers on several horsecar lines in this city struck one morning last week for shorter hours. They won the strike before noon.

MASSACHUSETTS is endeavoring to pass a law making it a criminal offense to sell or giv to bacco to any boy under [redacted]teen years of age.

THE Rev. Father Gurad, of Hoboken, has become insane, and will be sent to the insane asylum at Morris Plains. He is thirty-five years old.

WALLACE Ross and Fred Plaisted, the oarsmen, say they will row through the Niagara rapids next August in a boat which they are having built for that purpose.

LORD SALISBURY, of England, recently received a deputation of unemployed workmen, and promised to giv the subject of the present distress his earnest attention.

THIRTY-THREE women, of varying ages, were examined last Saturday by the civil-service examining board for appointment as inspectresses in the Custom House.

THE Rev. James G. Armstrong, of Atlanta, has been suspended for a period of time not to exceed ten years. An ecclesiastical court found him guilty of violating his ordination vows.

THE chief religious event in Boston last week was the legal attachment of the Bowdoin Square church by Pastor Downs. Mr. Downs's salary is in arrears and he takes this method to recover it.

RAIDS hav been made by United States marshals on the residences of George Q. Cannon, at Salt Lake City, where he keeps his numerous assortment of wives. The women are wanted as witnesses.

MR. GLADSTONE has again come to the top as prime minister of England. John Morley, the Positivist, is chief secretary of Ireland. Henry Broadhurst, a workingman, is under secretary for the home department.

UNLIKE the average minister, the Rev. Mr. Skillman, of Philadelphia, believes that God has called him to leave the ministry, and he has therefore resigned his charge. His congregation fear that his mind is unbalanced.

THE Rev. George R. Bristor, of Spring Valley, under indictment for rape, has become a Congregationalist, and will start an independent church. Those of his congregation who believe in sustaining the time-honored prerogativs of a Methodist pastor will stand by him.

THE Chinamen are being driven out of Seattle, W. T. Last Sunday gangs of Americans went through the place gathering in the celestials, putting them aboard a steamer, and paying their fare to San Francisco. It is said to be the work of the Knights of Labor, but the truth of that statement is uncertain.

THE latest result of the search for salvation has been developed at Wiliamsport, Pa. Jerome H. Smale, of that city, has eloped with a Miss McKee. Both were pillars in the Salvation Army. Miss McKee is described as a good-looking, buxom young woman. Smale has hitherto been a respected citizen, and leaves behind a wealthy and very devoted wife. Mrs. Smale has the sympathy of all her neighbors, by whom she is much respected.

LONDON was the scene of a great riot last Monday. A mob of some fifty thousand men, composed mainly of unemployed workingmen, marched through the streets breaking windows and pillaging shops and houses. They were led by so-called Socialists. The police were powerless to oppose the mob. There were no fatal results, but many inoffensiv persons were maltreated by the rioters. After dark the mob dispersed and the city quieted down.

LAST Saturday the remains of the late President Garfield were placed in a sarcophagus and returned to the vault in Lake View Cemetery at Cleveland, O. The sarcophagus is said to be the handsomest one ever made in this country. It is of bronze, weighing 450 pounds, and costing $2,000. It is hermetically sealed, and it is not expected that it will ever be opened. The remains will lie in the vault until they are placed under the monument which is to be erected to the memory of the dead statesman.

Odds and Ends.

DR. HAMMOND says: "In another thousand years we will all be bald." Well, in another thousand years we won't care if we are.

A TASTE for painting? I don't know,
He may, perhaps, be full of it;
He did his best to paint a cow,
Ah! well! he made a bull of it.

A BURLINGTON man has given up bantering his wife. He laughed at her for using cosmetics, and she informed him that when he stopped painting his nose she would stop painting her cheeks.

A FRENCHMAN fresh from Bordeaux,
A sleigh-riding thought he would geaux.
So he purchased a sleigh,
One bright winter deigh,
To glide o'er the beautiful sneaux.

CAPTAIN BURNABY, who was killed in the Soudan, left a novel behind him, but the chirography of the manuscript is so hieroglyphical that no one can read it. If Hugh Conway had been as thoughtful, the reading public would hav heen deprived of about fifty of his novels since his death.

A LITTLE fellow who had been taught to pray at evening for uncles, and aunts, and cousins, besides his own family, one evening, when very tired, stopped after praying for father and mother, grandma and grandpa, and then remarked: "I'm not going to do any more praying outside of our family, let them do their own praying."

MOTT street Sunday-school school teacher (to Wun Lung, a new recruit): "Do you understand, Wun Lung, the beautiful song we hav just finished, 'Where, Oh Where are the Hebrew Children?'" Wun Lung: "Yep, me undlestland," Teacher: "Where are the Hebrew children?" Wun Lung: "Heblew childlen down on Blaxtee stleet."

THE infant class of a Sunday-school were being drilled by the teacher on the early life of Christ. "Johnny, can you tell me where Christ was born?" said she. "Easton," replied the youth. "Why, no, Johnny," said the amazed young lady, "Christ was born in Bethlehem." "Well," said Johnny, "I knew it was some place on the Lehigh Valley Road!"

"GRANDMAMMA," said a Murray Hill young lady indignantly, "Clara Van Spuyton says that you and grandpapa kept a corner grocery store when you were young." "She is mistaken," said grandmamma. "I knew she was, the mean, spiteful thing! The idea!" "Yes, she is mistaken," went on the old lady retrospectivly, "It wasn't on a corner."

"GOUGH drops, five ceds a backidge! Greatest thig id the world for a gold id the 'ed! Odely five ceds a backidge!" A red-nosed, watery-eyed man, with a flannel muffler around his neck, stood on the corner of Eight and Chestnut streets this morning offering cough-drops for sale. "Why don't you take some yourself?" asked the News man. "You seem to be pretty well stopped up in the head." "The bad I worg for wode led be," was the reply. "What, wont let you take the medicin you sell to others?" "Doe, sir. He pays be eggstra not to dake ady." "What for!" "Oh," was the answer, with a sniffle, "so as I cad stad oud here as a horrible eggsable!"

"SAY, Spook, what makes you go to church rainy Sundays, and stay at home when it is pleasant?" "Greater inducements rainy Sundays." "Greater incentiv to spiritual meditations, hey?" "Well hardly that, exactly." "Pray, then, what is the nature of that inducement of which you speak?" "A fine assortment of hosiery to look at, you know."

"WHAT is the breed of your calf?" said a would-be buyer to a farmer. "Well," said the farmer, "all I know about it is that his father gored a justice of the peace to death, tossed a book-agent into the fence corner, stood a lightning-rod man on his head, and his mother chased a female lecturer two miles; and if that ain't breed enough to ask four dollars on, you needn't take him."

A GENTLEMAN, recently calling at a boarding-house, left his umbrella in the hat-rack with a card on which was the following: "Belongs to a man who strikes a forty-pound blow. Will be back in five minutes." When he returned, the umbrella was gone, but in its place was a scrap of paper bearing the words: "Taken by a man who walks five miles an hour. Won't be back at all."

"AH me!" sighed the lean man, "if I were a fat man,
How happy the world would seem!"
"S'death!" moaned the fat man, "how happy you thin men!
O Lord! If I could be lean!"

So thus doth the lean man envy the fat man,
While the fat man fain would be lean;
Oh, happy am I, not fat nor lean man,
Only betwixt and between.

WHAT GRIEVED HIM MOST.

Minister: "And you feel an awakening within you, my friend?"

Penitent printer: "I do sir. I feel that I hav been a great sinner, a very great sinner. I'm afraid there's no salvation for me."

M.: "Come, come, my friend, do not be despondent. You know the lines, being a printer, about the vilest sinner returning. I think you are in a hopeful condition, a very hopeful condition."

P. p.: "Ah! but I've been such a Sabbath-breaker."

M.: "Working on a Sunday paper, I presume."

P. p.: "Oh, no. The men who work on Sunday papers don't break the Sabbath. Their work is done on Saturday night. I work on a daily paper and the Monday morning issue is all set up on Sundays. But I'm determined to leave the business; I'll break the Sabbath no more by setting type."

M.: "I rejoice to find you in such a frame of mind. You will be a bright and shining light in the church one of these days. And you hav had to set type on Sundays, my poor friend—reports of dog fights, puglistic mills, and so forth, I suppose?"

P. p. (weeping bitterly): "No, sir; principally reports of ministers' sermons in solid nonpareil."

Gems of Thought.

MELANCTHON, who has been called the mildest and most moderate of the early reformers, heartily approved of the burning of Servetus, which naturally suggests the inquiry, If the mildest-manered men in the reformed party approved of burning, to what extremities would not the passionate ones proceed?—D. M. Bennett.

IF men would only be as real inside the church as they are outside; if they would only think and mean what they say, the pitiful burlesque would spedily be put an end to, and they would no longer offer up that sacrifice of lying lips, which are said to be "an abomination to the Lord."—Mrs. A. Besant.

JACOB, who was a good hand at a bargain, makes his terms with Jehovah in a thoroughly business-like spirit. "If God will be with me, etc. Then, shall the Lord be my God, etc" (Gen. xxviii, 10-22). The adoption of Jehovah as Jacob's God being thus entirely dependent on the performance of that deity of his share in the contract.—Amberley's Analysis.

THE Romans invoked the gods of their enemy to come out of the beleaguered city, and join them, the conquerors of the world. Jacob drives a trade with Elohim; the God receives a human sacrifice as adequate return for his own divine service. The promis of each is only "for value received."—Theodore Parker.

BELIEVE me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.—Shakspere.

As in ancient Rome it was regarded as the mark of a good citizen never to despair of the fortunes of the republic, so the good citizen of the world, whatever may be the political aspect of his own times, will never despair of the fortunes of the human race, but will act upon the conviction that prejudice, slavery, and corruption must gradually giv way to truth, liberty, and virtue, and that, in the moral world as well as in the material, the further our observations extend, and the longer they are continued, the more we shall perceive of order and of benevolent design in the universe.—Dugald Stewart.

I NEVER hav any thoughts working in my head, or any new project start in my mind, but my wishes carry me immediately to you, and I desire to lay them before you. [This letter is addressed to Mr. Molyneux, an Irish gentleman, who did himself great honor by discovering the value of Locke's writings when they first appeared, and by assiduously cultivating the philosopher's friendship.] You may justly think that this carries a pretty severe reflection on my country or myself, that in it I hav not a friend to communicate my thoughts with. I cannot much complain of want of friends to other purposes, but a man with whom one can freely seek truth, without any regard to old or new, fashionable or not fashionable, but truth merely for truth's sake, is what is scarce to be found in an age.—Locke's Familiar Letters.

MANY of the philosophers of the gentiles hav written much concerning the immortality of the soul, and in numerous books hav they left it on record that the soul is immortal. But when you come to the resurrection of the flesh, they do not hesitate, but openly deny that, contradicting it to such a degree that they declare it impossible for this terrene flesh to rise to heaven.—St. Augustine.

PLINY, reckoning up those things which he thought not to be in the power of God, mentions these two: "Mortales æternitate donare and revocare defunctos" (to endow men with everlasting life, and to recall the dead to life again).—Pearson on the Creed.

ONE of the most curious blunders regarding orthodox Christianity is that it has tended to the elevation of woman. As a matter of fact, the Eastern ideas about women are embodied in Christianity, and these ideas are essentially degraded and degrading. From the time when Paul bade women obey their husbands, when Augustine's mother was beaten, unresisting, by Augustine's father, and when Jerome fled from woman's charms, and monks declaimed against the daughters of Eve, down to the present day when Peter's authority (and Paul's still more surely) is used against woman suffrage, Christianity has consistently regarded woman as a creature to be subject to man because, being deceived, she was first in transgression.—Mrs. A. Besant's Path to Atheism.

THE Roman Catholic system is shaken off with much greater difficulty than those which are taught in the reformed churches, but when it loses its hold of the mind it much more frequently prepares the way for unlimited skepticism.—Dugald Stewart.

HINDOOS and Persians, Egyptians and Greeks, hav thought of God and the invisible as earnestly as the Israelites, and what the men of greatest piety and genius among these people hav believed, what the founders of religion or the philosophers among them hav declared, so far as it has been preserved to us in writing, not only in their sacred books but elsewhere too, furnishes us no small amount that might safely be placed by the side of many portions of the Old Testament at least.—The Bible for Learners.

IF man is the same in all ages, differing only in degree of development, and this element (i.e., the sense of religion) is natural to him, then we must expect to find such expressions of it in the poets and philosophers, in the religion of India, Greece, and Rome. Men of the same spiritual elevation see everywhere the same spiritual truth. If the doctrin of monotheism proceeded from tradition alone, then it must be more clear and distinct as we approach the source of the tradition. But this is notoriously contrary to facts.—Theodore Parker.

HE who would adorn
His envied temples with the Isthmian crown,
Must either win, through effort of his own,
The prize, or be content to see it worn
By more deserving brows. —Wordsworth.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 8. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, February 20, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

"ONCE UPON A TIME A DONKEY KICKED A LION. THE LION WAS DEAD."

Notes and Clippings.

RHODES & MCCLURE, literary pirates of Chicago, hav printed Revivalist Sam Jones's sermons and copyrighted them against the author. McClure is himself a preacher.

IF an S and an i and an o and a u, with an x at the end, spell "Su,"
And an e and a y and an e spell "i," pray what is a speller to do?
Then if also an s and an i and a g and an h e d spell "cide," There's nothing much left for a speller to do but to go and commit Siouxeyesighed.
—Chicago News.

THE new chaplain of the New York Senate is reported to be a sentimental parson from the rural districts. His prayers are exceedingly short, and giv wide and complete satisfaction. With his short task performed and himself free, he hangs about the ladies in the Senate chamber. When there is a scarcity of ladies needing his kindly services, the minister joins the senators at their cigars in the smoking-room, where he does not disdain to puff a good Havana with the rest. For all these valuable services only five dollars a day comes out of the state treasury.

NEARLY every religious denomination in Connecticut was represented at a hearing February 4th by the legislativ Committee on railroads on a bill restricting the running of Sunday trains between 9 A.M. and 3 P.M. There appeared to be no objection to the Sunday through expresses between Boston and New York which traverse the state late in the afternoon, except from one speaker, who expressed surprise that clergymen were willing to compromise on such a violation of the Sabbath. This man forgets that clergymen, like politicians, will be satisfied with what they can get if they cannot get all they want.

THE trouble in the church at Spring Valley, N. Y., where the Rev. Mr. Bristor preached before he was arrested charged with rape, is causing great complications. The congregation has split, some joining the Congregational denomination. The two sects boycott each other in trade. Methodist Burr is shunned, and ex-Methodist John C. Wood reaps the benefit. "Bristor's friends refuse to drink anything but Congregational coffee," says one of the Van Houten Hall devotees, "or to use any but Congregational crackers and cheese." Whether Mr. Burr will advertise "Methodist mackerel and mowing machines" remains to be seen. The trial of Parson Bristor for rape will begin on February 23d at New City.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, the Pittsburgh multimillionaire, Socialist, and Freethinker, began his career as a messenger boy in the office of the late Col. Thomas A. Scott, and afterward became an operator in the telegraph department of the Pennsylvania road. He was an expert sound reader, and one day, when on a locomotiv near the telegraph office at Altoona he heard the news come that a train had split in two on a sharp grade a few miles away, and that part of the train was coming along like lightning. Young Carnegie told the engineer of a passenger train which was waiting on the track, which the fugitiv train would pass over. There was just time enough to switch off the passenger train before the runaway came rattling on.

THE editor of the Estelline Bell, of Dakota, intimates that the "tame young man" and the played-out politician from the East make a mistake when they go to that state with the avowed intention of becoming Congressmen. He says, delicately: "There is no opening here for any of these embryotic or ruined specimens of humanity outside of the cemeteries. If the verdict of the community in which you now liv seems to be that you hav not enough ability to throw stones at the chickens, don't come out here, where, owing to excessiv and exorbitant freight charges, cartridges with which to practice on you, cost two cents apiece."

MR. PHILIP D. ARMOUR is a very generous man. A clergyman in whom he had confidence one day asked him for $30 to relieve a poor woman whose new-born baby was lying naked in her one room, where there was neither fire nor food. The money was at once handed to the parson, who afterwards returned it with a note saying that he had "discovered that the woman was of ill-repute and the child the result of sin." Mr. Armour at once sent word to Mrs. Armour, who gave the starving mother and child ample assistance, while her husband, stamping with rage, shouted to his clerk: "If that d——d scoundrel comes in here again, throw him out."

AN English paper says that the Hindoos are again complaining about the poor quality of idols furnished them by the Birmingham manufacturers. It seems that these manufacturers hav been producing such ugly styles of idols that even the most religious Hindoo can't worship them with any fervor. Moreover, they are made out of cross-grained, knotty wood, and are painted with cheap mineral paint which in hot weather comes off when the devotees kiss them. The Hindoo is very patient, but it does rile him when the paint of a high-price god sticks to his lips. If Birmingham does not manufacture better idols there may be a religious revolution in India.

"MR. REED, of Maine, who has introduced a bill in Congress for a constitutional amendment granting to women the privilege of voting, is going a long distance to reach an object easily attained," says the Fort Worth Gazette. "A constitutional amendment is not necessary to giv women the right to vote. In no place does the Constitution prohibit them from voting. On the contrary, a reasonable interpretation of that instrument favors the view that it contemplates a universality of suffrage not limited by sex. If Mr. Reed wants woman suffrage, a simple law of Congress will giv it." The Gazette is wrong. The framers of the Constitution never contemplated woman suffrage. They had not evoluted far enough. And all rights not granted to the general government are reserved to the states. It is a very erroneous idea that because the general government is not prohibited by the Constitution from doing a certain thing it therefore has the right to do it. Exactly the reverse is true. Unless the Constitution empowers the general government to perform an act, the right to do it is reserved to the states. Congress cannot pass a law compelling the government of Texas to receive the votes of the women. One of two things must occur. Either a constitutional amendment must be passed, or the states must legislate upon the question. And one or the other of these cannot be done too quickly.

Communications.

An Examination of Church History.

BEING LETTERS TO A CATHOLIC.—V.

FRIEND D. C.: If there be a period in the whole history of your church that you, as an intelligent man, should deplore and be anxious to hide, it is that of the Council of Trent, which formulated every point of your faith, from original sin up, decided definitly on your present Bible, and made rules for the government of the clergy and the laity. I know your doctors point to it with pride, and the laity accept its decisions as having emanated from God himself. But how many of either class are aware of the nature of the arguments, and the manner in which they were used, before even the simplest form became a dogma?

There were two acknowledged historians, Sarpi and Pallavicini; and when the edition of Father Paul Sarpi appeared, then, and only then, did your church realize the position she occupied. She had claimed that the Council was composed of the greatest minds in Christendom; that the most perfect unanimity of feeling had been expressed; and one doctor, a Jesuit, grew so enthusiastic over the subject that he assured his hearers if the entire wisdom of the balance of the world had been concentrated in one person, he would even then hav been immeasurably inferior to the meanest mind there.

But Sarpi's history changed all this. Being a very accurate account, compiled from the minutes, it showed each actor in precisely the position he had chosen to assume, and gave the principal arguments just as they were delivered. Europe then learned why certain dogmas had been decreed, why others had been refused, why changes had been made, and who effected them—in short, the political undercurrent was laid bare. Decrees which in their original might politically affect a kingdom were softened down to meet the wishes of the king, and not one point of doctrin—mind, I say positivly, not one point—was declared as having been instituted by Jesus till it had first received the sanction of earthly potentates.

The reading world was surprised to find that your most important dogmas, even in their remodeled state, were passed by a bare majority, and if the respectable minority had been treated with ordinary courtesy and their arguments not interrupted by shuffling of feet, loud cries of dissent, and other signs of disapproval such as are to be met at ward meetings, the result might hav been different; that the fathers resorted to all manner of tricks and dodges to carry a point, and money and political or religious preferment were openly used to convince the wavering or reward the adherent.

Your church promptly consigned Sarpi's work to the Index, and the Jesuits were called on to help the holy see. A vast amount of material and thirty years of time culminated in the history of Pallavicini. Although he twisted and turned things to suit his purposes, invented scenes when such were necessary to carry a point, placed constructions on utterances which the context would not admit, and were palpably foreign to the intention of the speaker; used every device to protect the church, yet even his work failed in its object, for one of your doctors says: "Sarpi has been put on the Index; Pallavicini ought to be there."

Does not this speak volumes? From 1520 to 1545 your church had been arranging for this council. When they met, the bishop of Bitonto, the chosen orator, opened by saying: "The moment is come. God must speak, and he will speak." And after exhorting them to repent of their past sins so as the more worthily to receive the Holy Ghost, he added: "But were you even to remain in impenitence, do not go on to imagine that thus you would hav it in your power to shut the mouth of God. Happen what may in that respect, the Holy Ghost will find it easy to open yours and employ it in his service." They sat, off and on, for twenty years, and when the proceedings are published by the accredited agents they are placed among the prohibited books, and you, as a good Catholic, cannot read the speeches delivered by the Holy Ghost, your God. The arguments formulated in heaven with an eternity to prepare them cannot stand the test of human criticism. Did ever an Infidel intimate worse than this? Do you not think your trinity is to be sympathized with for having such a numskull among them as you represent their third person? I should like nothing better than to place either Sarpi's or Pallavicini's history in the hands of every intelligent Catholic; then Mother Rome would hav fewer adherents.

When the opening day arrived, three bishops were on the spot, and they Italians. So this great ecumenical council adjourned for nine months, and when they reopened twenty-five were in attendance. The great universal church represented by twenty-five prelates and seventeen of these bishops in partibus infidelium—gentlemen without dioceses or members of the pope's household. Not an English French, or German delegate. Only during one session did the votes rise to 450, and 270 of these were Italians; and when the decrees were signed in 1563, 255 signatures attested to the ecumenical nature of this council. The votes on the various decrees ran so peculiarly that they reminded me forcibly of the tactics of the celebrated 306 at Chicago, when Conkling tried to foist Grant for a third term; and on more than one occasion the German delegation advised their sovereign that owing to the Italians voting in a body they could not press the reforms they were pledged to advocate.

Each Italian was bound by the following oath, which he took when consecrated as a bishop within the papal dominions: "I engage to preserve, to defend, to augment, to advance the rights, the honors, the privileges, and the authority of the holy church, and of our Lord, the pope, and not to take part in any deliberation, any act, any transaction against our said Lord or the said church."

How many Catholics know that there was a schism even at this council; that a portion removed to Bologna, where, having thirty-four members out of an original sixty, they declared themselvs ecumenical, and threatened to anathematize those who remained at Trent; that the war between the two bodies, each presumably directed by the Holy Ghost, became so fierce that Paul III. had to threaten both, and with the greatest difficulty prevented a serious disaster; that the bishops in partibus sent by the pope to the council were so numerous that Paul IV. complained that their living cost him 3,000 crowns a month, and urged it as one reason why the council should hasten its actions; that the votes on many occasions were almost a tie, that on divine right being 66 to 71—the negativ all Italians?

People who hav read the history of these times quietly smile when they hear your priests speak of the calm dignity and Roman firmness of Paul, in his dealings with the Protestants—how he besought them, with tears in his eyes, to return to the true fold, and thus save their immortal souls, "but never did he waver for one moment, or jeopardize the trust deposited in his hands by our Lord and savior, Jesus Christ."

Yet the doings of this pope, as recorded in the council, inform us that he empowered his three nuncios, whom he sent to Germany, to remove every kind of excommunication and censure, even for "bigamy and perjury." Those monks who had renounced their orders could wear their old monastic dress under their secular garb, and for those who were married he would make a special enactment to cover each case. The laity were to hav the disputed cup provided they would admit the host contained all the necessary elements, i.e., both body and blood Notwithstanding these concessions, Pallavicini says the papal offers were so illy received "it was evident that all efforts would be useless unless they were supported with arms." And what was the cause of this apathy on the part of the Protestants? Not a reform was granted, though every Christian power had been outspoken in demanding them. The several popes who reigned during the council promised to commence by reforming their own courts, but under various pretexts the time was put off. Some evils were mitigated to a small degree—the lower order of clergy being curtailed of some of their privileges, but the great scandals which caused the Reformation remained untouched.

It would be useless to enter into the details of the formulation of your various sacraments, unless you be willing to defend them, which I feel to say you will not; but if you will, I would promis to quote only those arguments of your own doctors recorded by Sarpi and Pallavicini, and, moreover, will allow you to choose which historian is to act as our guide. In event of not hearing from you, I will prepare an article and uncover the true nature of these "absolutely indispensables."

Now, let us glance at your rosary, which I imputed to the Aztecs. Its origin is credited to St. Dominic, but many of your writers say this is not certain. Some ascribe it to the time of the Crusades, and the Mohammedan of to-day tells his beads, claiming they were instituted by the prophet. The Brahman points back to the mists of antiquity as his source, and it was the popular form of devotion among the Aztecs. There is no doubt that your church did not possess this devotion till after the first Crusade, and then only in a crude form. Its present condition was not attained till after the Mexican conquest. Hence my inference.

You also object to my remarks about the sale of indulgences, though not many years ago you showed me a relic, consisting of a bone of some saint, which your cousin brought from Rome. There was attached to it an indulgence of seven days every time you said seven paters and seven aves. It had cost you ten dollars, and the case in which the relic lay was not worth more than one dollar. Now, what was the balance for? You may disguise it under any name you please—an offering—but viewed in a commercial light, it would be called a sale. We Infidels call it a sell, and a very bad one, not so much as to the amount involved, but that an intelligent man like you should allow yourself to be hoodwinked by a parcel of Italian lazzaroni.

I once attended one of your missions held under the auspices of the Jesuits, Father Damon presiding. After the sermon I followed the crowd into a side-room, and there found several tables crowded with rosaries, medals, pictures, etc., which I was assured were specially blessed, and each had an indulgence attached. I invested one dollar in a pair of beads which the Holy Father himself had blessed, but the instructions in regard to gaining the indulgence I hav forgotten. A few days afterward I called at a Catholic emporium in Barclay street, looking for a certain book, and saw a pile of the same kind of beads of which I had bought a sample at the mission. They were quoted at twenty cents. I then called the attention of the clerk to the difference in the price between the store and the church, and was informed that the increase was necessary because the pastor had charged them 75 per cent on the gross sales, and that one-half of it went to the Jesuit Damon and his crew. You can draw your own inferences.

(TO BE CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

Our London Letter.

The decision of the speaker in the House of Commons was a sad blow to the hopes of the Conservativs and religious bigots, as they appeared to be fully under the impression that they had only to offer opposition, as on former occasions, to prevent Charles Bradlaugh from taking the oath and his seat as a properly qualified member, and their disappointment must hav been felt very keenly when the speaker stated that he had no official knowledge of what took place in the previous parliament on this question. Probably the Tory party were of opinion that by withdrawing their candidate for the speakership, and allowing a Liberal to occupy the post without opposition, they were entitled to his gratitude, and that he would therefore play into their hands. The bigots cannot conceal their chagrin, and declare they are not going to let the matter drop, but will proceed against the, to them, obnoxious member, and do their best to ruin him. Of course, the irrepressible Henry Varley is well to the front, and rushes into print in the form of penny pamphlets, as usual. As his effusions are well circulated among the "unco' guid," his elegantly-written articles are a source of profit, and if he can serve the Lord and himself at the same time, doubtless both parties are well satisfied; and no one of any consequence is likely to take much heed of his virulent attacks, and no harm is done except to himself through becoming confirmed in a habit of slandering better men than himself, and there can be few worse than a liar, though among the godly, as long as lying is for the greater glory of God, it is a virtue and not a vice.

The old falsehood is dragged out again that Bradlaugh refused to take the oath on his first appearance in the house, and that he wrote a letter to the papers stating that the oath had no binding value to him; and though this statement has been over and over again shown to be entirely without foundation, it is still brought forward with as much regularity as the Christmas pantomime.

The examination now being held to inquire into the working of the Royal Liver Friendly Society has shown the purity of the motivs which govern the proprietors of religious papers. It has been publicly stated, and I hav seen no denial of the charge, that a Roman Catholic journal, and also one known as the Protestant Standard, the latter paper being especially bitter in its attacks on Freethought and Freethinkers, hav inserted in their columns articles extremely favorable for this society, which were compiled by the managers whose acts are now being called in question, and received an extra payment for these notices. If such a thing had been done by a Secular journal, the whole of the religious press would hav combined to show up the enormity of the transaction, and Secularists would hav been held up as awful examples of the lowest form of vice; but under the circumstances the most that now can be said is that it might perhaps be considered as a slight indiscretion, and was doubtless the fault of some junior clerk accepting the advertisment without reading it. It is a great blessing to be a true believer.

It is both interesting and instructiv to read Mr. Stead's account of his imprisonment in Holloway Jail, and compare it with the experience of the three blasphemers in the same prison. Those who were condemned for expressing a difference of speculativ opinion from the majority were treated as criminals worthy of severe punishment, and the one who was found guilty of abducting a young girl (whether rightly or wrongly does not enter into the present question) was imprisoned as a first-class misdemeanant, and every comfort supplied him, with permission to receive visitors whenever it suited him, and every facility afforded him to carry on his editorial duties. He states in his experiences as a prisoner that he was so comfortable that he enjoyed himself much more than for years past, and that it was a pleasant change, and suggests the formation of a company to start a place of retreat for editors and literary men generally on the same principle, which he is confident will prove a paying concern. His extreme piety has been evidently of great service to him, but those who assisted him in his work hav, unfortunately for them, been placed on a very different footing with regard to their prison treatment. Probably they had not "the fear of the Lord" so prominently before them, and hav suffered from divine judgment in consequence.

Godliness is a great mystery, as it appears you can hav too much of it as well as too little. A case was reported to-day of a man who was converted recently, and attached himself to the High Church party, and then became a Roman Catholic, but afterwards returned to his first love, which appears to hav been too strong for him, for before he could take up another department of the one true church, he committed suicide, probably with the idea of going to headquarters to find out which was the genuin branch of the upas-tree. Christianity appears to hav the effect of making its adherents either mad or idiotic, and yet professors of this glorious creed wonder why there can be any Atheists, not recognizing the fact that there are a few people who prefer keeping in their right senses. J. D.

London, Jan. 28, 1886.

The Man from the Moon.

A great many years since, before the Black Friday, there was frequently seen strolling about Wall street a man whose strange appearance and conduct indicated him no ordinary personage, as his searching and anxious manner denoted him a stranger to his surroundings. On moonlight evenings he would seat himself on the steps of the Exchange, gazing for long hours at the moon with a yearning expression upon his countenance. His extreme humbleness and innocence of manner, forbidding distrust, attracted the attention of the money-changers. He could speak no language known to the denizen of Wall street. The entire vocabulary of cosmopolitan New York was exhausted upon him in vain. The only reply elicited was a vacant yet not an unintelligent stare. He evidently could hear, but could not understand. A venerable and inquiring-minded Sage of the stock market became much interested in the stranger, and employed a learned linguist to either ascertain what language he understood or teach him English and find from whence he came.

The waif took kindly to his tutor, learning with great rapidity and delight, and he was soon enabled to inform his teacher, pointing upward, that he came from the moon! "I had long looked upon your beautiful planet," he said, "until at last curiosity overcame discretion and I made the venturesome leap. It had not occurred to me that the people of one planet would be so unlike the people of another. I found myself a hermit in a crowded city. I could not return, and was very unhappy until you, my dear friend, taught me the means of conversing with your people."

All this was communicated to the venerable Sage, his benefactor. The Sage was in an ecstasy of delight. "Is it possible," quoth he, "that this good man is from the moon? He must come to my house. He shall write a history of his planet. We will gobble up the mountains and make a corner on moonlight, to the envy of the damsels on Fifth avenue. We will hav telegraph communication. Yea, I must monopolize this person from the moon, or some sharper man will get him. Bring him at once to me. I will teach him all else he'll need to learn."

Pursuant to this object the Sage taught the Man from the Moon the first thing on this planet was to get money; the next to keep it; that ninety and nine in a hundred of the people of this world hew wood and draw water; that the odd one enjoys the fruits of the labor; that to enjoy life you must hav money, and all other things would follow. Nevertheless, he could get no communication from the moon, and the scheme was abandoned as not practicable. But he opened for his charge an office in Wall street. The Man from the Moon became a name in financial circles. His astuteness in getting the products of labor was phenomenal. He could master all competitors, for he had been in the moon and knew it was not green cheese. He soon owned houses, steamboats, railroads, and lands, but he did no useful work to obtain all these. John Swinton made mathematical calculations proving that he would own the entire planet and all therein contained in two thousand years.

A change in our friend's life now took place. He was to be married. He asked the advice of the Sage and was told it was going through too much to learn so little. But the Man from the Moon went adverse to his friend's advice. He had met the lady at a full-dress party in a gown too short at one end and too long at the other. He was infatuated. She declared her love to be of long duration, having often gazed at his manly face in the moon with admiration. He was led like a lamb to the slaughter, standing dumb before his shearers.

Ere many moons two young satellites appeared—one he named Saturn, the other Venus.

Now came another change in the life of the Man from the Moon. Riding out one day with the Sage, they chanced to drive through Greenwood Cemetery. "What a beautiful place!" he exclaimed. "But what mean these blocks of stone to mar the beauty of so lovely a spot?"

"It is a cemetery."

"I do not understand you."

"It is the place where we bury our dead."

"You are incomprehensible," replied the Man from the Moon.

The Sage explained that after a certain period all must die and their bodies return to the earth from whence they came.

"And did you come from the earth?" inquired the astonished foreigner.

"Certainly; you are the only one who came from the moon."

"I am dumbfounded!" the man replied. "And how long do we liv on your planet?"

"The average age among laborers," the Sage returned, "is thirty years; we who neither toil nor spin are allotted threescore and ten. Some liv a little longer; more die sooner."

"And then what?"

"Well, the body crumbles to its nativ element; the soul goes to God. If we hav been good in this life we hav a life in another world without an end, of everlasting happiness. If we hav been wicked we inherit a life of misery and are cast into a lake of fire where we burn forever without ever burning up."

"Tell me, my friend," urged the Man from the Moon, "how to shun this lake of fire; and what is this mystery, the soul? Of what use is all my hoarded gold if my fate for the future is depending on such a contingency as you tell me?"

The Sage could giv him no definit explanation of the soul, and referred him to Dr. Talmage who was engaged in that line of trade. Making haste in keeping with the importance of his subject, the moon-dweller rushed to see the priest. The priest was glad to see the magnate from Wall street and former inhabitant of the moon. He astonished his earnest listener with his knowledge, not of this world but of other worlds. He handed him the Bible. "This, my friend, must in the future be your guide to eternal happiness, and you must be born again."

"How can I be born again?"

"You must believe, and you are in the second birth and your soul is saved."

"Tell me, what is this soul?"

"It is the soul; this is sufficient for you, in your present condition, to know. What you want now is to believe and be saved, for he that believeth not is damned. You hav the Bible to read, and me to explain. It will be your own fault if you are lost."

He read to the inquirer the gospel law that God gave the life of his only son as proxy to save souls whom the devil had run away with. Then he said, "My friend, do you believe?"

"Yea, I will believe."

"You are saved, Now I will read you Christ's law. It is this: 'Sell all thou hast and giv to the poor; hate father and mother, and love your enemies.'"

Our friend went to his home, greeting his better half as follows: "My dear wife, I hav hastened home to warn you to flee from the wrath to come. You hav a soul to save. You must be born again or you will go where the fire is not quenched."

And these signs followed him that believed: His wife decided that he was crazy, and sued for divorce and alimony. His son had been a star in the political horizon, and retired in disgrace to the forest of Maine. His daughter fluttered a brief period as a meteor on Fifth avenue, and then sucumbed to the low-neck dress system. He went to the stock board and put everything he possessed on the market, but the brokers supposed it another ruse to beat them, and wouldn't buy. He then placed all in the Marine Bank, and nothing remained for the poor. He caught his former friends by the coat-tails, begging of them to save their souls—"this night thy soul may be required of thee." He was decided to be crazy. Talmage was disgusted at his practical ideas of salvation, and refused him an interview. He went to the Salvation Army in poverty. They read to, him "Take no thought of the morrow," and made him a corporal. He was arrested as a nuisance, and sent to the Island. When released he went to Rome to see the pope, who, he was told, possessed the only true Bible. The pope could not be seen—it would dispel the mystery. From Rome he went to Asia, where he was told to believe in Allah, and Mohammed his prophet. He went to Jerusalem; there they informed him that Christ was a humbug, the real messiah was yet to come. Sick and weary he sailed for America in a ship loaded with Mormon converts; went to Utah, and was told that, to be a true Mormon, he must hav a dozen wives. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. "No more wives in mine," said he. He shook off the dust of Utah from his feet and came to New York, being gathered in by the Shakers, and soon death ended his uncertainty. What he had dreaded most came, and his last words were, "Believe in nothing you cannot weigh in a balance or measure with a rule." PAXTON.

Wealth and Death.

Back to the remotest period of the world's history wealth and power hav been the ambitious aim of mankind. We are told it is necessary as an impulse to advancing civilization, to growth and importance as a nation, and the weak must make way for the strong; that even over the dead bodies of the fallen in the struggle may be reared a mighty nation, rich, proud, and invulnerable. This sounds well in a general way, and may rouse the patriotism of some men to an extent that will make them content to eat the husks while others consume the corn.

But is it not strange that after thousands of years of existence, and numberless examples of the utter vanity and futility of riches as a power, the world struggles to-day for their possession just as cruelly and remorselessly as at any time in the past? That any man, or set of men, hav any inherent or God-given right to any more of this world's goods and benefits than another is denied by the very nature and constitution of man himself. Every man who labors is entitled to just as much as a rich man can use for his natural wants, and if the latter uses more than that, it is wasted; if he hoards it, it is worse than wasted; it becomes a menace to the liberty and rights of others.

"Money is power;" it is monarchical power; it holds within its metallic grip a large majority of the inhabitants of this world who themselvs tighten its hold by yielding to its behests. They curse its power, they fight it in sections, a sort of skirmishing on its picket lines. But they hav never massed their army for a general attack, and when they do they will see how true it is that "capital is timid;" the enemy will capitulate at once, and no blood need be shed. I think we are nearer to-day to general organization than ever before.

We must not forget that it is the principle of justice we are fighting for, and not men. Our laws, customs, habits are so thoroughly impregnated by centuries of practice, and rights of property hav been so jealously guarded, that to whisper against their continuance is regarded as nihilistic and revolutionary. The workers of this country are not Nihilists; they want something, and that something is not chaotic disruption, but a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. It is a hopeless task to appeal to the generosity or human sympathy of the gentlemen who hold the money-bags; the metal of their coin is softer than their hearts. But if they could only see how like a short dream life really is, that they, with all their money, will soon be no more than the smallest drop of water in the great ocean of eternity; if some magic word could bring them to a realizing sense of the foolishness and inhumanity of their attitude, then there would be justice in deed and not in name for all men.

There is a feeling in all men of a dominant power (creator if you will) who created all things; a feeling of awe at the immensity of creation, of humble trust in his goodness, and of faith in ultimate happiness in the hereafter. Far be it from my thoughts or aim to shake that faith, or disturb any man in his religious beliefs of a creativ God. But when so-called exponents of the laws of God tell any man that it is God's will that he should labor and starve and murmur not, that he should obey the laws and question not, it is perfectly safe to assume that he is either a liar or a fool, either of which is immaterial if you believe him. God's laws of equality, of never failing love and tender care, are written in every book of nature, which is ever open to us. The flowers are given the evening dew, birds their food and shelter from the storm, flowers bloom and birds sing their gratitude to God; but men, to whom the earth is given, fight for the possession of more than they hav any earthly use for. Many tire of the struggle and kill themselvs, some become disgusted with existence and rush to death, others adopt open thievery (not having the brains to do it in a legal covert way), and go to prison. Some starve, others feed the body at the expense of the soul; some revel in a palace, others die in a hovel; and if this world is not a hell it is the ante-chamber to it, made so, not by God, but by men who are struggling, pushing, crowding, rushing pell-mell after a bauble, which, reached at last, grim death steps up, takes it from their unwilling hands, and pushes them back into their graves to rot.

We are all brothers with one common origin, one common destiny. Would that this Babel of cross purposes, this fiend of selfishness, would giv way to the God of love. Heaven is where we make it; it can be made here in this world, and this little breath of existence can be a pleasant journey with congenial friends to the borderland of the unknown country "from whence no traveler returns." Why should we fight? Why envy one another? Why plume ourselvs above our neighbor? Of what avail is it? Let us know, ye millionaires, who are already in the rotunda of death, what has it profited or what will it profit you? WM. ALLEN SMITH.

196 Broadway, New York.

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is sent free.

The Liberal Club.

The windows of heaven were open all last week, and the rain kept up a steady squirt through them. Friday evening it let up a little while, and people went to the Manhattan Liberal Club. The 399th regular meeting was held that night, and there was an audience large enough to fill the hall.

At a little past eight the president imposed silence upon the assemblage, and introduced the secretary, who read about what had occurred the week before. The report contained a sarcastic reference to the extreme tenuity of the address to which it referred, and the chairman rose to explain that the secretary had taken a wrong view of it. The great importance of the question involved justified its extended treatment by the speaker.

The lecturer of the evening was Madam Henri Delescluze, on the subject of "Oratory and Dramatic Reading." Being introduced as an old and stanch friend of the club, Madam Delescluze said:

If you look into a dictionary for the definition of the word "oratory" you will find it to be the art of public speaking. Mark well the word art. Oratory is not mere sound and fury, signifying nothing, but "the art of public speaking." If you look further for the definition of the word "art," you will see that it is "a system of rules; acquired skill." We are told by the same authority that an "orator" is "an eloquent public speaker; a petitioner." If still curious, and wishing to be strictly accurate, you search for the word "eloquence," you will discover that it is "beauty, power, and appropriateness of language."

Oratory, then, is governed by a system of rules, and to be an orator is to be able to speak with power, beauty, and skill. To be able to speak thus requires in the speaker an infinit variety of ideas, the habit of thinking, and a vast store of acquired knowledge. So much for the intellectual part. Then comes the art of elocution. Webster or Worcester will tell you that "elocution is the proper pronunciation and delivery of words."

To be an orator in the true sense of that much abused and misunderstood word is therefore no easy thing. It includes a mastery of logical analysis, of ideas, thoughts, sentiments, and feeling, a knowledge of human history and human character, and the power and skill of presenting these in a manner that compels attention—that holds and moves an assembly. In addition to his intellectual equipment the orator must understand how to use his voice, the wonderful organ of communication between him and his hearers. He must know what the six general divisions of the art of elocution are, namely, articulation, accent, emphasis, inflection, modulation, expression. A man thus equipped is armed and girded for battle. Woe to the adversary who ventures to attack him without being equally well provided for the encounter!

"Oratory," says Dr. Johnson, "is the power of putting down your adversary's arguments." Speech is the most powerful of all means whereby one human being can move another. He who would move the multitude must hav

> "Wit, and words, and worth,
> Action, and utterance, and the power
> To stir men's blood."

Hazlitt, the celebrated English critic, once walked six miles on a country road with Coleridge, who was a preacher as well as a great poet. He says of the eloquence and charm of his voice: "I could swear that the very milestones had ears, and that Harmer Hill stooped with all its pines to listen to the poet as we passed."

Every other art is known to require study—laborious study and diligent practice; but every man thinks he can read—one of the most difficult of arts, requiring taste, feeling, judgment, sensibility, passion, culture—and almost every man is sure he can please as a public speaker. In fact, in our country, where freedom of speech is universal and power resides in the people, every citizen ought to consider it a duty to know how to speak intelligently and passably well on public affairs. The country school trustee who, visiting a neighboring town at a school examination and being invited to make a few remarks, said, "Well, gals, you spells well, and you reads splendid, but you hain't sot still," was not a worthy representativ of the general intelligence of the humblest of his townsmen.

Mrs. Delescluze here read a number of selections to illustrate the oratorical, descriptiv, eccentric, and sentimental styles of reading. She urged upon all the importance of knowing how to speak in public on the stage.

The chairman invited any elocutionist present to occupy the platform. Dr. Field, who teaches the Delsarte system of elocution, accepted the invitation. The doctor finds a philosophy at the bottom of the art of expression, even to the expression of applause. For instance, the clapping of hands was the refined way of showing approbation, while jiggling the heels was in no wise cultured. The writer noticed that some of the audience thumped the floor with their umbrellas, and he was in hopes that Dr. Field would classify that sort of demonstration, but was not gratified.

Mr. Joslin, of Cleveland, Ohio, said he was no orator, and his knowledge of orators had not placed them in an elevated position in his estimation. As an example, Demosthenes, though he aroused the Greeks to deeds of valor, was the first to run when the Macedonians came into the neighborhood. Patrick Henry was not a trained orator. He was an idle young man, and lay around the brooks of old Virginia all day fishing, and never got a bite. A case came up about the stipend which the farmers paid the clergy. They wanted to pay it in tobacco, and the clergy wanted cash. They went to law. The farmers retained young Henry as counsel. He studied law for six weeks, and then went into court. His father was on the bench, and the young man was so awkward that the old man hung his head. The clergy nudged one another and winked. But Patrick soon recovered his nerve, and warmed to his subject with such good effect that the clergy left the court in affright. Not only did the young advocate win the right of his clients to pay the clergy in tobacco, but he caused the stipend to be abolished altogether. All this with no training as a speaker.

Robert Blissert followed. He made no pretensions to oratory, he said. He wished merely to make a few remarks about orators. In the days of the American Revolution it was the oratory of Pitt that stimulated the English to pause. Oratory was the index to the art that moves the lips to speak. Mr. Blissert repeated part of a speech by the Irish orator, Grattan, which probably lost none of its original effectivness by being given with a fine brogue.

Madam Delescluze here returned to the platform, and read a poem. It was one which the man with the badge-pin wrote some time ago and sold to a publisher for two large silver dollars. The speaker had selected this poem because it was the production of a friend of the club; and on account of the expressiv way she rendered the lines they were received by the audience without protest. When the reading was over, to the great relief of the writer, who never felt willing to rest his reputation on that performance, the speaker turned to the defense of oratory as an art, and made further remarks that were agreeable to listen to.

Mr. Wakeman, by request, closed the exercises. Oratory, he said, had usually been on the side of the losing cause, and there were many causes that would be forgotten but for the oratory they evoked. Oratory has been the voice of Liberty. In reference to Cicero, who had been mentioned, Mr. Wakeman said he was one of the greatest men of antiquity. He was a believer in the religion of humanity and the federation of the world. His works were for a long time practically suppressed, and he was maligned, misrepresented, and put to a cruel death. Mr. Wakeman professed to hav little faith in any except natural oratory, and believed that whatever was in a man would come out. As for himself, he had never studied the art of expression, but had always talked from the shoulder. Mr. Wakeman from his innocence of dramatic art belongs in the category with the man who expressed great surprise upon learning that he had been talking prose all his life without knowing it.

After the meeting a complaint was entered with the secretary that last week's account of Dr. Lambert's lecture did injustice both to the speaker and to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the opinion was also expressed that these reports should be judiciously edited, and the lines tightened somewhat upon the writer. This is a good suggestion. The man with the illuminated insignia confesses with appropriate grief that on some occasions he is entirely unable to catch on, and that Drs. Lambert and Eccles furnished one of those occasions. If some arrangement can be made with the editor of this paper whereby these reports can be pruned of their superfluous foliage, it would no doubt serve the cause of strict accuracy, but a large reward would be necessary to bribe people to read them.

On Friday evening, the 19th, Henry Appleton, of Boston, will talk about Anarchism. Students of that grotesque philosophy will find in this speaker one of its ablest representativs.

Chicago Letter.

Entering the hall last Sunday (Jan. 31st) in which we held meetings continuously for over four and a half years, I was handed the following brief but expressiv note:

FORT DEARBORN LODGE, I. O. O. F.,
CHICAGO, Jan. 27, 1886.

To the Liberal League.

GENTLEMEN: You are hereby notified to vacate Fort Dearborn Hall, after Sunday, Jan. 31st, as it has been decided not to rent the hall hereafter to any tenants except secret societies. By order of the board of trustees.

[Seal.] J. A. WUEST, Secretary.

This gave us no time to arrange for a hall for today's meeting (Feb 7th), and had it not been for our generous friend, A. D. O'Neil, who offered us his fine hall free of charge, we should hav been effectually left out in the cold—a serious predicament with Charles Watts coming next Sunday. The hall is all that could be desired, being fitted up with parlor, ante-rooms, and banquet hall, but it is a long way up town, and that may militate against attendance. We learned long ago that there were quite a number of church-members belonging to the various lodges meeting in our old quarters, who hav been howling loud and long against our "desecration" of their hall Sunday evenings, but for years the sympathy of the lodge was with us, and they were outvoted on every occasion, as our money was considered as good as that of others. For occupancy of the hall we hav paid some fourteen hundred dollars, and we lately hav felt too secure in our quarters. That is the time when the enemies of liberty always gain victories. The Christians now "hold the Fort"—Dearborn.

ANOTHER ASSAULT ON LIBERTY.

Lately I notice that "The American Literary Union and Pure Literature Bureau" is making an energetic canvass among our merchants for money. The ostensible purpose of this bureau "is to prevent the sale and circulation of impure and pernicious literature" on all lines of travel, railroads, steamboats, stores, public libraries, cities, and towns. In a pamphlet of over forty pages, which is being distributed in our business houses, they boast that the society regulates the sale of literature over 50,000 miles of railroad in the United States and Canada, and prints forms for signature by which newsdealers are pledged to exclude certain publications of vicious or vulgar tendencies. Here is their definition of what is vicious or vulgar: "The common law of Great Britain or the United States is founded on the Christian religion. Whatever is against general Christianity is therefore unlawful; it is so treated by the courts in Canada, and should be in the United States, as in the case of Infidel books, lectures, etc.," and further declares that "all works, and speeches, and acts assaulting general Christianity are vicious—superlativly vicious—and associated with, and directly at work in multiplying and extending the grossest vulgarity."

Under this covert pretense of bringing about a purer literary atmosphere, the malicious fangs of the theological bigot are plainly discernible, by its indorsement of a remark of some pious Boston pedagog to the effect that "the public library is a curse to the school-children." This is surely a clear case of atavism—reproducing their fifteenth-century proclivities. What with the public school and the public libraries, these intellectual fossils are having a hard time. Not content with their espionage of the mails, this society propose a system of Christian boycotting which shall cover the whole domain of the publication and distribution of literature. They propose to form the religious conviction for the individual—not the individual to form it for himself or herself. They hav no confidence in the untrammeled, progressiv intellect; their faith is in ignorance.

Liberals, as long as this cancerous superstition is allowed to spread itself by subsidy from the state, in the remission of its taxes, it considers itself not only backed by the state but a part of it. We should renew our efforts to show that the state's province is with men, not with gods; with knowledge, not beliefs; with rights and necessities, not with fancies. From man's ambition to defraud and govern this theocratic principle draws its great vitality. No wonder railroad magnates try to foist on their employees these Christian influences, as it is far easier to govern through promoting spiritual fears than even by the exercise of arbitrary force. The latter course is likely to arouse intelligent antagonism; the former is insidious subjugation and intellectual death. As intelligence can never be permanently enslaved, if reason can be dwarfed a victory for monopoly is gained. Thus complete mental liberty is the superstructure on which alone all religious, political, and social progress rests. Remembering these truisms, let us renew our efforts for complete secularization, where the state shall neither demand religion, dictate religion, nor support religion—neither proscribe, favor, nor recognize any religion whatever.

We hav two slander cases in this city in which reverend "gentlemen" are defendants. This shows how the apostles of "good will" to men are doing their master's work.

Soup and religion are being dispensed at the Adelphi Mission. That's a good deal better than "hell and damnation," and is largely patronized by the free-lunch fiends, who heartily approve of this sort of evangelical work.

Mamie Kearney's mother protested in Judge Prendergast's court against her daughter being sentenced to the orphan asylum (Protestant) at Evanston, as she had been brought up in the Catholic faith. She is said to be dissolute. The court thereupon prescribed a Catholic orphan asylum and announced that hereafter the question of religion would always be considered in this class of commitments. Does this justice think his function is to dispense denominationalism? This is another phase of church and state government, and should be stopped.

E. A. STEVENS.

Still Ringing.

I left Chicago on New Years, and hav been ringing my Liberty Bell nearly every night since. Jerusalem! What cold weather we hav had. I found my bed so cold some nights that I could not sleep, and when I cannot sleep life is not worth the living.

As you are well aware, I am a self-appointed missionary for the state of Illinois, and if the work I hav been doing for the past six weeks is not of the most approved missionary pattern, I would like to know it. I hav given lectures where the people did not know what Liberalism meant—whether it was an animal or something good to eat. I hav lectured where I got nothing at all for my services. I gave two lectures to pretty fair-sized audiences, and received the sum of twenty-five cents. Oh, ye gods! think of it. At another place sixty-five cents was the gross receipts of the evening. I could mention a few more instances of similar character. The man with the badge-pin will doubtless sympathize with me. Let us shake, brother.

I would not hav the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER think that Illinois can entertain its Liberal missionaries no better than the above instances would indicate. We hav met with some of the noblest Liberal men and women during our past six weeks' campaign in this state that we hav ever had the pleasure of knowing. They hav entertained us kindly and made us happy, and in most cases we found a warm bed and plenty to eat.

It is true, however, that in the filthy lucre business the hard times hav prevented them from attempting to build up anything like a Vanderbilt fortune for me. And I can't say that I was greatly disappointed. I think I hav sown the good seed broadcast, hav enjoyed myself, am fat, good-natured, and do not find any reason to complain of the Illinois Liberals. It is those other fellows, those who pretend to be Liberals, but who in reality are nothing. When I find a man who takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, or Age, I feel safe in tying up to him for my lecture arrangements. But a man who can, but won't, take a Liberal paper ought to—reform and take one.

After my lecture at Cerro Gordo, a churchman jumped upon a chair to say something, and among the questions he propounded to me was, "What kind of people does Liberalism produce?" My friend, H. O. Gaston, answered promptly by striking his hand upon his breast and saying, "Here's one—pays a hundred cents on a dollar." The man of God stepped down and out, utterly routed by the reply and deafening shouts of laughter and jeers of the crowd.

No; Liberalism is not dead in this state, but it seems rather sleepy and needs a revival.

It seems to me that it would not be a bad idea to invest some of the funds now being contributed for the spread of Liberal ideas to the work in this part of Liberaldom. Illinois is a proud state and won't stand a great deal of foolishness.

Letters addressed to me at 302 State street, Chicago, Ill., will be promptly forwarded to me.

Kinmundy, Ill. W. S. BELL.

Thomas Paine.

The works of Thomas Paine are being more carefully read of late even by professed Liberalists than formerly. When speaking of Mr. Paine in truth, it begets a kind of exasperation at his detractors, the savage onslaslaught that is ignorantly being made upon his name. The organized orthodox priesthood we could be made to pardon, but for the pretended Liberalist we hav no sympathy. In truth some of these assumed Freethinkers are just as bigoted as the veriest Methodist granny that ever screamed in a class meeting.

My aunt Phebe is one of this kind of Freethinkers or Materialists. She is a kind-hearted soul, and is overflowing with suggestions for the amelioration of suffering humanity. But she seems to overlook the fact that although the world is progressing, it is only progressing with her in one direction, and she starts from a very gross base line. She is a professed Atheist, and believes in individual annihilation, although she says "she would giv her last dollar could she be assured a continued existence." My aunt Phebe is a brave heroin, and although the term Atheist has become obsolete since the invention of the term Agnostic, she still sticks to the old term. She is determined to die game.

She is a great admirer of Thomas Paine—as what Freethinker is not? But she was completely dumbfounded when for her first time the following passage was shown for her observation from Paine's "Age of Reason"—the first part—which, in fact, looks like an approximation toward Spiritualism:

> Any person who has made observations on the state and progress of the human mind by observing his own can but hav observed that there are two distinct classes of what are called "thoughts:" those that we produce in ourselvs by reflection and the act of thinking, and those that bolt into the mind of their own accord. I hav always made it a rule to treat those voluntary visitors with civility, taking care to examin as well as I was able if they were worth entertaining; and it is from them that I hav acquired almost all the knowledge that I hav.

But I hav ever been charitable to old Aunt Phebe. In truth, the human mind has been likened to a sponge; it is capable of absorbing just such a quantity and quality of fluid and no more. But, as Mr. Paine remarks, we must not quarrel with nature.

While on the subject of reform, is not THE TRUTH SEEKER rather transcending its duties by assailing the natural instincts of our nature by endeavoring to squelch man's universal hopes of immortality? To expose the frauds of priestcraft in its ten thousand outcroppings is one thing, and meritorious; but to hold up to derision man's natural hopes seems to me both unwise and unjust. D. BRUCE.

Brooklyn, E. D.

P.S.—For one, I think your published cartoons, displaying the absurdities of the Bible, the grave solemnities of priestcraft, and the snaky encroachments of the Catholic church, hav an eloquence far superior, for common thinkers, to the pages of cool logic.

D. B.

[We were not aware that THE TRUTH SEEKER had been endeavoring to "squelch man's universal hopes of immortality." When and where was it, Mr. Bruce?—ED. T. S.]

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, WILLIAM ALGIE,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$1,959.02
J. H. Preper, (paid)	1.00
Jacob Senzen "	1.00
S. P. Bakesto "	1.00
Theodore Senzen "	1.00
I. F. Bose "	1.00
Isaac Branham "	1.00
E. H. Swarthout "	1.00
Pioneer Secular Society, Johnson, Wyoming, per Gus Hogan, Charter Fee, (paid)	5.00
Total,	$1,971.02

PLEDGES PAID.—Chicago Secular Union (half of pledge of $50), $25; W. H. Woodbury, $10.

News and Notes.

The following resolutions passed by the Albany Secular Society are a good record of its work for the past year:

At a meeting of the Albany Secular Society held Feb. 7, 1886, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Albany Secular Society as an expression of gratitude tenders its thanks to the following-named ladies and gentlemen: To Mr J. J. McCabe, who delivered ten lectures; Professor Gunning, who delivered six; Mr. Joseph McDonough, five; Mr. Fero, five; Howard Williams, four; Mr. Wetmore, three; Mr. Dederick, two; Mr. S. P. Putnam, two; Mr. Schell, one; Rev. Chas. P. McCarthy, one; Mrs. Iliohan, one; Miss H. H. Gardener, one; Mr. Alexander, one; Mr. Dodge, one; Mr. Jansen, one; Mr. Lynch, one; Professor Vaughn, one; Mr. Goodfellow, one; and to Messrs. W. H. Williams, Coleman, and Luck, who on four Sundays read interesting articles from Freethought publications; and to Messrs. McDonough, Dederick, Wetmore, Pangburn (died since), Dickson, Dugan, Luck, Van Wie, Jansen, and Mrs. Iliohan, who helped to make our meetings sources of pleasure and edification. After the New York State Freethinkers' Convention adjourned, which was held in our city last September, many of the Albany clergy took upon themselvs the task of criticising the work of the convention and the lectures delivered thereat, one of them going so far as to attack the character and life-work of Voltaire, Bolingbroke, Hume, Rousseau, Paine, and others. The arguments advanced by these reverend gentlemen were fully and satisfactorily answered from our platform, and in the columns of the Albany newspapers (Press and Express) by Messrs. McCabe, McDonough, Schell, and Jansen. And be it further

Resolved. That our thanks are due Mrs. Iliohan and Mr. Adam Strever for their labor in behalf of the Liberal Sunday-school; and to the Sunday-school scholars, whose recitations and vocal and instrumental music made our entertainments successful. We also take this opportunity to tender our thanks to the newspaper press of the city for their many acts of kiadness during the past year.

The foregoing has been drawn in accordance with report of secretary for the year 1885. C. H. LUCK, Secretary.

We hav quite interesting notes from the Hornellsville Society, as stated by its activ secretary, Charles Couderman:

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., February 8, 1886.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find a copy of Hornellsville Liberal League constitution. Allow me to giv a short comment on the success of the undertaking.

About two months ago I started out with a blank to secure names to start an auxiliary League. I succeeded in receiving some fifteen signatures, with a corresponding amount of contributions. Success fell in our path, and we were given free use of a capacious room in a centrally located brick store, owned by J. D. Couderman, one of our members. As luck would hav it we pitched our tent next-door neighbor to a German church, separated only by a single partition.

We meet every Sunday evening the same time that the Germans are engaging in their ceremonies, which comes handy, as you will observe farther on.

I spared no pains in advertising it in the town papers, stating the subject for consideration, and politely inviting the interested public to represent their respectiv sides. We hav by this means attracted considerable attention and a goodly supply of the public every evening anxious to attend through curiosity or to eugage in the discussion.

We hav received several new members, that swell our membership to about twenty. We hav lengthy and interesting considerations every Sunday evening, in which all seem to take pleasure in pre-arranging their thoughts for the coming debates. I think I can safely say that our League is the most successful society organized in the city.

I must mention a word about our music. As large gatherings require music to put on a finish I brushed the dust off from the old violin, and started to make a musical crusade. We found that our membership roll contained some four musicians, two violin, one flute, and one banjo player. We organized and prepared to open the meetings right next to the reverend Dutchmen, who, through their solemn recitations indistinctly creeping through the wall, wonderfully aided the banjoist in his endeavors to keep a strong accompaniment. That we call our German accompaniment.

We are to consider the church and state affair next meeting, when we expect something fine.

Yours truly, CHARLES COUDERMAN.

The Pioneer Secular Union of Johnson, Wyoming Territory, has been organized: President, Gus. Hogan; vice-president, Robert Stewart; treasurer, George Ohlman; secretary, F. D. Hunt.

The respect and power which the outspoken Freethinker will in the end attain, is shown by this extract from the Medina county News. Judge Lewis has for years been an ardent friend and supporter of Colonel Ingersoll, and unflinching advocate of Liberal principles:

> The January term of the Court of Common Pleas of this county adjourned Monday, February 1st, Judge Lewis presiding. It has been the longest term of court held in this county for many years, and a large amount of business has been disposed of. Judge Lewis is an able judge, and is growing rapidly in public esteem as an upright and fair jurist. His rulings are fair, his decisions prompt, and his jury charges are considered eminently fair by the members of the bar.

I hav just been reading Mrs. Slenker's "Infidel School-Teacher," and find it quite interesting, and a good book to distribute. Mrs. Slenker always knew how to put her ideas, and in this book the school-teacher does not lack any of her power and vivacity. Mrs. Slenker appeals entirely to the reason, and her plain and convincing arguments are well adapted to any mind that is open to the truth. If there were more school-teachers like the one depicted by Mrs. Slenker, who hav knowledge and know how to impart it, the education of the race would be much better than it now is. To show what nature really is, what our true relations and obligations are, and what we best can do should be the object of instruction, and we are glad that Mrs. Slenker has undertaken in her clear and vigorous style to point out some of the good things that can be done in this direction.

I shall begin my lecture tour next month with Pittsburgh and Chicago, and thence westward by way of Omaha and the Union Pacific Railroad to Salt Lake. Will not all Liberals on the line of this route make an effort for lectures in their vicinity, and inform the secretary at once of what arrangements will be made. Sunday, the 21st, I speak before the Albany Secular Society on "Church Taxation."

SAMUEL. P. PUTNAM.

Huxley and Gladstone.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am greatly pleased to note in your last issue that you intend to bring out the discussion on the Mosaic cosmogony by Gladstone, Huxley, Max Müller, and Mrs. Linton in a pamphlet. This will be an excellent propagandist pamphlet to place in the hands of certain "cultured" and educated people who could not be persuaded to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Investigator, or any such papers.

I beg to bespeak for the forthcoming brochure a very wide circulation in the Liberal constituency, and then, of course (and through them), outside of Liberaldom. Let every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER be prepared to get one or more copies for circulation as soon as the pamphlet issues. The very names of these distinguished writers—especially at this critical juncture of Gladstone's life—will certainly compel attention. Get out your pamphlet as soon as may be, and get it abroad. ALLEN PRINGLE.

Selby, Ont., Feb. 10, 1886.

Nothing but a Sunday-school Story.

The often published story of the introduction of Thomas Paine by Benjamin Franklin to George Washington and Benjamin Rush in 1775, and the startling announcement made by Paine that "America must be independent of England," has no shadow of foundation. It was invented by a writer of romances. Paine surprised Franklin with his publication of "Common Sense." BURR.

Remsburg and the Clergy.

THE more liberal clergymen of Kansas, recognizing in orthodoxy the enemy not of Freethought merely, but of liberal Christianity as well, hav accorded J. E. Remsburg a hearty support this winter. Rev. C. H. Rogers, Universalist, of Seneca, and editor of Our Mission, denominates his lecture on "Sabbath-Breaking" "clear-cut logic." Referring to his book on "Sabbath-Breaking," he says: "I think it is timely and important, especially at this time when the wretched farce of 'God in the Constitution' is being enacted." Rev. P. W. Hull, Christian, of Concordia, and an old friend of Mr. Remsburg's, was largely instrumental in bringing him to Concordia to lecture on "Bible Morals." After hearing the lecture he said: "You are doing a good and needed work, and I wish you Godspeed." The Rev. F. S. Gibbs, pastor of the Universalist church of Delphos, tendered Mr. Remsburg his pulpit for the delivery of "Bible Morals" and "False Claims." He presided at the meetings, and heartily indorsed the lectures. "Bible Morals" he pronounced "a fair, honest, and lucid exposition of the subject." With "False Claims" he was particularly delighted, the more espicially because the most bigoted orthodox minister of the town, with a portion of his flock, had been inveigled into the church. The Rev. Father Bishop, the oldest Universalist clergyman of Kansas, also commended "False Claims," corroborating many of the charges made against the church.

Good Lord! Good Devil!

Cherry Bob, of San Antonio, the proprietor of a saloon, is moved by the announcement that Messrs. Moody and Sankey are to visit that city to publish the following card: "Editor San Antonio Light: Fellow saloon-men! Now that Moody and Sankey are expected to visit us, would it not be advisable to get the inside track of them by closing our establishments on Sunday and keep sacred the Sabbath? Fellow saloon-men! let us close our doors on the Sabbath; let us keep sacred the seventh day; we will lose nothing by it, but would be held higher in the estimation of our fellow citizens and receive the credit of the outside world."

Communications.

What is Money?

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 9th, "J. D." says:

The advocates of unlimited silver money, like the paper inflationists, think that by adding to the amount of the currency you increase the wealth of the country. They cannot see that the currency of a country is merely the representativ of its wealth. If you double the amount of currency, either with paper or cheap silver, or any other metal, you merely double the amount necessary to represent a certain amount of real wealth. Your currency only represents half as much; the real wealth, the produce of the soil and necessities of life, is not changed in value. It is the representativ that is changed, and it takes two dollars instead of one to buy the same article.

We know and agree to this, that it is true; logically, therefore, the money-kings, banks, all those who hav money hoarded, and bond-holders, object to coining more silver, as it will reduce the value of their wealth, but a plethora of currency is for the interest of all classes except the rich. "J. D." ought to read Senator Beck's speech on the silver question and the Congressional debates going on now. On all the greenbacks is printed, "This note is a legal tender at its face value for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt." All bonds were bought with this money, then worth in gold about forty to sixty cents a dollar, and it was then understood, as the great commoner, the late Thad. Stevens, asserted, that they were to be paid again in it; but after the war the powerful influence of the banks and money kings brought to bear on Congress changed the contract, and a law was passed, in the interest of this class, that the bonds shall be paid in coin, in standard money, gold and silver. Then the present silver dollar was standard money of 112 grains. Had the administration, especially the secretary of the treasury, done its duty according to law, all bonds would hav been paid in gold and silver; and if the interest of the people had been at heart, instead of that of the banks and money kings, the secretary of the treasury would hav called in all the bonds due that he was able to pay for with gold and silver, instead of burying such an immense sum for years and years for the people to pay interest of millions of dollars on. No honest man with debt acts like this.

The tariff is a protection to the manufacturer, but to say that it is in the interest of the laborer is simply a delusion, as the laborer has to contend against free trade in labor.

The rich and strong are protected, and the poor and weak are down-trodden. When will it change? When? Then, again, tariff is an obstruction to progress, for it is a hindrance to reach a common brotherhood. If a nation discriminates and obstructs the commerce against other nations, it is only natural that they will retaliate, and in the long run all lose. Therefore am I for progress. FRED. KOEZLY.

"J. D." IN REPLY TO MR. MAGIE.

J. K. Magie, in answer to J. D., who says the inflation of the currency makes it of less value, says, "In other words, if all the currency of the country was destroyed but one dollar, that dollar would buy all the property in the country." He forgets that in that case we should hav no circulating medium and would be thrown back on barter pure and simple. I hav read somewhere of a supposititious case of a large number of people being placed on a hitherto uninhabited island, and they concluded they must hav a circulating medium or representativ of value to help in the exchange of commodities, but had neither gold nor silver on the island. But there was a limited amount of cockle shells. They decided to use them as money. All went on smoothly enough till a few fellows who did not like to work, loafing around the island, came across a cave that was full of cockle shells. They kept the secret to themselvs and commenced paying good prices for every commodity in the market, and the workers were well pleased to get such a good price for their product, till finally everything of value was in the hands of the sharpers, who reveled in their wealth while the masses were literally starving. Then the sharpers raised the price of everything enormously till they had the bulk of the cockle shells back in their cave, and nine-tenths of the property still in their own hands, and still gathered into their barns nine-tenths of the productions of the laboring masses, as long as they were fools enough to take cockle shells for money. This seems to me about the way the silver kings are managing at the present time.

The intrinsic value of anything is represented by the amount of labor employed in the production of it and its usefulness, and as long as gold is scarcer and harder to get, it will be more valuable than silver and less fluctuating in price; and the great necessity in a representativ of values as a circulating medium is stability, therefore gold is the more desirable medium of exchange. For small amounts silver is, because of its bulk, better than gold, as fractions of a dollar in gold are too small for convenience. The United States government issued but a very small amount of silver dollars until the few men who hav gobbled up the silver mines by gambling and other means had made themselvs a power in the country and bought themselvs senatorships and places in the House of Representativs by their silver cockle shells.

J. K. Magie again quotes: "We put on a tariff that shuts ourselvs out of foreign markets, and then use a cheap currency that admits foreign goods practically with little duty, and this we call statesmanship;" and adds, "We put no tariff on exportation." We know that, but we do what practically is the same thing; we put a tariff on everything the manufacturer uses, so that it is impossible to compete in foreign markets with other nations that get all their raw material free, and thus confine him entirely to the home market, which by our improved machinery is soon overstocked, which causes the competition to be so great that, with all the duties which the consumer has to pay, it ruins the manufacturer and sucks the blood out of the farmer and producer. He says, "Suppose the gold is driven out of the country, don't we get value received for it?" I answer, No; we pay the foreigner in gold or its equivalent in his own country, and he pays us for what he gets in the currency we hav made a legal tender among ourselvs—cockle shells, or silver coin, worth now a fraction less than eighty cents. J. D.

"EDGEWORTH" IN REPLY TO J. H. WOOD.

A political Aladdin, in resting from your labor, your imagination, under the same sort of reaction from the facts which spreads sumptuous banquets in the dreams of starving men, assumes the helm of that power to which it is enslaved, and, wielding the ballot as a talisman, creates money by fiat. Much, as easy as little, since it is but the cost of the paper, and this prevents the capital of faith from rusting by inaction. I know not that somnambulists fatten on the feasts which the magnetizer evokes by a similar fiat, but I would not depreciate the pleasures of illusion.

Social illusions, besides, may be realities for individuals. Many real fortunes were made by adroit speculation on the rise and fall of stocks during that greenback or fiat money period which Mr. Wood fondly caresses in his memory. During a flush of currency the business mind is excited, capital flows out more freely into enterprise, more labor is employed, and, as to wages, it must be the fault of contract if their sum does not rise to more than compensate for their lesser purchasing power. These temporary phenomena own a moral force distinct from the material basis of the currency; they will be the same whether this is flushed by an immigration of capital, or by the discovery of treasures, or by fiatism. The difference between these motivs of activity is felt at ulterior periods, when collapse and bankruptcy reveal the spurious. Labor less employed, reductiv competition among laborers, then determins fall in wages. Fluctuations of currency for a people isolated from the rest of the world would be chiefly injurious by the advantage they giv to the genius of speculation over honest effort, and by the ill-considered rush into enterprises that will come to grief, like parallel railroads, sinking capital, not only that of money, but of labor unproductivly employed. In our actual conditions of commercial intercourse, the embarrassment, during collapse, is increased by the fact that while shin-plasters sufficed for our home circulation, our specie drifts off to foreign faithless markets, those of Europe especially, which need less of what we produce, and which supply us with luxuries.

Is a fiat currency without other basis than faith on the part of its receivers? That depends on the nature of its investments, on the continuance of the government that issues it, and on taxation which may liquidate it.

When the Confederate government first issued fiat money, one of my neighbors had recently purchased a farm on terms of credit. He was making his first crop on it. The armies, consuming, destroying, and not producing, increased the demand for this produce. By the sale of his supplies then, the first season, the purchaser paid for the farm with money not at par with specie, and which soon became worthless. Had the Confederacy succeeded it might hav saddled upon labor the liquidation of this fiat money, received back as taxes, then destroyed. The transaction just mentioned illustrates the advantage to debtors of flushing the currency; but to what debtors? Not to those who owe abroad. The national war debt, whose burden of interest is crushing us, is largely owned abroad, its contract calls for specie; fiat money here is repudiation, only in a sneaking way. I favor repudiation, but openly, squarely, on the ground that all war debts, like gambling debts, ought to be forfeited. To lend a people funds for the purpose of injuring a neighbor people is as bad as to put weapons in the hands of a maniac or of a hired assassin. Besides, were the debt an honorable one, it has already been paid and overpaid by instalments of interest, the continuance of which is the establishment of economic slavery.

After just critical reflection upon war debts as well as upon our "national banks," Mr. Wood speaks of a "remedy proposed by Socialistic, Communistic dynamiters; a faith, a hope, a superstition, handed down from ancient dreamers."

This is unintelligible, as the class of Socialists mentioned propose no other remedy than simple repudiation of the debt. This is implied at least in the evolution at once political and economic by which the beatified proletary is to be lifted into the state saddle; but I speak of the matter as an outsider.

Farther on, Mr. Wood, who shows a laudable animosity against the great blood-sucker, interest, makes the strange accusation against me of "proposing that all go into the banking business, and all speculate on each others necessities, which is just as sensible as the idea of coöperation."

Well, it is difficult to imagin anything more sensible than coöperation, provided its aims, like that of the Labor and Produce Exchange Bank which I advocate, are to secure to labor the fruit of its earnings. In exchanging labor or values we necessarily do speculate on each other's necessities, but in a manner that is mutually beneficial. While accepting the words in their true sense, I can but regret with Mr. Wood that a sinister meaning has been imparted to them by the actual system of exploiting labor, of cheating in trade, and everywhere seeking self-interest at the neighbor's expense. "Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung."

Between Mr. Wood and myself, or the Anarchists who repudiate Communism, the points of agreement are:

1. The annulment of the war debt.
2. The abolition of usury.
3. The abundance of a currency without intrinsic value.

The difference between us regards the means of attaining these ends. We probably agree that the third is necessary to the second, and would facilitate the first, but Mr. Wood must hav a Deus ex machina, a power above economic society, while I expect the desired result from the organization of spontaneous activities of commerce liberated by removal of the incubus called government, a God created by manipulation of the ballot-box to replace in providentialism the dethroned Jehovah.

"Let there be light, and there was light." Let there be money, and money shall abound. Let all that requires thought, plan, wisdom, combination, be done for that baby, the people, retaining it in passivness, in heedlessness, in obedience to authority, lest from thought it should pass to action, and refuse to be taxed for the support of parasites. The idea of representing one's property on paper at one's own discretion! Why, that it is horrifying. You might as well expect us to talk in Alwato. Yet that is sufficient not only to make money plentiful, but to giv it the soundest of natural bases.

Mr. Wood and many others who cling to the forlorn hope of radical reforms by the instrumentality of the ballot, subjectivly attribute to us, whom I may designate as the constructiv school of Anarchists, or simply as the party of personal liberty, disabilities analogous to those which they experience. I mean of obtaining the consent of the whole nation, or even of a majority duly expressed through representativs. They are completely in error, but I grant that this error may hav been countenanced by Messrs. Tucker and Appleton in repudiating segregativ action, by which, and only by which, as I conceive, our ideas can receive a limited and colonial, but sufficient, illustration.

Practical earnestness can adapt itself to circumstances; it needs no futil bravado in refusing to pay taxes, and does not experience the absolute necessity of blowing up the capitol. It is not even necessary to be an Anarchist in principle, or to understand anything beyond one's immediate interests, in order to coöperate activly with our self-regulating finance, of which a protectiv union store will afford the initial institution, carrying out the original conception of Josiah Warren, with industries sufficiently varied. It is probable that a collateral illustration may be afforded by the autonomy of Sinaloa, and this quite unconsciously. EDGEWORTH.

Why New York's Taxes Are High.

A very important report was received by the New York legislature on Monday of last week. The report was in response to a resolution passed three weeks ago at the suggestion of Mr. Van Allen, calling for a full statement from the New York tax commissioners of the real estate exempt from taxation in New York city.

By this statement it appears that in the First ward $20,201,500 of real estate is exempt. Included in this amount is the Trinity church property, St. Peter's School, the Custom House, Sub-Treasury, and the piers and bulkheads along both rivers which belong to the city. The assessed value of the Trinity church property is $3,750,000, St. Peter's School, $80,000, and the government property, $4,200,000.

In the Second ward $958,000 of real estate is exempt, all of which is city property, with the exception of a Methodist church in John street, valued at $30,000, and land owned by the Roosevelt Hospital.

In the Third ward $3,487,000 is exempt. The most of this is city property. St. Paul's church, valued at $1,750,00, is exempt in this ward, as well as St. Peter's in Barclay street, valued at $215,000.

The total amount of exemptions in the Fourth Ward is $6,058,000. Among the land outside of city property exempt are that of the Roosevelt Hospital, $60,000; St. James's church, New Bowery and James street, $156,000; Madison Street church, $50,000; Baptist church, on Oliver street, $75,000; Episcopal church Mission, Pearl street, $15,000; Howard Mission, $50,000; Children's Aid Society, $10,000; Jewish Cemetery, $20,000; News Boys' Lodging House, $40,000; Brooklyn Bridge, $5,000,000.

In the Fifth ward $2,122,000 of real estate is exempt outside of city property, among which are the following: Baptist church, Varick street, $50,000; St. John's Episcopal church, $200,000; and New York City Mission, $5,000. The city property includes the Chambers Street Hospital, two schools, one public park, an engin-house and some two dozen piers and bulkheads.

In the Sixth ward $32,265,000 of real estate is exempt from taxation. Among the exemptions are: New York Dispensary, $50,000; church of the Transfiguration and school, $70,000; Roosevelt Hospital, $20,000; Five Points Mission, $75,000; Children's Aid Society, $50,000; House of Industry, $20,000; St. Matthew's church, $145,000; the Post Office, $9,000,000. The old State Arsenal, corner of Elm and White, is among the exemptions. Among the city property are the Tombs, four schools, the new Court House, City Hall, and Register's Office.

In the Seventh ward $1,504,000 of real estate is exempt. Among the exemptions in this ward are the Catholic Institute, $50,000; Lutheran church, Monroe street, $15,000; Sailors' Home, Cherry street, $200,000; Reformed church, $8,000; St. Theresa Academy, $35,000; Baptist church, Gouverneur street, $25,000; All Souls' church, Scammel street, $300,000; Olive Baptist church, $30,000; Hebrew Free School, $12,000; Sisters of Charity, $24,000; Childr-n's Aid Society, $25,000; St. Theresa's church and School, $130,000.

In the Eighth Ward $13,346,000 of real estate is exempt. Among the exemptions are the German Catholic church, $150,000, and the Methodist church $35,000.

Real estate is exempt in the Ninth ward to the amount of $3,217,660. The prominent exemptions are: St. Joseph's church, Sixth avenue, $75,000; St. Vincent's Hospital, $145,000; Gansevoort Market, $275,000; Jefferson Market, $300,000; St. Luke's Cemetery, $56,000. A large number of city piers and bulkheads are also exempt in this ward.

In the Tenth ward, $1,188,000 is the amount exempted. Among the exemptions are the Methodist church on Allen street, $75.000; Ludlow street Jail, $150,000; Essex Market $200,000, and Livingstone street Synagog, $75,000.

Real estate valued at $1,864,500 is exempt in the Eleventh ward. The exemptions include Roman Catholic church on Stanton street, $100,000; Roosevelt Hospital, Houston street. $87,000; St. Bridget's Catholic church and property, $75,000; Children's Aid Society, $65,000, and St. Francis's Hospital, $240,000.

In the Twelfth ward $42,300,800 is the total amount of property exempt. Included in this large sum are St. Joseph's Asylum and School, $225,000; Grace Episcopal church, $125,000; St. Cecilia's Roman Catholic church, $50,000; St. Andrew's church, $85,000; Magdalen Asylum, $75,000; All Saints' Roman Catholic church, $224,000; Academy of the Sacred Heart, $774,000; Home for Aged Females, $100,000; Leake and Watts Orphan Asylum, $450,000; Trinity Cemetery, $225,000, and New York Juvenile Asylum, $200,000.

The total amount of property exempt in the Thirteenth ward is $1,051,000. Included in this is a Baptist church in Suffolk street, $75,000, and St. Mary's Catholic church, $14,000.

In the Fourteenth ward $925,500 is the amount of real estate exempt. Roosevelt Hospital has $224-,000; Tract Society, $45,000, and the old St. Patrick's cathedral at $160,000 are among the exemptions.

In the Fifteenth ward, $3,848,000 of real estate is exempted. This includes the Astor Library, $150,-000; St. Joseph's Home, $100,000; Clinton Hall, Eighth street, $125,000; Grace church, $350,000, and Presbyterian church, Fifth avenue, $175,000.

A total of $2,344,500 is exempted in the Sixteenth ward. Included are, the Sisters of Charity, Fifteenth street, $104,200; St. Peter's church, Twentieth street, $125,000, and colored church and school in Twenty-fifth street, $75,000.

In the Seventeenth ward $6,287,500 of real estate is exempt. The following are included: St. Augustine's church, Houston street, $150,000; Marble Cemetery on Second street, $100,000; German Roman Catholic school, Second street, $150,000; Roman Catholic Cemetery in Eleventh street, $200,-000; Grace church chapel, $60,000; Cooper Institute, $800,000.

In the Eighteenth ward $19,350,000 is the amount exempted. Among the exemptions are the following: Masonic Hall, Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street, $600,000; Academy of Design, $275,000; Young Men's Christian Association, $600,000; Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church, $300,000; Calvary church, $300,000; St. George's church, $300,000; Society of Friends, $500,000; Presbyterian church, $200,000; Young Women's Christian Association, $200,000; College of St. Francis Xavier, $550,000; Episcopal church, $100,000; Jewish Synagog, $275,000; Holy Trinity church, $130,000; Free Academy, $200,000; Trinity chapel and school. $275,000.

Property worth $55,163,500 is exempt in the Nineteenth ward. Among the exemptions are the Colored Home and Asylum, $200,000; Hospital for Ruptured, $160,000; New York State Woman's Hospital, $450,000; Hebrew Synagog, $200,000; St. Vincent Ferrers church and school, $300,000; Seventh Regiment Armory, $650,000; Mount Sinai Hospital, $276,000; Foundling Hospital, $600,000; German Hospital, $300,000; Holy Trinity Dispensary, $40,-000; St. Bartholomew's church, $350,000; Columbia College, $750,000; Orphan Asylum, Fifth avenue and Fifty-second street, $1,200,000; Lenox Library, $750,000; Roman Catholic cathedral, $2,000,000; St. Luke's Hospital, $120,000.

In the Twentieth ward $57,815,000 is exempt. Among the property is that of the German Catholic church, $250,000; School of St. Michael's, $550,000; Protestant Episcopal church, St. Chrysostom, $170,-000; Institution for the Blind, $150,000.

In the Twenty-first ward $8,548,000 is exempted. Among the property exempt is St. Stephen's Roman Catholic church, $350,000; Protestant Episcopal church, Transfiguration, $250,000, and First Baptist church, $400,000.

In the Twenty-second ward $41,426,000 is exempt. The following are among the exemptions: Calvary church, $250,000; Central Presbyterian church, $150,000; School and church of Holy Cross, $175,000; Roosevelt Hospital, $600,000; Church of St. Paul the Apostle, $500,000; New York Orphan Asylum, $300,000, and House of Mercy, $150,000.

In the Twenty-third ward $1,458,000 is the amount exempted. The principal item in this ward is New York city property. The North Brothers' Island, $150,000; Ursuline Convent and Academy, $90,000; and a Dutch Reformed church, $800,000.

In the Twenty-fourth ward, $2,496,300 of real estate is exempt from taxation. Among the property exempt is Home for Incurables, $150,000; Sisters of Charity, $300,000; Woodlawn Cemetery, $600,000; St. John's College, $400,000.

GRAND TOTAL OF EXEMPTIONS.

The total amount of the exemptions for the twenty-four wards is $277,619,160, classified as follows: City property, $188,136,730; United States property, $13,350,000; church property, $42,137,500, and miscellaneous property, $33,994,930.

The report is signed by Commissioners Coleman, Donnelly, and Feitner.

The Cause in Toronto.

Mr. Watts lectured on Sunday evening, January 24th; subject, "The French Revolution," and considering the state of the weather he had a large audience. Snow had fallen during the day and night before to the depth of about eighteen inches, and was still falling; the churches were nearly all empty (so the papers said next day), and yet the body of the large Temperance Hall was well filled to hear Mr. Watts deliver his last lecture of the present course. These Sunday lectures seem to be growing in public favor, if increasing numbers in attendance are any indication, but being debarred by law from charging an admission, and being obliged to depend upon collections, which, as a rule, barely pay for hall and advertising, there is consequently a heavy drain upon the pockets of the members. However, it is expected that this difficulty will be partly obviated by the society having taken new rooms where they will hav a lecture hall of their own capable of seating four hundred people, and where there will probably be an income from sub-renting.

A great moral wave has set in here. Three weeks ago we had an exciting and in some respects a rather remarkable municipal election; it was in fact a contest as regards the mayorality, between common sense and fanaticism, between the business men and the ministerial association, aided by the teetotalers and the Salvation Army, and the goody-goody party came out on top by a large majority. We are now expecting a revival of the old Connecticut blue laws. The successful candidate has gone in for wholesale reform; everything is to be regulated with a view to making Toronto (as he puts it) "the most God-fearing city on this continent." The Sunday laws and the liquor laws are to be strictly enforced. The newsboys and bootblacks, the cigar stores and eating-houses, the skating rinks and peanut stands, are all to be licensed and inspected at stated intervals, and—angels and ministers of grace de fendus!—the aldermanic council is to be opened at every session with prayer. Speaking of Sunday laws, if Brother Reynolds is pining for martyrdom, tell him to come here next summer and set up his tent, and I'll wager that he gets not less than six months.

"Betcher life," this is to be the model city of the universe. No street cars on Sunday. Oh, no! Mr. Howland says "the Sawbath will not be desecrated in that way" while he is in office. He says in one of his campaign speeches: "I am a Christian; elect me and hav your Sunday kept holy. We hav seen the result of running street cars on Sunday in Chicago, and we will soon see the result of their running in Hamilton" (he don't say what the results were or will be). Again he says: "Toronto is the most law-abiding and God-fearing city in Canada, and I would rather hav it so than to hav it the most prosperous city in the world;" and he told his admiring audience in the next breath that "the city government had been run for the last few years by bummers, heelers, and scalawags." To an inquiring mind the question might here occur: If the city has become the most law-abiding, God-fearing, etc., under the rule of bummers, heelers, etc., why change things? Why not let them keep on running it? If his honor's executiv ability is no better than his logic, may the fates defend us through his administration.

To show how consistent those Christians are, it may not be out of place to state that the election took place on Monday, and that this gentleman who is so anxious to avoid Sabbath desecration allowed his election committee to organize their forces and arrange their Monday's work all day Sunday. They also distributed some thousands of dodgers among the churches, and to people going to and coming from church, calling upon them to support their candidate.

Had the other side resorted to such means it would hav been very wrong—shocking, in fact; but this was done in a good cause, and the end justified the means. Let us pray.

Secularism in Toronto is by no means a bed of roses to its adherents. Only a few months ago a member of the Toronto society was expelled from a Masonic lodge on a charge of being a Secularist and an Agnostic. Nothing else could be brought against him. Even the Toronto Freemason, a paper which has shamefully abused him throughout the whole affair, was compelled to admit in its last issue that "the gentleman is a good citizen, and respected by all who know him." You may hear more of this case in the near future.

And now two other members of the Secular Society, Messrs. Charles Hicks and George Beals, hav been thrown out of employment, dismissed from their situations in the dead of winter without a moment's notice, for no other reason than their being members of that body. Their late employer admitted that he had no other fault to find with them, but, with a heart so filled with the love of God that it contains no particle of the milk of human kindness, he refused even to giv them a recommendation to another place.

Both of these gentlemen were depending on their weekly salary for their support, with, in the case of Mr. Beals, a wife and family to provide for. Mr. Hicks had served the "house" in which he was employed faithfully for six years, and had every reason to expect better treatment, but faithful servitude must sink before a sense of religious duty. The city is in the hands and under the control of religious bigotry, and we cannot tell whose turn will come next.

Here is a sample of what the Toronto people may expect during the next twelve months: The Rev. Johnson Vicars, who is one of a number of clergymen who claim exemption from just taxation because they are clergymen, has presented a little bill to the city council for damages on account of a defectiv drain. For cool "cheek" this takes the whole bakery. Here are a few of the items: "To use of means at present and in future for eradicating the malarial poison from our constitutions and restoring us to health, $300." "For loss occasioned to the London Jews' Society through being unable to preach, $150." And, "for loss of time whilst urging the corporation to grant compensation, $25." And so on, to the amount of several hundred dollars. This is not a joke, but Punch in all its glory never contained anything more funny. They hav their innings, and evidently mean to "make hay while the sun shines" on the get-all and pay-nothing principle. "And they did spoil the Egyptians."

TORONTO.

Is Professor Sumner a Heretic?

The New York Sun thinks that the social teachings of Professor Sumner, of Yale, are strongly Atheistic, and asks, "Can he be anything else than an Agnostic?" His lectures to the students, the Sun says, are directly at variance with the theories of theology and the whole spirit of Christianity, for he teaches flatly and with cruel emphasis that the scientific doctrin of the survival of the fittest should be applied to human society with all its logical consequeuces. The weakest must go to the wall, says Professor Sumner, and the strongest must succeed among men as among beasts. The sentimental view of social questions he laughs at as unworthy of sensible and educated men, who, according to his notion, should watch without a quiver the progress of the struggle which is "hurrying on the survival of the fittest."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - FEBRUARY 20, 1886.

THE
TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
AND
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.
1886.

Containing, besides the 1886 Calendar, an Article on the Progress of Freethought in the United States during 1885; statistics of money paid to the churches from state treasuries, etc.; a splendid story by James Payne, entitled, "The Curate of Churnside;" a true statement of the facts concerning Voltaire's death, etc., etc.; also

ILLUSTRATIONS:

Portraits of many great English Freethinkers and scientists; pictures of Girard College, the Lick Observatory, the Waco, Texas, Freethought Hall, Paine Memorial, Mr. Reynolds's Tent, etc.

PRICE, - - - - - - 25 CENTS.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures each week, the subscription list must be lengthened. That those inclined to help add to the list may find it no hard matter, we make the following low terms:

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Will not everyone, in renewing, try to get at least one new subscriber, thus saving money for themselvs and helping us?

And in renewing inclose 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

A Great Injustice.

The Christian residents in Turkey are suffering under Oriental tyranny and injustice, and it will not be surprising if President Cleveland is asked to send some ironclads up the Bosphorus.

The grievance of the Christians is the recent modification by the Porte of the law of blasphemy. This law has hitherto been one of the most important of the code for those who hav to bring their wits to bear in overthrowing an adversary. Whenever a man had a quarrel and encountered difficulties of fact in getting the law after his enemy, it has been customary to charge him with blasphemy. If two witnesses would testify that the culprit used blasphemy, the matter passed at once out of the domain of the ordinary courts and became a state cause, which needed no trial, but in which the Sublime Porte itself had the decision of the length of time that the blasphemer must expiate his fault in prison. The privilege of thus punishing an antagonist in a losing cause has hitherto been enjoyed by all classes alike, and God and Allah were both secure against the evil tongues of the community.

But a change has come over the Porte. Recently a Turk was charged with blaspheming God, and the case went to that sublime body for adjudication. To the horror of the worshipers of God the Porte decided that to blaspheme God is not blasphemy, but only a looseness of language, and issued orders that hereafter no one shall be held to be guilty of blasphemy unless he shall hav blasphemed the name of the Prophet Mohammed. The Christians of the empire regard this as an unfair regulation. No Moslem is likely to insult the name of his own prophet, while missionaries engaged in converting the Turks are almost certain to refer in terms of derision to Allah and his prophet, Mohammed. This new interpretation of the law, therefore, is expected to bear heavily upon the Christians, who are deprived of the right to abuse the Moslem God, while the ribald heathen can scoff at Jehovah to his heart's content.

Certainly it is too bad. Perhaps, however, the Porte only meant to show how true is Colonel Ingersoll's statement that blasphemy is but a question of geography.

The New Book.

Since we announced in THE TRUTH SEEKER of February 6th a new book, "The Order of Creation: The Conflict Between Genesis and Geology," being a discussion in the Nineteenth Century between W. E. Gladstone, T. H. Huxley, Max Müller, and a paper in the Gentleman's Magazine by Mrs. E. Lynn Linton, the controversy has grown considerably, and the book has grown with it. So has the price. In the January number of the Nineteenth Century Mr. Gladstone replied to Mr. Huxley's reply, M. Réville to Mr. Gladstone, and in the February number Mr. Huxley closes the discussion. The addition of these three long papers will swell our reprint to a handsome 12mo book of nearly two hundred pages, the price of which will hav to be 50 cents in paper covers, and 75 cents in cloth. The chapters of the book are: "The Dawn of Creation and of Worship," by W. E. Gladstone; "The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature," by Professor Huxley; "Postscript to Solar Myths," by Max Müller; "Proem to Genesis," by W. E. Gladstone; "Dawn of Creation: An Answer to Mr. Gladstone," by M. Réville; "Mr. Gladstone and Genesis," by Professor Huxley; "A Protest and a Plea," by Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

This is by considerable the biggest discussion with which the Christian legend has been honored, and the conclusion is eminently satisfactory to truth seekers. The book will be out about March first, and those who earliest favor us with their orders will be earliest served.

The Plain Way Out of It.

The legislature at Albany is still in trouble about the "Freedom of Worship bill," or rather its ghost, for it is stated that it will not be introduced this session. It lies in abeyance to await a more favorable time. The snake is simply scotched. However, an attack was made upon the appropriation for the House of Refuge, on the ground that it did not giv sufficient "freedom of worship." The attack was vigorously opposed, and some very good Secular principles advanced. One speaker declared, "If this body is not here to enact laws for the body politic, but to pander to sectarian prejudice, the sooner it adjourns sine die and disperses the better." To this we say amen.

Right here would hav been a fine opportunity, had any member of the assembly been sufficiently wise, and bold enough, to suggest a way out of all these religious difficulties which still continue to haunt our legislation—namely, that there shall be no appropriations of money from the public treasury for the support of any institutions founded and managed chiefly by sectarian denominations. Politicians do not seem to realize that so long as such appropriations are made there is a practical union of church and state. As the matter now stands there are religious services at the House of Refuge. It is not a thoroughly secular institution. The juvenil Protestant criminal can be sent there, and hav the benefit of his religion in full, but the Catholic cannot—he cannot hav the benefit of mass. It seems reasonable that if the one can hav what is for the "salvation of his soul," the other should hav the same. The Protestant has the advantage in the simplicity and cheapness of his religious services. It does not make much show, and costs comparativly little to read the Bible, and pray, and listen to a sermon. Hence this intrusion upon secular principles is not much noticed. The mass, however, is a very imposing affair. It is expensiv in its paraphernalia. It brings out the religious element quite prominently. Hence there is opposition at once. The cry is, There is a union of church and state. Evidently there is, but essentially there is no more union of church and state in the celebration of the mass than in the conducting of the Protestant religious services, and we can but sympathize with the demand of our Catholic fellow-citizens. It is just that if the state allow the one it should allow the other. If the state givs religious satisfaction to the Protestant, why should it not do the same to the Catholic? Where is the line to be drawn? At Bible-reading? Why there?. Because that is a common act in which all can unite. This is not so, for there are many who do not desire the Bible-reading. Where, then, shall the line be drawn. Simply at every religious service. This settles the difficulty, and there can be no quarreling.

If religion is to be given in any kind of doses to our criminals, let the various sects who hav followers in this class furnish it freely and voluntarily. Let them not tax the state to provide any part of this spiritual pabulum. The state cannot enter into that sort of business. It cannot assume that religion will do any service to the state. If religion kept people from violating the laws, the state might hav some ground for patronizing it; but the very fact that the people with religion hav committed crimes plainly shows that religion is not a preventiv, and therefore, since it has not made a man moral outside of prison, it will not make him any better inside of a prison. The state cannot use religion, even if it were beneficial, for it must, if it is beneficial, be a matter of individual conviction, and that is something which the state cannot deal with as a part of its machinery. Of course the state, in its relations with the criminal classes, must look to reform and moral motiv. It does not punish merely for vengeance, but, if possible, after the punishment is inflicted, to make the offender a good citizen. The criminal should be subjected to humane influences. He should be placed, if possible, where his better nature will be developed, but his better nature is not his religious nature, but his human nature, and is to be developed by purely secular motivs. This basis is universal, and on this basis the state can work to some advantage for the welfare of prison inmates, but the very moment it trenches upon the domain of religious instruction it is in infinit difficulty. If it takes one religion, then it must take all; if it assumes one religious service, then it must assume all. The Protestant cries that to make provision for the celebration of mass is a palpable union of church and state. The Catholic might answer, Bible reading is equally so; it is a Protestant religious service, adapted to the Protestant; why should not the Catholic hav that which is adapted to him. So far as justice is concerned, if one is granted, the other should be also. The fact that one is simple and the other complex and imposing does not change the logic. Both are parts of a religious service, and in a secular government must be remanded to purely individual and voluntary effort.

The government does not discuss religion—it simply ignores it. It is not a part of the state program. It must be omitted on all occasions. Thus an infinit amount of discord is avoided. If religion can do any good it will still hav ample opportunity. Each church can do its work without hindrance. There will be no quarreling. The moment, however, the state interferes to patronize any sort of religious instrumentality it touches a spring that unloses countless streams of discord. There is a theological war at once in the arena of the legislativ halls. "Touch not, taste not, handle not," should be the state motto as to all religious affairs. Total abstinence is the only safe, wise, and prosperous course. It is evident, however, that our law-makers hav much to learn. They hav not yet attained to the simplicity of a secular state. In fact, we can apply to them the old scripture phrase, "They are double-minded and so unstable in all their ways." They never look straight ahead, but always around—to see what is expected of them. Hence they do not see the plain way out of a difficulty.

More Canadian Superstition.

From Montreal comes a tale of a peculiarly medieval character. It is related that about midnight last Saturday "a most remarkable phenomenon was witnessed in the heavens. It appeared on the western horizon and rose to the north 79 degrees, where it assumed the spectacle of the heavens opening and shooting forth a stream of livid, rose-colored light." Naturally enough the superstitious population of Montreal were frightened. The Catholics thought the last day had come, and kneeled upon the streets praying for salvation from their sins. Two policemen were arresting a prisoner at the time "when the astonishing display from the heavens paralyzed them for the moment, and they both knelt and returned thanks to heaven for their preservation. Two Catholics thought it was the day of judgment, and from some cause or other fell dead."

Probably Montreal is the only city on the western continent the major portion of whose population can be frightened—two to death—by a red streak in the sky. We venture to say, however, that a few preserved their equanimity. They are the members of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club.

To Which School Shall the Children Go?

We hav received received the following query, which is difficult to answer without perhaps stirring up a family trouble:

"POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 8, 1886.

"MR. EDITOR: What is the law of this state regarding the attendance of children at school? Is it the father or mother who has the right to school the children, supposing the mother is religious and wishes the children to go to a religous school, and the father is a Liberal and wants them to attend the public school?

"Is there any law on the subject of church and Sunday-school? If a man is Liberal, he will say to his children, 'If you want to go to church and Sunday-school, go; if you don't want to go, stay away.' But has the mother a right to compel the children to attend church and Sunday-school? Has the husband a right, as head of the family, to teach his Liberal views in place of the wife's compulsory doctrin?

"J. G."

The above letter indicates a jar in some Poughkeepsie family, and we do not wish to make it louder. But the law is clearly on the side of the father. He has the legal right to bring his children up as he pleases as regards their mental training. As religious schools are notoriously valueless, children should attend the public schools. They will obtain in them all the religion they can stand and yet grow up good citizens. As for Sunday-schools, we think a father, by judicious teaching, can easily overcome their pernicious influence. But only to avoid a family separation, should the father yield. Both parents might let the children choose for themselvs. In this particular case, however, we think behind the mother's wishes is the influence of a priest. If so, that priest should be made to understand that he will greatly oblige by keeping his nose out of family affairs.

In a word, while the father has the clear legal right to educate his children as he pleases, he should do everything compatible with honor, and without sacrifice of principle, to preserve peace in the family.

Churches in Michigan.

The Detroit Evening News is severe upon the churches of Michigan. Ostensibly berating them for their lack of success, and condemning almost without measure their methods, it furnishes the unbelieving person who will not be enticed into them the strongest kind of reasons for his course. The churches are not worth joining, even as social organizations.

The facts which the News givs regarding the churches are these: One denomination in Michigan last year, the Baptist, expended in salaries and expenses $264,294 and received 806 additions to their membership—an average cost of $327.89 apiece. Outside of this there was also raised $53,840 for the support of the Sunday-school, home and foreign missions, and other church interests. Of the 378 Baptist churches in the state 187 report no baptisms—"a humiliating disclosure," says their state organ. Taking the membership of the principal Protestant churches in the state—the Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians—it is found they number 142,159, which is an increase over 1884 of 3,611. Their expenses doubtless averaged as high as the Baptists, which makes an aggregate of $1,084,000. Now, when it is remembered that there were in 1884 over 1,855,000 persons in Michigan, that out of this there are not over 150,000 Protestants of all denominations, and who had less than 4,000 additions to offset the 50,000 yearly increase in population, can the present church methods, questions the News, be called anything else, in their attempts to reach the masses, than dismal and lamentable failures?

It will be noticed, too, that in the above figures the losses by deaths, "moved away," and other causes, are not given. The further question may rationally be asked, then, was the total number of converts equal to the losses? But when the entire country is taken into consideration, the News finds the disparity in numbers between what it naïvely calls the elect and the lost to be "simply appalling." By the figures from the church's own statistics the News finds there are over forty-three millions of people in this country "with no church relations, except such as doom them, with the heathens, to eternal and endless punishment."

All this is very sad, from the standpoint from which the News pretends to view the question. But there is a balm in Gilead for the soul of our frightened contemporary. It is this: It makes not the slightest difference in the world whether or not there is even one church-member in Michigan, nor whether the churches spend one or a million dollars for each convert, so far as the "eternal and endless" punishment of that person is concerned. Heaven and hell are states of mind, not localities either in the beyond or in the bowels of the earth, and these states of mind are in the people here on earth, according as their deeds are good or evil. The matter of most importance to Michigan is to raise honest men and women. Having "done all to stand" by filling her borders up with these, she need care nothing about the scarcity of communicants on the church rolls.

Editorial Notes.

ARTHUR C. EVERETT has been forced to suspend his Rights of Man.

AMONG the "religious notes" of an exchange we find the statement that there are at present more than three hundred preachers, exclusiv of Catholic priests and Mormon elders, now before the courts, chiefly for crimes against women.

A POLICEMAN, of Fresno City, Cal., lately went insane and was found by a citizen up a tree in his orchard. He was persuaded to come down, like Zacchens, and announced himself a new John the Baptist. He was committed to an asylum.

WITH the March number, which is the beginning of the fourth volume, J. D. Shaw will double the size of his Independent Pulpit. The price will be raised to $1.50. The Independent Pulpit has always been interesting, and now that the size is doubled the subscription list ought to be.

"THE GUILD OF KINDNESS" is the name of an institution belonging to the Methodist New Connection of Great Britain. The object of the organization is to develop a spirit of kindness among brethren and sisters of the denomination especially, and among all Christians generally. This is certainly a much needed guild.

JAMES A. BLISS has changed his Spirit Voices from a monthly to a weekly called the N. D. C. Axe. The object of the National Developing Circle is to increase the visible supply of mediums, and thus work for the good of Spiritualism. Mr. Bliss also vigorously attacks the Catholic church, wherein he has our heartiest sympathy.

THE Young Men's Christian Association of New Haven has asked the legislature to exempt its property from taxation to the amount of $50,000 because it is a religious concern. The Ansonia Young Men's Christian Association also demands $15,000 exemption. The Senate passed the necessary resolutions to comply with these unjust demands, and the House will probably follow suit.

THE Valley Falls Lucifer has a new press. While the paper presents a neater appearance than usual, Mr. Harman explains that he has not got all out of the new press there is in it on account of the unfavorable weather. We sympathize with Mr. Harman in his struggles with the Kansas blizzards that freeze his press up, and advise him to put some printer's varnish or a spoonful or two of turpentine in his ink. That's what we did when we ran a country press.

THE Tulare, Cal., Democratic Free Press is a cautious journal, as we judge by the following: "A gentleman sent to the Free Press some copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a journal of Freethought and free expression. The Free Press is not a theological journal, hence will not criticise the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are certain that the editorial matter referred to will be praised by Freethinkers generally and condemned by all believers in the established religion of the age. Typographically the paper is a model of neatness."

THE Catholic Union and Times rejoices that in Mr. Gladstone's new cabinet John Morley is made chief secretary of Ireland. It says: "If Ireland must hav such an official pending the winning of her national independence, we know of no one better fitted to fill the duties of that position in a wise and humane manner than John Morley." Is Mr. Cronin not aware that John Morley is an Infidel? Or has it come to this, that, weary of looking for justice from Protestants to Catholics, Mr. Cronin turns to an Infidel as the embodiment of justice?

THERE is probably as much heresy of one kind and another to the square inch in Massachusetts as in any Eastern state. Yet there are laws on Massachusetts's statute books which, if enforced, would make life decidedly uncomfortable for the "Modern Athenians." Last week a petition to the legislature was presented asking for the repeal of the old Blue laws. Among them are these: No. 1 makes it an offense to be present at any unlicensed entertainment, other than sacred, on either Saturday or Sunday evening. No. 2 prohibits all labor or the keeping open of any shop, except in case of necessity or charity, on the Lord's day, and forbids dancing on that day, the penalty being $50 for each offense. No. 3 forbids traveling, except in cases of necessity or charity, on Saturday evening or Sunday, and fixes a fine for any landlord who on that day entertains, or allows to be about his place, any persons other than travelers, strangers, and lodgers. Nos. 10 and 11 make catching fish or shooting game on Sunday a finable offense. No. 13 exempts the Jews from the provisions in these laws.

"I GIV my soul and my heart to God, and say good-bye to everybody," were the last words of Charles Hermann, of Buffalo, hanged last Friday for murdering his wife. Before he left his cell for the scaffold he partook of the sacrament, and his last words were preceded by a prayer from a clergyman. If we may be permitted without blasphemy, we wish God much joy with such brutes as Hermann. The company in the other fellow's place is more select without them.

"THERE is only a thin plank," says the Freeman's Journal, "between Protestantism and Infidelity. Let us do nothing to make it thinner. What of Catholic tradition remains in Protestantism has helped to keep society from utter corruption in this land of freedom. Better that Protestants should be intolerant and bigoted, and honest in their belief, than that they should become pagans, burning incense to Joss and kneeling at high mass with equal reverence. The only breakwater against the tide of Agnosticism is the Catholic church, which teaches that education cannot be divorced from the Christian religion." For which reason the Catholic church ought to go.

THE following is from the Ironclad Age:

"Brother Byers is clamorous for a book that will giv the amount and value of church property in the United States of America, and he ought to hav it—so had every man. Any man having knowledge of such a compilation will do well to postal-card this office."

If Brother Byers and Doctor Monroe will consult the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886 they will find what they want. Every Freethinker should hav all the issues of the ANNUAL, for in them is a vast amount of information, statistical and rhetorical, which is invaluable.

IN the proper column the poetically inclined of our readers may find the advertisment of a new poem by S. P. Putnam, entitled, "Adami and Heva." It is the story of the Indian garden of Eden, older by thousands of years than the Old Testament tale. Brahma, waking from "the dull blank of incommunicable sleep," makes up his mind to make a world and a man and a woman. The legend relates that he put the man and woman on the island of Ceylon. Adami and Heva had their courtship and then they were married by Brahma himself, who said to them, "Remain here; you must never leave this island." But after a while Adami grew restless and said to Heva, "I believe I'll look about a little." He went to the northern extremity of the island, where there was a narrow neck of land connecting it with the mainland, and looked across. The mainland appeared more beautiful than the island, and he finally persuaded Heva to accompany him across, he carrying her on his back. When they got over they heard a crash, and, looking back, discovered that the neck of land had fallen into the sea. Then Brahma cursed them both. Adami spoke up and said, "Curse me, but curse not her; it was not her fault, but mine." Brahma softened a little and said he would save Heva but not Adami. But Heva was a true wife, and wouldn't hav it so: "If thou wilt not spare him, spare neither me; I do not wish to liv without him; I love him." Brahma, however, sent them out into the world, but promised to watch over them and their children. This was better behavior all around than we read of in the Genesis copy, and shows that the mythologists of India had better ideas of manliness and godliness than the ancient Jewish writers. Mr. Putnam has written this story up in the superior poetic style for which he is noted, and had it published by the Truth Seeker Company, and now wishes to sell it for ten cents per copy. And while we do not usually invest heavily in poetry, we can recommend this with a clear couscience as being a beautiful myth beautifully related. Courtlandt Palmer says it is incomparably the best production of the author, and that is saying a great deal. The philosophy of the poem is that love is the mightiest force in the world, beside which even the power of the supreme Brahma was a valueless thing. This is illustrated by Heva's rejection of paradise without Adami:

"Thou hast been just, Great Brahma. Thee I praise:
But I would render back thy precious gift.
Take thy fair Eden—I will walk the earth
To death's dark door with him I love alway.
Adami is my life; my heart is there,
Beating with his whatever fate may do.
Better with him all suffering and all woe:
Better with him the labor and the pain;
Better with him the wildest path forlorn;
Better with him the thunder's blasting force,
Than all that thou canst giv with him away.
Justice is thine, O Brahma; love is mine for aye."

For the rest of the poem, which is all as good as this, the reader is respectfully referred to the pamphlet.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON is having crowded houses in Ebony, Mo., where it was supposed the people were so pious that they would not listen to a Freethinker. He next goes to Silver City; after that to Minnesota. Liberals of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Dakota should address him at Lake City, Minn.

CHARLES WATTS's lecturing engagements are as follows: Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 20th and 21st, Chicago. Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 22d and 23d, Palo, Ill. Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Feb. 24th, 25th, and 26th, Wyoming, Ill. Sunday, Feb. 28th, Davenport, Iowa. All communications as to lecturing engagements with Mr. Watts should be sent to him, up to March 6th, care of Mr. A. D. O'Neill, 107 Parke avenue, Chicago, Ill. After that date, No. 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Letters from Friends.

SAGINAW, MICH., Feb. 3, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I think that your illustrations are superb. I hav no doubt the influence consequent thercupon will tend to make the old TRUTH SEEKER still morc popular than ever. I hope that you will hav a thousand new subscribers at least.

J. H. BURNHAM.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. ISLAND, Jan. 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: For inclosed $1 please send the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886, and apply balance to assist in the illustration of the paper, as should the illustrations, of which I cordially approve, be continued, I intend to contribute another dollar on my subscription to the paper to help to meet the extra expense. And believe me ever, with increasing respect and sympathy, Yours, JAS. B. GAY.

OTTUMWA, IA., Jan. 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Shake! I felt like jumping as high as the mythological cow of the nursery rhyme when I read your reply to Tucker & Co. Go for them, for they are doing true Liberalism more harm in a day than the rest of us can undo in a year. Their devilish trash is thrown in my face often, and the outsider who is seeking for truth is often driven from the pursuit by the wild vagaries of the Anarchists.

Truly yours, C. W. STEWART.

AYER, MASS., Feb. 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I think my dollar given for the picture department wisely spent. Such illustrations are powerful arguments. They daguerreotype the subject on the mind more than any sermon of words can do, and which few memories can hold. These pictures are arguments that children can comprehend and remain a lifelong history. They will stimulate "eternal vigilance." Liberals, save your pew-rent and support THE TRUTH SEEKER. ELIJAH MYRICK.

VINELAND, N. J., Feb. 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Those impressiv illustrations you are now publishing add greatly to the value of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The majority of persons are more deeply impressed through their eyes than their ears. As this is the case, what a wonderful educator the future issues of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER are to be! It is my wish that the paper may increase greatly in circulation, and that it may liv for years teaching humanity how to get rid of the curse of superstition.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS.

WILMOT, O., Jan. 26, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose you $4, three for THE TRUTH SEEKER; for the balance please send last year's TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, and as many of J. E. Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking" work as the money will pay for. I suppose I will not likely patronize THE TRUTH SEEKER many years more, as I am now in my seventy-seventh year, which will make, when this year is up, threescore and seventeen years, which will preclude the probability of seeing many more. I am getting too old to get around very well, otherwise I would try to get you some subscribers; but subscribers are hard to get, as money is scarce here. JAMES ALLEN.

VERNONIA, OR., Jan. 25, 286.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the card you sent me that you hav received my money for my subscription for 1886. I want you to send me your catalog of books for sale. I think we will need some of them here. This is a backwoods place, and in the winter the back of the mud is away back from the top of the ground. Just after Christmas two young Methodist students came in here and told the people that Jesus Christ had been killed for them. It raised quite an excitement, and you could see people in sleds pulled by oxen splashing through the mud, going from house to house, by appointment beforehand, to tell each other about his death.

I am glad you hav started in on pictures. I put each one up in a frame, and it is fun to see Christians look at them. They appear to hav the same influence on them that a red rag has on a bull. O. CHERINGTON.

AURORA, O., Feb. 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Another fearless and untiring hand has gone to rest. The mother of the writer died on the eve of January 16th after a painiul sickness of three months. Her name was Louisa Fenton. She was the mother of nine children, seven of whom survive her, the writer being the oldest of her family. She has always been a diligent and faithful woman in her family duties—one of the hardest-working women I ever knew, always at work, trying to bring comfort to some one save herself. She was always at home, never running the streets, as many do, to flirt and flame about. She never was a member of any religious denomination. For several years she had been a Spiritualist. On being asked the question, "Whom do you want to speak at your funeral?" she replied, "I don't want any orthodox." There was no orthodox employed. Mr. O. P. Kellog, of East Trumbull, O., a well-known Spiritualist lecturer, delivered the discourse, which was fitting. The lines of Scotland's pride are not inappropriate:

"Happy, ye sons of busy life,
Who, equal to the bustling life,
No other view regard!
E'en when the wished end's denied,
Yet while the busy means are plied,
They bring their own reward."

It is often asserted by Christians that unbelievers in their religion are afraid to die. This foolish and silly lie is unworthy of any notice whatever. I saw my mother daily for the last hundred days of her life, and I can truthfully testify that I heard her say again and again that she was ready, and even anxious, to die. Why should those who hav devoted their lives to benefit others dread to "lie down to pleasant dreams." If good deeds will not bring us happiness in time or eternity, then let our fate be what it will hereafter, let us do our duty here. And if all mankind would so justly and untiringly perform their duty as did the one who now sleeps beneath the flakes of snow, justice would be more evenly distributed among mankind. B. O. FENTON.

WEST ENOSBURGH, VT., Feb. 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber to your valuable paper but a short time, and during this short time hav gleaned many benefiting ideas and solid truths. I liv in a community where nothiug is taught, and hardly anything read, but orthodox principles, and anyone who does entertain Liberal ideas is looked upon as a dangerous person in society. What a state of affairs this is! and will this civilized country ever be rid of this mental slavery, the greatest enemy to the advancement of scientific education?

If you hav room in your paper, I wish you would publish the statistics of the growth of orthodoxy in this country compared with the growth of population, and also giv us the Nine Demands of Liberalism for the benefit of new subscribers. What a feast it would be if we could hav a good Liberal lecturer for a night or two! It would be like an oasis in a desert. Yours, etc., C. H. BESSEY.

STRASBURG, ILL., Feb. 6, 286.

MR. EDITOR: W. S. Bell arrived here Feb. 4th at 2 P.M., and made the acquaintance of nearly all our business men and many ladies. His pleasant countenance made a good impression. In the evening when he went to the hall he found the seats all occupied, and many standing. His lecture, "Liberty and Morality," was delivered pleasantly, though earnestly. Near the close of his lecture there was a slight rustle of calico, caused by the deacon's wife and the minister's wife setting an example for children by hastily leaving the room and stopping the speaker in the middle of a story he was telling to show that bad parents generally produced bad offspring, and that a child that had a bad start in the world could not be improved by pounding.

The ladies were not insulted by any language used by the lecturer. The Liberals of Illinois should keep W. S. Bell in the lecture field all the time. There is not a minister that can come in here and get a convert that is of age, or a minor that will stick. We are totally depraved.

Yours truly, A. YORK.

JOPLIN, MO., Jan. 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: This, the anniversary of Thomas Paine, America's grandest and purest patriot; a man revered by the mentally disenthralled thousands of our nation's son's and daughters; a man that future generations will engraft in the hearts of the millions yet to be; a monument more enduring, a purer, deeper reverence than that accorded either Confucius, Mohammed, or Christ; a name that can only be associated with the most disinterested, the purest, loftiest, noblest purpose; a name without a parallel in advocacy of human right; a name without a peer in brilliant, fearless wealth of brain and purpose; our nation's first, the world's grandest champion of universal mental liberty—is a fitting time to affirm renewed allegiance to the cause which he so fearlessly, so grandly championed.

It is fitting, while reflecting over the grandeur of this grand man at this date, that I renew also my allegiance to that noble, fearless old advocate of Thomas Paine's principles, THE TRUTH SEEKER, that for so many years, laden with the cream of Liberal thought, has been a welcome weekly visitor at my humble home. Yes, Friend Macdonald, you are doing a grand, a noble work. Your management of THE TRUTH SEEKER interest in the Freethought publishing department, your efforts in disseminating our humanitarian literature, your defense of the right and fight against the wrong as you see it, is good enough for me, and I sincerely hope that you may liv to gather from the tree our beloved Bennett planted, and so carefully and ably fertilized and pruned by you, its ripe and mellow fruit, and feast thereon,

Long liv and prosper THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WM. M. CARTER.

ELLSWORTH, KAN., Feb. 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Yesterday my husband sent you a post-office order for five dollars for THE TRUTH SEEKER up to 1887, and ten cents for Remsburg's "False Claims." We hav a few Liberals in our town of about fifteen hundred citizens. I hav lived here since 1868. I am a Spiritualist, but a Liberal. My husband is very Liberal, and we wish and hope that if Mr. S. P. Putnam travels over the Union Pacific while on his way to Colorado, he will stop of at Ellsworth. I do not know as we can make it profitable for him, but even a visit from a Liberal would encourage us; and here let me say, any Liberals traveling in this vicinity will be welcome guests at our house, which is situated on the Smoky Hill river. We liv in a square frame house on the bank of the river, across the street is a square, stone house. We liv on Douglass avenue on the west side of the street. It is the second street west from the depot. Turn south from railroad track; inquire for John Metzger. I hav been to church four times in fourteen years. The last one I attended was the Episcopal Methodist, Rev. W. A. Seville. He remarked that all Infidels were taught Infidelity before they became Infidels, and, said he, "What is more natural than for a child to kneel at its papa's or mamma's feet and repeat its evening prayers." I was so disgusted that I got up and went home. A few days later some ladies called at my house, and during the conversation one of them asked me why I left the church so suddenly. I told her that I expected the minister to tell the truth and if he did not I would not stay and hear him. For me, I was always a natural Infidel, and I believe every person would be if it were not for their teaching while young. Oh, how I wish we could see a nation that had not been taught the dogmas of the church. Let Liberals see to it that they educate their children in Liberal knowledge and literature. SARAH METZGER.

A LETTER FROM A CLERGYMAN.

CHARLOTTE HARBOR, FLA., Jan. 20, 1886.

MY DEAR EDITOR: I do not wish to raise a discussion for notoriety, as some do, but I am anxious to learn all I can. I wish to say a few things, and hear your opinion. Now, before I come to any point that I would like an opinion on, I will say that I wish church and state to forever remain as far apart as Z and A. First, I believe there is no death of anything, but everything is and always has been evoluting. Second, I don't believe there ever was any place of punishment, call it what you may. I hav reasons too numerous to mention for such belief, but one is that spirit, being of lighter material, would naturally consume the sulphur. Then I believe in science, and that science is truth. I believe that we hav about one thousand worlds in our star or solar system, and our sun and system is one of eighteen millions that describe their circle around the pole; that there hav already been four thousand such grand divisions discovered and still no end to space—seventy-two thousand million of suns and each surrounded by a thousand opaque worlds; that each and all are in a constant state of evolution and all are describing a circle around some greater head. I believe that God is the power, call it what name you will, that fills all space, that givs each and every thing an understanding according to its merit or capacity, from the smallest, where fifteen million can dwell in a drop of water, to the largest world that floats in space. I don't believe there is any darkness only as a thing gets in its own light. As the spirit is the light of the body, so when evil passions get in our light then great is our darkness within.

I do not believe in the inspiration of the Bible; still, I believe man may derive great knowledge from a proper study of the book, laying aside the unbelievable and believing such things as agree with science and history. I believe public prayer is directly against the commandment of Jesus and that public blessings are a humbug; but I believe it our duty to spread the light of knowledge, of science, reason, and truth, in all places where darkness and superstition abound. I believe any man should not be allowed to preach, unless he is competent to teach, and that the Bible ought not to be brought into the school-house only on the Lord's day, or such days as are set apart for worship. Then the school-house should be the meeting-house, and when such services were over should again return to accommodating the little ones as school-house, and that the preacher should hav no salary, but the teacher should be properly paid.

I don't believe any set of people hav a right to say how or when another person or sect shall worship, for God judges the one as well as the other while doing our duty here, and hereafter. For my part, I can't say what will become of us, but we will certainly evolute. I believe there is some way that knowledge can be made manifest by spirit to us in the flesh. I will cite one among the many I might speak of. In the battle of the 28th of July before Atlanta it seemed to me that something told me to move or I would be killed. I was lying on my face beside Nelson St. John, of Co. G, 8th Iowa Infantry, when this feeling came on me and I said, "St. John, move over that way a little." He said, "What for?" I said, "Move or I'll get on your back." He laughed and said, "Get on." I raised myself upon his back, when that very instant a shot raked the full length of where I had lain. I dropped down in my place, when St. John laughed again and said, "Who in hell told you that shot was coming?" I told him I felt it in my bones. Many similar occurrences hav taught me to believe in some kind of spirit power. I hav been warned from the mobs or Kuklux of this state years ago by the same power.

And now, Mr. Editor, without worrying you, I wish to ask, What is your opinion of this spirit power? I never attended a Spiritual meeting in my life. I always thought the greater portion of them were humbugs. I hav been commissioned by different churches to preach. I never took a cent for such services. My last commission is from the St. John's Baptist church of Jacksonville, Fla. I hav taught school, mostly colored, for the last ten years, but being crippled in the late struggle at the battle of Kenesow, and thus far never having succeeded in getting a pension, I find it very hard scrabbling to liv, and am not able to buy such books as I would wish to study. Therefore I hav thought I would write this letter to you, meaning no offense and seeking no notoriety. Yours truly, REV. S. B. HURLBUT.

MILWAUKEE, OR., Jan. 26, 286.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Dec. 5th, is a curious communication from Mr. Hiram Van Pelt, which may remind us that there are superstitions in the domain of science as well as religion. He says: "I hav seen three living creatures called horse-hair snakes, . . . and one of them I caught, and with my thumb and finger stripped the flesh off the hair, and sure enough there was the real horse-hair, and a good strong one too." He seems to realize that he did a cruel thing, but if he had only thought to put the hair back in the water it would hav been all right. This accretion around a horse-hair, of animals without any fathers or mothers, may be a valuable discovery if they prove edible. One would only hav to put a horse's tail to soak over night to strip off meat enough for a whole family, and then he could soak it again. This reminds one of the Irishman who on eating his first ear of green corn, handed the cob back to the waiter and politely requested him to put some more peas on his stick. But this is not the most wonderful of Mr. Van Van Pelt's discoveries. A fellow who came to a hotel where Mr. Van Pelt was stopping seems to hav been shedding his hair rather freely. From fifty to a hundred of them were left in a wash-dish containing water, and in about six hours in the dark, these hairs were developed into living animals, "clothed with flesh, nerves, joints, and life."

It is interesting to note what sort of statements honest, intelligent people will make in regard to what ought to be plain matter of fact. Mr. Hipshier, a preacher of the sect known as "Soul Sleepers," and who, three years ago, was a county commissioner of Furnas county, Neb., told me that he had seen Venus pass between us and the moon, and that he could plainly distinguish it across the moon's disk. Mr. B. (a captain in a Wisconsin regiment during the war, and now a commissioner in a county in Washington Ter.) assured me that he had developed horse-hairs into life many times. He said it took several days, and that they would come to life quicker in milk than in water. Several others who were present made similar statements. Mr. B. also knows that night-hawks are whip-poor-wills. He and Mrs. B. hav frequently seen them light down and sing right before their eyes. It availed nothing to urge that the two birds were not only of different species, but of different genera—that the night-hawk has long wings and the whip-poor-will short ones, and that they differ in their habits. When I asked why night-hawks do not sing on this coast, where they are so numerous, he replied that they did occasionally—that a man over on Lewis river had heard them several times.

These animals are technically called gardiaceidæ. In the larvæ state they inhabit crickets, grasshoppers, etc. Tenny says: "They are often called hair-worms, and persons ignorant of their history suppose them to be horse-hairs transformed into worms."

All advance in science has been made on the assumption that the operations of nature are uniform. Diligent research with microscopes and with the most delicate chemical apparatus has discovered no deviation from this uniformity. Miles in depth of stratified rocks, containing a record of millions of ages, with the remains of countless species of plants and animals, furnishes evidence of this uniformity. The closest scrutiny with microscopes, magnifying a thousand diameters, has not led to the discovery of a plant which was not developed from a previous plant, or germ, or seed; or an animal which did not come from a similar animal, or from an egg. Every part and organ of an animal contains the history of a series of wonderful transmutations produced by the accumulation of minute changes through long periods of time. Every instinct and mental trait of an animal is the effect of environment or the result of experience on itself or ancestry. The eyes of animals are produced by light acting upon certain nerves, and hav been gradually perfected from a rudimentary condition through geologic ages.

Now those hairs in that wash-dish must hav had a very limited experience, and their inheritance was nothing. Of course if they had been acquainted with Mr. Van Pelt, and knew what a cruel man he was, and how he had served their unfortunate kin of the horse's tail, their fears would hav been explicable.

I question no man's word. If some good and truthful man should tell me that he had thrown a sailor's rope into the water and the next morning found it turned into a python (a big knot in the end of the rope forming the head), and that he had stripped off the flesh and returned the rope to the sailor, I should neither question the integrity of the witness, nor experience any belief of his story. But that story would seem just as true and conformable to the laws of animal growth as the story of the horse hair.

Not only are the organs of animals slowly perfected by use, and each added improvement inherited, but organs and members also deteriorate by disuse. The fish of the Mammoth and other caves hav only rudimentary eyes which hav been skinned over and are useless. The pythons and boas hav rudimentary limbs under their skins, and man has rudimentary muscles which are useless to him, but which he inherits from ancestors who used to wag their ears.

All these effects, which paleontological history shows required the influence of the sun for countless ages to accomplish, our friend declares were produced in six hours, in a wash-dish, and in the dark.

That is a good subject to practice on to develop faith. It is well attested by good witnesses who could hav had no motiv to misrepresent, and who are suffering martyrdom, to a limited extent, in attestation of the truth of their story. Now if any one imbued with the principles of science can succeed in believing it, I do not see why he cannot successfully wrestle with transubstantiation, the miraculous conception, the resurrection, and thus save his immortal soul.

D. PRIESTLEY.

DENVER, IA., Jan. 6, 286.

MR. EDITOR: In number after number of our paper I look in vain in "Letters from Friends" for letters from the Hawkeye state. Are the friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER in Iowa all dead? Perhaps the hardest blow the Liberals of the West hav received came from their friends. But they will liv through it. If they don't write, they do "a heap" of thinking, and some day you'll hear from them. Iowa doubtless contains as many Liberals, in proportion to her population, as any other state, but her auxiliary Leagues were first non-con., and now non est. Too much "I" and "u" and Comstock "taffy."

Mr. Editor, did a farmer ever tell you how much hay Noah and his boys put into the ark for his grass-eating animals to feed upon during his 400 days' voyage? They would require at least 400 tons, and, unless the hay was pressed, this would fill 120,000 cubic feet. The haying season was a long one. That "black boy," Ham, ran the Champion Mower with a span of long-eared donkeys; Shem and Japhet did the hauling with Buck and Bright; while the old man used Jack before the sulky rake. Two of the young women helped to mow away the hay in the ark, while the other helped her mother-in-law do the house-work.

I hardly dare tell you who did all the feeding in the ark, or who cleaned out all the stalls therein and carried the filth up three pairs of stairs, and threw it out of the small window. I don't know how much kerosene oil they used, but I do know I wouldn't like to be fooling around all the animals in total darkness, for the ark was pitched inside and outside, excluding every ray of light except from a small window at the top. Nor can I tell you how much the eyes of any of the inmates of the ark were worth after being excluded from the light for four hundred days and nights. But as all vegetation was killed by the long-standing salt water, the greatest fun was when Noah drove all the blind creatures out of the ark, with nothing to eat except one another. No wonder Noah got on a bust. "Sacredly" yours, M. FARRINGTON.

FREEMAN, Mo., Feb. 286.

MR. EDITOR: Though still hybernated, as the only means of self-protection against the Kansas blizzards that persist in playing jayhawker, by raiding over into Missouri, still my Faber is sufficiently animated in the Florida climate produced by the Missouri hickory (not administered as in the whilom days of boyhood, but burnt in a stove instead) to again materialize in a friendly letter.

And I hav news, too, that is of interest to myself if to no one else. You see I had my Agnostic lecture—"Views from the Outside"—all ready to deliver, and was invited to do it at the Paine anniversary celebration at Liberal, Mo., when, lo and behold! I found that man sometimes proposes while the doctor disposes, for an M.D. came to our ranch on Sunday, January 24th, bringing a little ten-pound male Infidel in his saddle-pockets, and completely breaking into my arrangements, or desires rather, concerning Liberal and the 29th ultimo. So I had to write Brother Thayer for a postponement on my part, but I guess the celebration was a success all the same. I dislike to be imprisoned when so many others are in the field, still "Barkis is willin'," considering the cause. In other words, I am proud of my boy (my first-born), and will hav to name him Thomas Paine to get even with him for cheating me out of the Paine participation at Liberal.

A short time ago I had a letter from W. F. Jamieson, written from Joplin, Mo., concurring with me in some views embodied in a letter to him based on a communication of his in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 9th, entitled "Liberal Leaves."

I think friend Jamieson sounded a keynote in that article, and I further proposed the form of the leaflet should be according to his primary suggestion, that is, of two leaves, or four pages, those distributed on the first visit of a lecturer to be devoted wholly to destructiv work, having on one page some of the barbarous absurdities of scripture correctly quoted, and on the opposit page the argument in simple language, devoted to childish comprehension, such as the writers named by Brother Jamieson know so well how to get up—the Wixons, Slenkers, Gardeners, and others. Of course, there are many, very many things in the Bible that we can not thus print, because of the danger of shocking our orthodox authorities into locking us up like Bennett. However, there are still plenty of passages free from obscenity that could be used to disgust any intelligent school-boy or girl with the "false claims" of a book they hav been taught to hold sacred.

These are passages the wily priests never allow the tender lambs they herd into the Sunday-school to see. Their lesson-papers, cards, tickets, and so on, only contain the nicest and least objectionable extracts, and the lambs are never referred to such passages as Kings, xxxvi, 12; 2 Kings, xviii, 27; nor are they cited to David's list ot unnamable crimes, from robbery to murder and adultery. The spiders in sable are too sagacious for that. But they first entice them into Sunday-school with pretty music, books, pictures, clothes, and a greater annual bribe of picnics in summer and Christmas-trees in winter. It is only when thoroughly indoctrinated from youth to manhood that they can be crammed with the whole book as of "divine" origin.

Now, let us fight it out on the line laid down by the opposition, and carry out Jamieson's suggestions. Of course, it will produce a howl of protest, and may in some instances provoke violence. But they must take their own medicin, these fosterers of superstition, for they do not hesitate, nay, it is even their boast, to entice the children of Liberal parents into their Sunday-schools, and stuff them with dogma and nonsense. Let Liberals return the compliment, and fight them with their own weapons.

And suppose it requires martyrdom—I do not mean to the death, for they dare not kill us—suppose it means opposition, social ostracism, and all manner of proscription they can exercise under the law, is any afraid? Does dread of this social repudiation, and an occasional treat to free eggs and rotten cabbage, deter anyone from fearlessly doing his duty? If so, such a weakling had best join a church and be altogether "respectable."

But the time is close at hand when even the dangers hinted above are not to be feared. By acting on Jamieson's plan, lecturers will be fast killing the prejudice that endangers, and paving the way for their own support in this worthiest cause, independent of aid from the Union.

This letter is too long, but I can not close it without reference to the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL just received. It is certainly "a daisy," and contains more valuable matter to the square inch than any similar publication extant. I hav not had time to read it all, but hav looked through it, and wish it were in the library of every Liberal in the land. Looking over the "subjects of illustration" and portraits, so many of whom are Infidels, gave me an agreeable consciousness of being in good company. Surely no one can blush to be found in the same category with such names as Huxley, Hume, Darwin, Rousseau, Castelar, and the twenty-five other illustrious names you present that are famous as poets, historians, scientists, or reformers.

And so I close, wishing you a prosperous year for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that the cause of mental liberty embodied in the Nine Demands may take giant strides till the end is reached. T. M. HORNE.

PACIFIC, Mo., Dec. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The Masonic lodge has expelled two of its members for their avowal of a non-belief in a God. Now the thought arises in my mind, Has Freethought its greatest enemy in the church itself or in these large and influential and powerful organized bodies who are bound by an oath to believe in a God (at least, such is the condition for membership)? Members of the church itself hav no such extra binding—are freer in that respect. I think, since I hav my thought called to it, that such is the case. Almost every man you meet belongs to one lodge or another; in fact, lodges and members are more than the church itself. Here in this small place, of at most 1,500 inhabitants, we hav at least three lodges, besides members belonging to outside lodges. We hav also five churches, Roman, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, and colored.

I think I see the reason now why there is such hesitation in accepting Freethought papers. I hav given my paper to men who I know don't believe much in church doctrin; don't go to church themselvs—some of them not even their wives or children; but yet dare not say aught against them or take and subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER or any of the Freethought papers. Reason in things—or reason at all—is, after all, no greater in the average lodge man than in the average church man.

No matter about the apparent opposition by the church; the lodges are its greatest bulwark, its greatest savior.

Yours for being wide awake, A. H. K.

WEST UNION, O., Feb. 3, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In a late issue of your paper I saw a very formal, logical reason for the preacher's bad boy. It was good. But I like my reason better, viz.: The preachers always turn their children over to God's care, and he is a poor hand to raise children. D. P. W. EYLER.

LAKE CITY, IOWA, Jan. 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks for your beautiful ANNUAL. But as thanks will not make the mare go, I send money for the one received and three more I want for friends. I do not think anyone can afford to do without the ANNUAL for ten times its price. I should like a "Balaam" picture or two and also a "Mother Superior," as I gave mine to a preacher who did not hav sand enough to attack Remsburg when here, but waited till he was hundreds of miles away and then took refuge in the coward's castle, the pulpit, and threw stones at his betters, not even telling a single truth in all his discourse. We gave him an invitation to discuss the inspiration of the Bible with one of our leading Liberals, but he thought best to decline. I thought him wise for once in his life. But is not such conduct rather small?

Well, we still think THE TRUTH SEEKER a grand paper, but hope the day will never come when such noble old men as T. Winter will be expelled from its columns. He has forgotten more than many of the persons abusing him will ever know. They cannot answer his arguments. They hav never yet been touched. Hence the abuse. J. L. TOMPKINS.

GRAND ISLAND, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: As the Catholic church is pushing her Freedom of Worship bill, would it not be a good idea to meet her on her own grounds, and use the same instruments she uses? I hav been thinking, if we rely on beating her back with petitions, she will get her work in before we get started.

She virtually boycotts all the politicians she can't use; why should we not boycott all those she does use? Why not keep a black-list of all those members of the legislature that prostitute themselvs to her for political advantage, and let them know we intend to lop off their heads politically if they presume to introduce measures of that nature into the legislature, or vote for such measures when introduced? This, I believe, would dampen their audacity more than anything else we could do under the present circumstances. The convict forfeits every claim to liberty when he renders his incarceration necessary for the public safety. If the Catholic church can't restrain her adherents from committing acts of violence upon other people, why should she be allowed to enter our penitentiaries to mock justice by stuffing criminals with superstition she could not keep under moral restraint when at large. If she furnishes a larger percentage of the criminals confined in our reformatory institutions than other people, according to numbers (and she certainly does), why should she be allowed to further tamper with them? The fact that nine-tenths of the criminals come out of these places worse than they went in shows the futility of the presence of Christian priests and ministers in these institutions. Therefore, all clergymen, whether Catholic or Protestant, should be interdicted by law from meddling where they only demoralize. Why should a priest be allowed to break the force of the law by strutting upon the gallows with a murderer to trifle with him, by pretending to absolve him from his sins, and giving him a free pass into the New Jerusalem?

Can anything be more presumptuous or more demoralizing? A man is found guilty of wilfully premeditated murder, and a judge condemns him to die. Then a Christian priest steps in and asks God to forgiv a crime that chills the finest feelings in man, and for which any earthly judge will shrink from granting a pardon. Now, if this God exists, does not he know enough to attend to his own business as a great judge in matters of absolution without taking lessons of a priest? Does this God authorize priests to peddle indulgences and grant absolution to the worst class of criminals that blacken this planet? Yours for justice, WALTER SIMMONDS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Song of the Captiv Bird.

Come list to the song of the captiv,
Come listen with sorrow-bowed head;
Oh, list to the notes so pathetic,
More sad than the wail o'er the dead.
It pours out in eloquent music
Each sorrowful, heart-breaking word—
More sad than the grief of Aurora,
The song of the poor captiv bird.

Come list to it soon in the morning,
Its voice is so shrill and so clear;
And every rich droplet of sorrow
In melody falls on the ear;
"My heartfelt desire is freedom,
That liberty nature doth giv,
Still, still, 'tis bereft of all pleasure,
And parted from freedom I liv.

"At morn when the bright ray of Phœbus
Is kissing the dewdrop so fair,
I long to be out among flowers,
I long to soar high in the air.
You say I sing happy and cheerful,
But dive to my heart's bleeding core,
You find that I sing of my sadness—
My song is my sorrow's outpour.

"Hope comes not; I know that this prison
Will still be my terrible doom;
My heart is in sorrow's dark mansion,
O'erhung with the thickest of gloom;
You know you hav stolen my freedom,
You know I am doomed to remain
Right here, without hope, without pleasure,
Where nothing befalls me but pain.

"You know that through bars of my prison,
When music and harmony swell,
I look and can see the gay songsters
Where pleasure and liberty dwell.
You know that I long to be with them,
To drink of the morning's fresh breeze,
And hop among leaflets and branches—
You know that my home is the trees.

"You know that my wings are enfeebled,
So uselessly folded so long;
And yet you, most cheerfully happy,
Can praise my most sorrowful song.
Yes, daily my one hope is blasted,
That hope for my song to impart
My sorrow; no, you will not hear me.
You know not the words of my heart.

"Oh, tell me why am I imprisoned,
What terrible crime hav I done
That all my whole life should be wasted
In prison alone, all alone?
Oh, tell me would you like such pleasure,
Oh, would you be happy and gay,
Oh, could you sing blithely and cheerful
In solitude day after day?"

DARLINA BELL.

Little Lena.

Little Lena Maxwell, whose father was dead, and whose mother, for the lack of employment better adapted to one of her strength and capacities, supported herself and Lena by washing for other people, stood in the center of a group of girls just outside the schoolroom door.

"Rag-bag! rag-shag!" sang first one and then another, and afterward all together in that monotonous, aggravating tone children sometimes assume.

Mrs. Maxwell could not afford to dress her little girl as richly as those of her more wealthy neighbors.

She wore to-day a faded print dress, perfectly clean, and neatly mended in several places.

"I am not ragged," said Lena.

"Oh, no," exclaimed Vida Way, pointing to the patches; "patch! patch!"

"Oh, yes, yes!" screamed all; "patch! patch! patch!"

At that moment the school-bell rang and the children hastened to the school-room, but Lena was too grieved to attend the afternoon session and started toward her home, while those most distant from the door threw after her several stones, calling, "Patch! patch!"

One of the stones hit her arm, and another the back of her head, and she went sobbing to her weary, toiling mother.

"I think you ought to be ashamed of yourselvs," said Lilly Preston, a sweet, blue-eyed, fair-haired little girl, who had not joined in the cruel sport. "One of those stones hit her head—perhaps it will kill her."

They paled a little at this, but there was time to say no more ere they entered the school-room.

The next morning Lena was still absent from school. Inquiry was made for her by the teacher, but no one seemed to know, and Lilly volunteered to call at Mrs. Maxwell's at noon, as her house was near by, and inquire the cause of Lena's non-attendance.

"I saw Dr. Munson's team outside the gate as I came by this morning," said Benny Jones.

The children looked a little anxious and frightened as they remembered the stones they had caused to hit her the day before. At noon Lilly reported Lena to be very ill with brain fever.

The next morning the teacher called the school to order and said: "Before you take your books I will tell you about Lena. She is very ill—so ill that her life is despaired of. She is delirious, and screams at times, as she lies in her bed moving her head restlessly from side to side and tossing her arms about, 'O mamma! the little girls are throwing stones at me. I am not ragged—I am not rag-shag—don't throw any more—oh, it hit me! it hit me! They call me Patch—oh, the rocks! the rocks!—don't let them hit me again!' How must the little girls who threw those stones and called her names feel?

"They surely cannot feel happy at being the cause of so much suffering and misery for a poor little girl and her mother, and all because the little girl was not dressed as finely as themselvs. Then how will they feel if she dies?"

Again the children paled, and some of them cried.

"You cannot undo the wrong, but you well know that Mrs. Maxwell's poor health has prevented her from earning a sufficient amount of money to pay rent, buy food and clothes, and this accounts for Lena's shabby appearance at school.

"Now, to show your sorrow for what you hav done, I think it your duty—you who hav pelted her with the stones—to go to your parents and tell them the whole truth, and ask them to pay the doctor's fees and provide a good nurse to assist Mrs. Maxwell in caring for Lena. I will also suggest that Mrs. Maxwell be supplied with plenty of groceries, as she can earn nothing while her child is so ill."

The repentant children did as they were counseled by their teacher, and the parents, grieved at the wrong done by their children, at once consented to the request.

When Lena was convalescent—for she did not die—the children went into her room and asked to be forgiven, which Lena was very willing and glad to do, and gave them all a loving kiss.

Lilly Preston lingered a few moments after the others were gone. Lena put her thin arms around her neck, saying:

"I cannot help loving you a little the best, for you never called me names, or threw rocks at me, but always spoke to me so kindly, and gave me such sweet smiles."

Little children, be kind to your playmates. Injure them not with tongue or hand, and if one of them is shabbily dressed, or scarred, or deformed in any manner, take extra pains to be kind to them, and help them to forget it.

SADIE A. MAGOON.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PUZZLE.

A and B bought a melon for eight cents; A paid five cents, and B three cents. They sold half of the melon for eight cents, and the remaining half they ate equally. How much did each receive?

WM. SCOTT.

2.—PALINDROMIC SENTENCE.

A wild ox with a lengthy mane
Is found on central Europe's plain.
'Tis Poland's bison, and some claim,
From it our common bovins came;
But Cuvier thinks, however linked,
Their species must be quite distinct.
Though head and neck, you see, be naught,
Yet in this ox-bow they are caught;
Its body, as this riddle goes,
Is only an old Latin's nose.
Upon this beast our Susan find,
But sitting with her face behind.
Mazeppa-like must Susan ride.
And this wild ox must be her guide:
So, Susan dear, where e'er you roam.
I'll write for you this Palindrome—
Balaam once tried its worth at least:
"Susan forever obey—This Beast."

Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

3.—INVOLVED CHARADE.

A word of four sylables is seen,
By common folks not used, I ween.

The first is known of many kinds;
Though never seen, one often finds
That, like a ladies fancy fixin's,
It costs him like the very Dickens.

The second is a certain gait,
Not patent, but improved of late.

The third and fourth, oh my! I must not tell,
Or you would guess it sure as—well,
We'll say, "As sure as fate."
But pshaw! I've told you now,
My caution comes too late.
The man that sometime had the whole
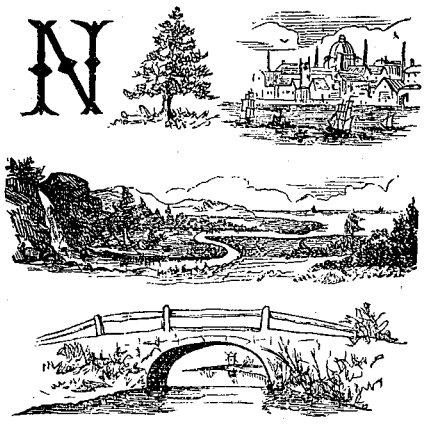
Performed on him so queer,
Has met my gaze, since childhood's days;
I see him every year.

He is a second Joseph, too,
For calmly he does stand,
Although a beauteous maiden sits
And beckons with her hand.



In his presence love must reign,
For plainly can be seen
The lion and the playful lamb,
With children in between.

When I was young I used to think
He surely would get shot,
But still the darts of envy point
Right to the same old spot.

Midst all his foes and troubles great
He seems to hav no wish,
Unless it is to calmly point
And say, "Just see my fish."

Grand Rapids, Mich. ESPRIT FORT.

4.—REBUS.

Three towns in Massachusetts.

5.—REBUS.

Four different kinds of noises.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, FEB. 6, 1886.

1.—Forty-two men, by deleting the central letter, is changed to forty women. 2.—72. 3.—Tumbler—ice-cream, milk, water, wine, honey, beer, gruel, tea, jelly, vinegar.

SOLVERS.—Nettie Olds, I. A. Pool, W. R. King, V. K. Hausen.

[B. W. Brockway, Jr., S. Allen, Mich.—We hav not space to giv forms of solution. Write to the author at Escanaba, Mich.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

HAVANA, CUBA, Jan., 1886.

BELOVED MISS WIXON: Having, in company with my papa, set out upon a five years' tour around the world, I hav concluded to write you for the Corner from various points of interest at which we may sojourn.

At some places we expect to remain some months, and expect to arrive at the antipodes some two years hence. In 1884 we traveled some time in Europe, but merely on business. This time it will be on both business and truth seeking.

This Island of Cuba is blessed with all the natural advantages that could be desired, but it is governed by a people so bigoted and barbarous that, while it is the most prolific and genial spot on earth, there is much misery and destitution among the people. I went the other day to see a bull-fight. In the arena, and to fight with the bull, was one of the noblest of harmless animals—a horse. The bull gored the horse, tearing open the abdomen, and the intestins fell out upon the ground, and the noble steed, with his ears laid back, and in terrible agony, ran about treading upon his own intestins, while the barbarous dignitaries of the government sat clapping their hands and applauding the shocking spectacle. Is not that barbarian? Be it remembered that the officers of our government at Washington are fully aware of these European barbarities being enacted in America, and not even a protest!

This, too, is a country that has been poisoned with human slavery. The last fang of the venomous reptil is now receding from the body politic. Next year the very few persons that are still in a kind of remunerated slavery here will be free. That is to say, as free as one can expect to be under a military despotism. In 1868, when the Cubans rebelled against Spanish despotism, they proclaimed freedom to all the slaves. How different was the case with the rebels at the South in the United States in 1861! What a great difference between those two Declarations of Independence! One for the abolition of slavery, the other for its perpetuity. Truly "there is just as much difference in some folks as there is in anybody." I could tell you much of interest about this country, but am aware that your limited space in the Corner will not permit. I would like the full and plainly-written address, in an envelope bearing a 5 cent stamp and inclosing a 5 cent stamp, for return postage, of all persons who would like to hear and receive relics from me from various points on our tour around the world. Till the 15th of next March my address will be Ejido No. 2, Havana, Cuba.

Hoping this may interest our friends who may like to hear from boys, and that it may find you in health, comfort, and prosperity, I am, For Miss Wixon and the Corner,

GEO. SAM. NEWTON.

[We shall all be delighted with the sketches of travel that our young Cuban friend proposes to giv us on his five years' trip around the world, and we thank him for his kindness and courtesy toward the Corner. We wish him and his papa a pleasant and instructiv journey and safe return home. The story of the bull-fight is awful to think of. We trust our readers will always be merciful and humane to our dumb friends, the animals, who cannot speak and defend themselvs against the brutality of man.—ED. C. C.]

HARRISBURG, PA., Jan. 27, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My husband and I both feel as if we had known you personally, although we hav never seen you. We hav your picture in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL of 1885, and my son who is only five and a half years calls it "his lady," and when we read the Children's Corner of that estimable paper, we fell that we can almost hear your voice. Imagination, you will say, but what would we be if it were not for imagination? It makes beautiful the most prosaic, and clothes in living beauty the most inanimate. Of course were it not for this great gift of ours, church and priest could not hold sway. But they work in the imagination of the ignorant; no matter how well educated the people who "believe" may be, their imagination is held in check and allowed to run in one channel only, that of religion. We hav cause every day to be thankful for being Liberals and Infidels. I am afraid I am tiring you with a subject you hear over and over again, but believe me that every one heard from is one more added to the list of those seeking the truth, I take the liberty of sending an original poem, and hope you will find it worthy of acceptance. Yours in the cause of justice, truth, and right,

MRS. FLORA W. THOMAS.

WHEATLAND, OR., Jan. 23, 1886.

DEAR MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: I am one of the readers of the Children's Corner, and seeing no letter from Oregon, I thought I would write you a few lines. As it has not been long since old Santa Claus was around, I will tell you what he brought me: Majolica sugar-bowl, pair of mittens, collar, two handkerchiefs, a dollar, and fascinator. I believe that is all. I hope he has visited all the homes of all other children. We liv near the bank of the Willamette river—the boats come past nearly every day. The river gets so low in summer that the boats cannot come up. There is a large amount of wheat shipped from here in the autumn, although it is not a very large place. As I cannot think of any more interesting news to write I will close, wishing you good success with the Corner. Yours truly,

MAUDIE WILLIAMSON.

NEW ROSS, IND., Jan. 23, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I hav seen so many little girls writing to you I thought I would try. I will do my best. I am ten years old. I hav a little brother seven years old. I go to school every day, only when I am sick. It is very cold now. I did not go to school today, for I hav been sick. My teacher's name is Eva Jackson. She is a good teacher, and she is as strict as she can be. My little brother's teacher's name is Fanny White. She is good. I went to her for part of the winter, but I got too far along with my lessons, and I had to go in the other room. I study arithmetic, reading, spelling, geography, and grammar. I had a little pet kitten but it ran off. Papa got me the "Story Hour" for a Christmas gift, and he kept it over to his brother's till Christmas. My uncle put a pair of vases on the tree for me, and mamma put a scrap-book on. I hav it nearly full of pictures. I hav Aunt Elmina's picture, and I pasted it in my scrap-book. Well, I guess I must close for this time.

Yours truly, NELLIE BRUSH.

CHATHAM, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav four Holstein calves. I hav them all named, and help take care of them when it is fit for me to go out. I hav good times riding down hill with sister Lillie. I do not go to school, but study at home, and am nearly through the second reader. I am eight years old.

Yours truly, ROBBIE C. BROWNING.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Weland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 4-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

POCKET ATLAS
Of the
WORLD.

Containing
COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE
Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-paged colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.

Price by mail, 30 cents,
10t1 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl. as shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL
—AND—
FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC
1886.
(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820-1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,	Saladin,	Edward Gibbon,	Goethe,
Girard College, Philadelphia,	Annie Besant,	Max Muller,	Robert Burns,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),	Mary Wollstonecraft,	Thos. Huxley,	Richard Carlile,
	G. W. Foote,	Voltaire,	Herbert Spencer,
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),	Austin Holyoake,	Chas. Darwin,	Castelar,
	J. S. Mill,	Rousseau,	Bradlaugh,
The Tent,	George Eliot,	Humboldt,	Chas. A. Watts,
Iron Virgin,	Geo. Standring,	Byron,	J. A. Froude,
Paine Hall,	Ernst Haeckel,	Shelley,	John Tyndall.
Moncure D. Conway,	Auguste Comte,	David Hume,

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,

Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

ADAM AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.' "—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christ an Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress: Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.
A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who have helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WOMAN.
In the Past, Present, and Future.
BY A. BEBEL.

Translated from the German by Dr. Adams Walter. 272 pages; cloth, 75 cents; paper, 30 cents.

"Capital," a criticism on Political Economy. By Carl Marx. First English translation. Published in 27 parts, 10 cents per part. Subscription, $2.50.

"Anti-Syllabus." By Lily Curry. Price, 3 cents.

LABOR NEWS AND PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
705 Broadway, New York.
(Full list of Labor Publications mailed free.)
3tf

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

Robert the Devil on Jonah and the Whale.

I'm the "devil" in the printing-shop of Gabriel's Horn, a paper devoted to Christianity and hell-fire and brimstone, without which Christianity would go down to five cents on a dollar—silver dollars at that—with no takers, and soon be run out of the market.

The editor of Gabe's Horn is a downy cove who knows which side his bread is buttered on, and how to lay the butter on thick and even. He can roll his eyes and tongue in reverential guise for all they're worth, when any of the hell-fire jerkers come in, and work off a whole chapter of the Holy Munchausen and not stop to spit; but when a fellow comes in that doesn't belong to the holy groaners and duns him for a hat or a gallon of old rye—the forked-tongued galoot nips it on the sly—he can rear up and cuss like a cowboy, and do it offhand and gallus like, without coughing or blushing. And then to see him settle down to business and brimstone, when he has rattled the dun and sent him off as he came, without the scads, but plenty of promises, is too sweet for anything. Oh, he's a daisy, he is, and almost persuadeth me to be a Christian, because hypocrisy is the best policy, and no one can play it like a Christian.

I was in his sanctum the other day for copy, when he asked me what I thought of the Jonas and whale story—or is it Jonah?—where the whale swallows Jonah and spews him out on dry land three days later, being sick at his stomach, which fish story is told in the Holy Munchausen.

I told him it was a yarn, and I didn't go a cent on it. Then he wanted to know what a yarn was, and I told him it was a fake that nobody took stock in, and then had to explain what fake was, and taking stock—the duffer don't know anything outside the Holy Munchausen, but knows that from Generals to Erysipelas, including Mary Magdalen.

Then he said he wanted me to write out my convictions about the fish story, and he would print it, if it wasn't too bad, as coming from an unregenerate boy. And I wrote it up, but he wouldn't hav it, saying it was too irreverent for Gabe's Horn, so I send it to you. Here it is, and I call it

THE GREAT FISH STORY.

Concerning Jonah swallowing the whale—I mean the whale swallowing Jonah, or Jonas—what I want to know is, how it could come to pass, if the whale's interior department wasn't fitted up on the parlor-car plan, or, anyhow, like a fair to middling hotel, Jonah could stay there three days and three nights, if he was in his sober senses? Would any man nowadays do it that ever travels? I bet you not. If the whale was so arranged, it must hav been for Jonah's special benefit, because there's no account of any other traveler ever stopping at that sea-side hotel. But it doesn't appear that Jonas, or Jonah, was any great shakes at all—a big office-holder or anything of that kind—and it isn't likely that the whale was fitted up especially for him. Small-fry men ain't treated that way nowadays, anyway, but the ones that hold fat offices, no matter if they get 'em by a fluke, as some do.

Well, if the whale wasn't fitted up for boarders, he must hav been like any other whale of the period, mustn't he? And how in thunder could Jonas liv three days and three nights in a tank of lamp-oil, I'd like to know? Captain Boyton wouldn't want to paddle around in lamp-oil for three days and nights; he couldn't stand the smell, I'll bet. It's awful stuff to smell, and worse to taste, I guess; and no one could swim round in it three days without swallowing lots of it; and if he didn't hav a stomach like a brass rhinoceros, wouldn't he be sick, though? Besides, whales hav a sort of shever de friz of whalebone raveled into threads, and a whole forest of 'em, in front of their throats, and a feller could go through the Niagara whirlpool easier than he could go through that mass of whalebone strings. Why, he'd get all tangled up in them and strangled to death long before he got into the whale's vestibule, not to mention the reception-room and front parlor.

But Jonah was there. I've seen a sketch of him by our artist on the spot, just as he was entering the front door of the Hotel de Whale on being evicted by the yachting party. So the whale must hav been arranged interiorly for the accommodation of guests, although there's no record of any other ever having been so arranged, or of any other transient guest being taken in by the whale that opened its doors to Jonah. And wasn't it mighty lucky that this particular whale—one among millions—should happen to be in that particular spot, at the particular moment when Jonah was launched on a voyage of submarine discovery, from which he was never expected ever to return, wasn't it mighty lucky for Jonah? Just think how vast the sea is, and how small in comparison a whale! Why, a drop in a bucket is a big thing compared to a whale in the sea. To approximate in bulk, it should be a drop in a lager beer vat, or the whale should be put in a four-acre fish-pond. So, for a particular whale of forty millions, more or less, and especially arranged for the reception of guests, to be on hand to receive Jonah just as he had walked the plank, was one of the luckiest things on record, it seems to me. Suppose the whale had been waylaid by a swordfish and thrasher, and been brutally assaulted and battered. In that case he wouldn't hav arrived on time, and what then would hav been the fate of Jonah? Ask of the sharks that swim around, devouring what they may. It's better to be born lucky than rich, they say, and Jonah was lucky as they make 'em. That's all I know about Jonah, and I don't believe it.

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

What Other Papers Say.

The pictures in TRUTH SEEKER tell more than words can for the space used.—New Thought.

The TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1886 is a gem. It contains a chronological reference of great value to every Freethinker. The contributed and compiled articles are of great interest. There are numerous illustrations and portraits. The ANNUAL should hav a large circulation. It is a useful contribution, and can not be too highly commended.—Light for Thinkers.

The TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC is a book of one hundred pages, with many illustrations, there being thirty portraits of distinguished scientists and philosophers, a calendar for 1886, more than thirty articles on Freethought subjects, with valuable religious and secular statisties, all for only twenty-five cents. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place.—Rhode Island Pendulum.

Among the publications that hav reached this office the past week is the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND ALMANAC for 1886, a handsome and instructiv pamphlet of over one hundred pages, giving valuable Freethought and church statistics, illustrations of Paine Memorial Hall, Boston; Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas; the Lick Observatory, California; Girard College, Philadelphia, and excellent portraits of prominent Liberalists, scientists, and authors, both ladies and gentlemen, to the number of thirty. The publication should hav a wide circulation, and, as it costs only 25 cents, it will probably find its way into most Liberal households. It can be ordered of the Truth Seeker Publishing House, 33 Clinton Place, New York.—Sunday Gazetteer, Denison, Texas.

A curious book, entitled, "Rational Communism: The Present and the Future Republic of North America," has just been published in New York. The author, though he calls himself "A Capitalist," advocates revolutionary ideas with regard to capital and most other things. He givs a long account of "a vision" which pictured a transformed America—a veritable "new heaven and new earth." The writer, however, is by no means a mere visionary. He has a keen eye for practical evils and for practical ways of remedying them, and givs many valuable suggestions for making the crooked things straight. We do not quite believe in his vision, but no harm can come of looking for a time when dirt, and squalor, and poverty, and degradation, and disease shall be no more.—London Truth Seeker.

The TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC has come to hand, and really it is a magnificent thing. It is a feast to the eyes, and brings up thoughts magnificent to look upon the faces of thirty names familiar to men of thought, and science, and philosophy: Darwin, Max Müller, Huxley, Voltaire, Rousseau, Humboldt, Annie Besant, Mary Wollstonecraft, George Eliot, John Stuart Mill, Haeckel, Auguste Comte, Gibbon, Spencer, Bradlaugh, Tyndall, Froude, Byron, Shelley, Hume, Goethe, Burns, Carlile, and others. The price of the book is only 25 cents, when it is worth all that for every portrait, and the reading and statistics and the information render this work invaluable. By the time one has gone through this book he will feel that he has gained in intellectual status very preceptibly.—Nonconformist.

The pages of the New York TRUTH SEEKER are now illustrated. This new feature of emphasizing Freethought may prove valuable, but it will require very careful management. There is great danger, though, that the ridiculous be allowed to usurp the place of the sensible in getting up cartoons. Some of the presentations, so far, are very good, and may accomplish good, especially those of "Liberty in Peril," "The Iron Virgin," and "The Spider and the Fly." "Uncle Sam in Distress" is very striking, but not in good taste. The same may be said of nearly all the small pictures. Ridicule and contempt may serve to gratify the minds of the extremely prejudiced, but rarely accomplish anything in an argument.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has now a position of great influence and respectability, and we think ridiculous caricature is rather beneath its high sphere of action. If we would convince Christian people we must reason with them and not scandalize what they deem sacred and dear. This caution is founded on our high appreciation of our contemporary, and our great desire to enhance the cause of Freethought, aud we hope it will not be construed into a hostil criticism.—Independent Pulpit.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. Ingalls. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price $1.

This is truly a period of great industry, and while all departments go on with a rush, that of book-making is not neglected. Just now the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York, is turning out some of the best publications we know of. We hav one of them before us now, entitled "Social Wealth," by J. K. Ingalls. We hav perused it with great care, and can say conscientiously that it is a work of great merit, and deals with the questions it incorporates in an able, thorough, and logical manner. There are doubtless numerous social wrongs to be righted, great injuries to be corrected; but when with reasoning minds we read the lessons of history, we discover that science, or exact and systematized knowledge, has been the means of progress in every field and in every age, and are assured that through intelligent industry nature has provided for the satisfaction of all rational human wants. Industrial freedom, and that only, can change the condition of the toiling poor, or giv to justly acquired competence its required security and conservation. This book thoroughly and methodically points out the means of reform in this behalf. Reasoning as a mathematician from cause to effect, it demonstrates the wrongs that prevail, working discriminately in behalf of the spirit of strong government, which, in effect if not in name, builds up and invests with power incompatible with republican government a class of nobility little less detrimental to the poor than exists across the waters. And while Mr. Ingalls points out the cause of these modern wrongs, he offers remedies for their correction that show him to be a man well informed on the subject, as well as in sympathy with these rights jeoparded by existing wrongs.

The chapters on the "nature of wages," "taxation," "private property in land," "private and social wealth," are remarkable for the depth of thought in them exhibited, and are worth three times the price of the book. It deals also with the "law of contracts," "money and credit," "partnership and cooperation," in a manner that no man in America has ever done before.

Those wishing to inform themselvs on the great labor question of the day would do well to secure a copy of this book.—Denison, Tex., Sunday Gazetteer.

SABBATH-BREAKING. By John E. Remsburg. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place.

John E. Remsburg never writes or says anything uninteresting. It always pays to read or listen to what he has to say. He is full of facts, and you can in advance indorse his statements. He never speaks except by the card. His book on "Sabbath-Breaking" is one of the most interesting and important pamphlets that he ever wrote—interesting because filled with facts with which the world at large is not acquainted; important because the discussion is on the principal issue that the church is now making with all shades of Liberalism.

Lacking in evidence and argument, the church is now making an effort to force their Sunday institution upon us by the right arm of the civil power. In most cases their efforts are successful, all because of the ignorance of our law-makers and of the people in general, of the facts in the case. Having individually kept the seventh day Sabbath for twelve years, and investigated it for fifteen years, we claim to be well acquainted with nearly all the facts in the case. We know Remsburg is right.—New Thought.

The Southern Progress is a bi-monthly magazine published at Chattanooga, Tenn., by D. P. Robbins. It is devoted to the health and happiness of the South. Naturally, with such objectiv point, it is Liberal in its tendency.

"One Way" is a pamphlet poem by Mrs. A. Hurd, who sends one here with her compliments. It is published at Waterloo, Iowa. The sentiment and style may be gathered from the concluding lines:

"Paul thought that he would rather die
And dwell with Christ. But I
Somewhat divine the highest throne
Is that of love, and can be known
And occupied in any place
Where charity's the crowning grace.
So I confess I'd rather stay
And with my little brothers play
In the New Jerusalem.

THE RISE OF

INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. REMSBURG'S APPOINTMENTS.

J. E. Remsburg left Atchison for the East on the 3d inst. The following is his program so far as arranged:

Albany, Mo.	Thur., Fri., Sat., Sun.,	Feb. 4, 5, 6, 7.
Brookfield, Mo.	Mon., Tu.,	" 8, 9.
Mechanicsburg, Ill.	Wed., Thur., Fri.,	" 10, 11, 12.
Geneseo, Ill.	Sat., Sun.,	" 13, 14.
Earlville, Ill.	Mon., Wed.,	" 15, 17.
Paw Paw, Ill.	Tu.,	" 16.
Battle Creek, Mich.	Thur.,	" 18.
Wayland, "	Fri.,	" 19.
Hastings, "	Sat., Sun.,	" 20, 21.
Holland, N. Y.	Mon., Tu.,	" 22, 23.
Java Village, N.Y.	Wed., Thur., Fri.,	" 24, 25, 26.
Troy, "	Sun.,	" 28.
Warrensburg, "	Mon., Tu., Wed.,	Mar. 1, 2, 3.
Cohoes, "	Thur.,	" 4.
Saco, Me.	Sat.,	" 6.
Portland, Me.	Sun. (10:30 A.M.),	" 7.
Boston, Mass.	Sun. (7:30 P.M.),	" 7.
Providence, R. I.	Mon.,	" 8.
Meriden, Conn.	Tu., Wed., Thur.,	Mar. 9, 10, 11.
New York.	Fri.,	" 12.
Baltimore, Md.	Sun.,	" 14.

In addition to the above, Mr. Remsburg will speak in Greenwich, Mass.; Salamanca, N. Y.; Naples, N. Y.; Kent, O.; Perrysburg, O.; Tontogony, O.; Carey, O.; Bradford, O.: Spiceland, Ind.; Burr Oak., Mich.; Paris, Ill.; Chebanse, Ill.; Cleopatra, Mo.; Maitland, Mo.; Quitman, Mo.; Robinson, Kan.; Morrill, Kan.; Republic City, Kan.; Cawker City, Kan.; Council Grove, Kan.; Brookville, Kan.; Urbana, Kan.; Halstead, Kan.; Newton Kan.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson and Unbeliever Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science

And the Common Computations.

An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE

AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

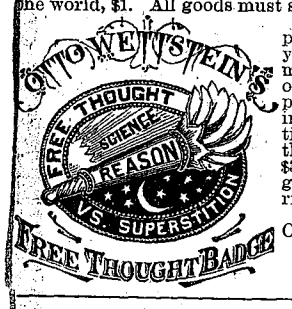
PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.



Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

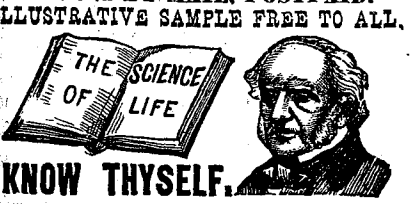
tto Wettstein's

ular Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

nuin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver hes, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jewsilver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy 18; 3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., 50; 4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 eled, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold es, warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, ; 11 jeweled, $23.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, . Best filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best ses, $20, 7; $22, 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled movents. Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11; , 15 jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents ually low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and turned per registered mail. Best spectacle in he world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

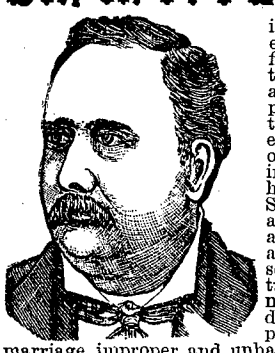
OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.
ILLUSTRATIVE SAMPLE FREE TO ALL.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood



Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged, and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 25 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50 or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price, only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample free to anybody. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissel, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bullfinch St., Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

TRAVELS IN FAITH

From Tradition to Reason.

BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.

Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

News of the Week.

ARCHBISHOP CORRIGAN, of Baltimore, has been appointed cardinal for this country. This givs Mr. Corrigan the right to wear a red hat.

THE Rev. Daniel O'Conell, pastor of St. John's church, of Oswego. N. Y., who has been on trial before an ecclestiasical court on various charges, has been suspended from duty.

TRAMPS are so numerous in Florida that the county commissioners hav decided to anchor freight boats in the St. John's river, and send the tramps aboard them for ninety days each.

THE demonstration at Seattle, W. T., against the Chinese, who were quietly gathered in and shipped to San Francisco, resulted in the calling out of the militia, and several citizens were shot.

THE Poles in Chicago hav called a mass-meeting to protest against the outrage on humanity contained in Bismarck's expulsion of Poles from that portion of their nativ land within German boundary lines.

THE recent London riots hav called attention to the destitute condition of the unemployed poor of that city, and practical steps may be taken for their relief. A committee of workingmen called on Gladstone last week.

HARRY HILL, the keeper of a famous sporting resort, and who was once called the wickedest man in New York, appeared before Superintendent Murray one day last week, and made affidavit chargiug the police with blackmailing him.

THE Brooklyn police counsel hav decided that the authorities were not justified in preventing a Sunday evening "sacred" concert for the benefit of the Parnell fund. "The observance of the Christian Sabbath," they say, "is not a part of our law."

THE heavy rains last week did great damage in Boston. Large areas of the city were submerged and more than a thousand persons were driven from their homes by the flood. Much loss was caused at Troy, N. Y., and other places, by overflows.

THE committee of ministers that has been investigating the charges against the Rev. J. C. Pershing, president of the Pittsburgh, Pa., Female College, hav found him guilty of dishonesty, lying, and immoral conduct. Dr. Pershing is suspended from clerical functions.

THE trial of Parson White, of White Plains, N. Y., goes merrily on. Mr. White is charged with assault upon Miss Elfrida Robinson, an employee in his household. His criminality is apparent; whether or not it was effected by assault is the question to be settled by the court.

HORATIO SEYMOUR, ex-governor of New York, died on the 12th instant, aged seventy-five years. He was twice governor of New York (1862–64), and was candidate for president in 1868, being defeated by Grant. He was a man of marked rectitude in public and private life.

MRS. ELIZABETH TILTON has just removed from Brooklyn to Chicago, where she expects to remain permanently. Theodore Tilton, her husband, is in Paris, living frugally upou his earnings as a lecturer in the United States. It is said that Mr. Tilton has declared his intention never to return to this country.

GEORGE Q. CANNON was arrested at Winnemucca, Nevada, last week. The prisoner has been in hiding for nearly a year. There is great rejoicing among legal men there because of Cannon's arrest, as he is regarded as the chief mind in the Mormon church, whose authoritativ voice, from his retreat, gave orders to the faithful to stand firm and support polygamy.

MAJOR-GEN. WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK, commanding the Military Division of the Atlantic, Department of the East, died Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 9th, at his home on Governor's Island, New York Harbor, from diabetes aggravated by carbuncle. He had been ill only a week. General Hancock was nearly sixty-two years of age, having been born on St. Valentine's day, 1824. He was an officer in the late war, aud candidate for president of the United States in 1880. Lieut.-Gen. Phil Sheridan is his successor as commander of the Division of the Atlantic. The dead commander's funeral in New York on the 14th was unaccompanied by any great military or civic display. The body was taken to Norristown, Pa., for burial.

Odds and Ends.

TEACHER of Bible class: "In what book of the Bible is the expression found, 'All flesh is grass?'" Student: "Timothy."

"WE hav entirely overcome the objection we had once to prohibition," says an Iowa exchange. Another editor learned to drink out of a jug.

A LADY of charitable disposition asked a tramp if she could not assist him by mending his clothes? "Yes, madam," he said, "I hav a button, and if you will sew a shirt on it I will be greatly obliged."

THERE is a man in Philadelphia so mean that when he is asked to join in singing "Old Hundred," he churns off "Ninety and Nine" instead. He says he has got to make one per cent, anyway, these hard times.

THERE is nothing more admirable in a public man than the courage of his religious convictions and practices. It was ex-Alderman Walsh who remarked once in the presence of his fellow members of the city government: "Every night I get down on my knees and say my little prayer, and I don't care a damn who sees me."

A LITTLE girl, a regular attendant at one of the Presbyterian Sunday-schools of St. Paul, went out with her mother to spend the day. A young lady, a visitor likewise, asked her what church she attended. "I don't know exactly," the little girl replied. "I'm not a Methodist and I'm not a Baptist. I guess I must be an advertisment."

"YES," sighed a recent widow, "we are very unfortunate. Poor John was out of work for a long time, and when he obtained a good job he died." "What job did he get?" she was asked. "He joined a circus, and got twenty dollars a week for putting his head in the lion's mouth twice a day. That's all he had to do. It seems hard he should hav died." "What did he die of?" "The lion bit his head off."

A SOUTH YONKERS Sunday-school teacher was trying to explain to her class what the conscience was, but had some difficulty in making the scholars understand. "What is that small voice that comes to you after you hav retired at night?" she said at length. "Oh, please, ma'm, I know," quickly said one of the bright little girls. "Well, what is it, Dolly?" said the teacher, proud that her explanation had been so quickly comprehended. "Cats, ma'm."

SAM JONES was preaching the other night after his most effectiv style and suddenly, to enforce a point, broke out with this expression as illustrativ of the confidence with which children look upon their parents: "You go home," said he, "and wake up your young son at midnight, and ask him: 'Who is the wisest man in all the world?' and he will say, 'You are.'" One earnestly inclined parent left the house of the Lord that night determined to hav that important point settled by the youthful scion of his family and name before another sun should hav set. He roused his hopeful and remarked in assumed indifference: "Theo, who is the wisest man in the world?" Quicker than lightning came the crushing answer, "I am." And now there is a doubting Thomas hovering about the edge of Sam's spiritual pasture.

A METHODIST preacher tells it upon himself that while on his travels recently he stopped awhile before sundown at a house to spend the night, and after entering the house the dog came in, approached him good-naturedly, and then, as if he had ascertained who the visitor was, immediately went out and got after the chickens in the yard.

"BROTHER IKE," said a gentleman of color to another darkey yesterday, "yer orter been to de pra'r meeting las' night. We prayed fur yer." "Am dat a fac'?" "Hit am." "Den I'se got faith in pra'r. Dat pra'r was answered." "Sure nuff?' "Fo' God hit wus." "Tell me 'bout hit, Brudder Ike." "Wall, 'Zekiel, I'ze got de fattes' turkey at my house yer eber seed. An' he wuz roostin' low las' night—bery low."

BOSTON.

Boston is a famous city,
  Which her people proudly dub
As the mighty modern Athens
  And the universe's Hub.

Boston is a pious city,
  And the good folks there maintain
That a man who's born in Boston
  Needs not be born again.

Boston is a virtuous city,
  Though, like many other towns,
In her morals, as in business,
  She, too, has her ups and Downs.

A WELL-KNOWN family uptown hav an eight-year-old urchin upon whom a revival at one of the churches has made a deep impression. He astounded his good mother the other night by saying: "Mamma, I am going to church to-night to be converted." "Converted, Jimmie? Why, you do not understand what it means." "Yes I do, and I am going to join the church and be a Christian hereafter." "If you do that you must giv up dancing and going to the museum." "What is that? Must I quit going to the museum?" "Oh, yes." "Then," after a minute or two of earnest reflection, "I guess I'll go down and see the four-legged woman just once more before I am converted."

IT was in the pauses of the lottery drawing. Stocks were down and he had been losing at poker. He began looking around to see what he could gamble on, and after dinner, when his wife had left the table and retired, one of his friends by a casual remark threw an entirely new idea into his head. "I'll bet it's a girl," said he. That started it, and before the evening was over the young husband had made a book on the baby. The time approached, and one evening late there was an unusual commotion. The telephone bell kept going for an hour or two very lively; a professional-looking gentleman and a professional-looking old woman were among those who responded to the messages. The last call brought a messenger boy. "Take that down to the —— Club," said the father. The note was opened there. It read very simply: "All bets off. Twins." He says that babies are as uncertain things to gamble on as cards.

Gems of Thought.

THE history of our poor race is sad enough without increasing, even by a hundred, the murders committed in the name of religion.—D. M. Bennett.

To the Secularist there is no heaven or hell. He agrees with the great Persian poet, Omar Khayjam, who, many centuries ago, wrote these magnificent lines:

I sent my soul through the invisible,
  Some letter of the after-time to spell;
And, by and by, my soul returned to me,
  And answered, "I myself am heaven and hell."

"I myself am heaven and hell." A truer word was never spoken. Heaven is wisdom, virtue, happiness; hell is ignorance, vice, and misery. Let us all fight againt the powers of hell in this world, where alone they exist, and strive to realize here the only true kingdom of heaven [for us?] that ever was or ever will be.—G. W. Foote (N. S. S. Almanac, 1881).

THE Rev. Lyman Abbott, associate editor of the Christian Union, believes that children may be "born into godliness," that "there is just as much scriptural authority for a doctrin of original piety as for a doctrin of original sin;" and he further says that there are "the convictions of a lifetime, wrought out by the experience of two generations." So does heresy grow.—Anon.

"Go on, and work with all your will—uproot error." (From the record of a recent visit to the old Seer of Chelsea by a correspondent of the Baltimore Sun).—Carlyle.

Nor to know at large of things remote
From use, obscene, and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more is fame,
Or emptiness, a fond impertinence,
And renders us, in things that most concern,
Unpracticed, unprepared, and still to seek.
—Milton.

How can a "spirit" conceive a material body? If the whole affair be miraculous, why try to compromise matters with nature by making a kind of pseudo-father? Surely it would be simpler to leave it a complete miracle, and let the virgin remain the solitary parent. Except for making the story match better with the elder Greek mythology, there is no need to introduce a god-parent in the affair. A child without a father is no more remarkable than a mother who remains a virgin. This attempt at reasonableness only makes the whole more outrageously unnatural, and provokes criticism which would be better avoided.—Mrs. Annie Besant.

THE astonishment which the peasant feels when he sees the rites of a religion different from his own, is not less great than if he saw some flagrant breach of the moral duties, or some daring act of impiety to God; nor is it easy for him to conceive that there can be anything worthy in a mind which treats with indifference, what awakens in his own breast all the best and sublime emotions. "Is it possible," says the old and expiring Brahman, in one of Marmontal's tales, to the young English officer who had saved the life of his daughter, "Is it possible that he to whose compassion I owe the preservation of my child, and who now soothes my last moments with the consolatiods of piety, should not believe in the God Vishnu and his nine metamorphoses?"—Dugald Stewart.

PROGRESS in seience and art is not indeed the highest of which man is capable, and it may be coupled with growing immorality, but, for all that, it is a great gift, and he that works earnestly for its sake does something toward increasing human happiness, and in so far is doing the will of God. Culture, indeed, is not devoutness, but still less is the absence of culture. Science and art alone do not make a man all that he ought to be, but ignorance and insensibility to what is beautiful are surely no quickeners of piety, and are great blemishes on the character of any man and are often ruinous in their effects.—Bible for Learners.

"I HEARD Mr. Swift [afterward Dean Swift] sneering at my lord duke of Marlborough's courage the other day. He! that Teague from Dublin! because his grace is not in favor, dares to say this of him; and he says this that it may get to her majesty's ear, and to coax and wheedle Mrs. Marsham. They say the Elector of Hanover has a dozen mistresses in his court at Herrenhausen, and if he came to be king over us, I wager that the bishops and Mr, Swift, that wants to be one, will coax and wheedle them. Oh, those priests and their grave airs! I'm sick of their square toes and their rustling cassocks. I should like to go to a country where there was not one or to turn Quaker and get rid of 'em; and I would only the dress is not becoming." So rattles Mistress Beatrix, and not without reason, in Thackeray's Esmond.

Now a' the congregation o'er
  Is silent expectation;
For Moodie speels the holy dour
  W' tidings o' damnation.
Should Hornie, as in ancient days,
  'Mong sons of God present him,
The very sight o' Moodie's face
  To his ain hot hame had sent him
    Wi' fright that day. —Burns.

THE Jews in their early and remarkable passage from fetichism and polytheism to monotheism—if we may trust the tale—resolve to exterminate all the Canaanites, millions of men, unoffending and peaceful, because the two nations worshiped different Gods, and Jehovah, the peculiar deity of the Jews, a jealous God, demanded the destruction of the other nation who did not worship him. Men, women, and children must be slain.—Theodore Parker.

GOD hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth.—Acts xvii, 26.

THE reformer's chief duty always is to destroy falsehood, to drag down the temples of imposture where idols take the place of the almighty.—Froude.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 9. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, February 27, 1886. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

STRUGGLING FOR THE SPOILS.

Notes and Clippings.

FATHER MCCARTHY, of Providence, R. I., was arrested at Pittsburgh last week for drunkenness.

A TEACHER in a St. Alban's, Vt., school asked the class which was the longest day of the year, and promptly got the answer, "Sunday."

WHEN Caxton introduced the art of printing into England, the bishop of London said to a convocation of his clergy, "If we do not destroy this dangerous invention it will some day destroy us." The bishop was a better prophet than Isaiah.

THE Chinese embassador to the United States contemplates asking the government for damages for the way his countrymen were hustled around at Seattle, Wash. Ter., not long ago. China has often paid indemnities to the United States in similar cases.

WHEN fanning mills for cleaning grain were first introduced into this country, pious people objected to their use, and said, "It is a grievous sin against the Lord to presume to raise the wind by human device, and contrary to the scripture which says, 'The wind bloweth where it listeth.'"

THE jury in the case of Pastor White, charged with assault upon Miss Elfrida Robinson, failed to agree on a verdict. The Rev. Mr. Goss, at whose house Miss Robinson lived after leaving Pastor White, says that the Rev. Mr. White is a perjured liar, and Mr. White hints that Mr. Goss got the girl into trouble himself and now wants to lay the blame on a brother-clergyman. If Virtue had no other friends than the clergy, she would be a weeping exile in this community.

NEAR Walla Walla, W. T., is said to be a colony of religious enthusiasts who call their organization the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth. They practice polygamy, believe in the transmigration of souls, and claim that David, Solomon, Moses, John the Baptist, and St. Peter hav been born again, and are now in the colony, and that they will soon commence a career of conquest, and subdue the world. They hold property in common. There are very few Americans among them.

THE New York Sabbath Committee, 31 Bible House, has offered five prizes—three of $100 and two of $50—for the best essays by workingmen on the Sunday question. This action of the committee—to use a word that is hard to pronounce—is supererogatory. The best possible essay on the subject is already in print. It was written by John E. Remsburg, a very industrious worker, and is entitled "Sabbath-Breaking." The Sabbath Committee should spend 25 cents out of its $400 for this pamphlet, and use the rest to buy coal for the poor.

OF our public school system the Freeman's Journal says: "As to the expensiv, and, as more and more seen, fruitless system of public schools—the only trouble is how to get rid of it. It is an organized system for public plunder. People of public influence hav their uncles and aunts, and cousins, and nephews, and nieces, snugly provided for in a routine humdrum of foolish performances, not fitting children for their future life—but paying the teachers. As repeatedly acknowledged by its most zealous supporters, it depends for its existence on a public sentiment in favor of schooling. This public sentiment, left to voluntary effort and competition—at less than half the cost of the public school encroachment and incubus—would not only result in better technical instruction, but would help to restore to fathers and mothers their God-intended dignity as heads of families." That is undoubtedly the Roman Catholic idea, but how will Americans like it?

THE Rev. J. O. Foster, according to the statistics he presented at a recent Methodist minister's meeting in Chicago, figured that it had cost $431 for each soul converted within the bounds of the Rock River conference (northern Illinois) during 1885. The Rev. F. M. Bristol, the pastor of one of the richest south side churches, was able to show a costlier record than that. He said that six prominent south side churches, with a membership of 3,000, had expended $100,000 last year, and had make only 100 converts. Each convert had therefore cost $1,000,

THE Rev. J. L. Scudder, of the First Congregational church of St. Paul, has made himself very solid with the poeple of that city by preaching a sermon on a late Sunday in favor of tobogganing. His text was: "Make a joyful noise. Serve the Lord with gladness." In the course of the sermon he said: "Tobogganing is a cheap and democratic diversion, and any one who can summon up the courage can take a whiz himself. It stirs his blood up mightily and makes every hair stand on end. By the time he has reached the end of the slide and drawn his toboggan back again, he is in a warm and physically hilarious condition. He feels his youth coming back to him again, and is suddenly seized with a desire to make some kind of a frightful noise. Thank God! I say, for tobogganing, that drives dull care away. God smiles upon such scenes as these, and if we are truly his children we can serve him as well by sitting on a toboggan as by kneeling upon a hassock. Then let us go on and enjoy it, both in the name of health and the name of the Lord."

SINCE the first week of January a powerful revival of religion has been going on in the towns of Haddam, Deep River, and Essex, accompanied by exhibitions of great fervor and excitement. Meetings hav been held nightly. H. E. Johnson, a wood-turner in one of the factories, was one of the first to experience religion. A few evenings after he announced his conversion. He was somewhat illiterate, but his earnestness and zeal made a deep impression. He began to act strangely. His behavior gave his friends grave anxiety, for he gave up his position in the factory. The Lord, he said, had appeared to him in a vision and had told him to labor for the salvation of sinners. He then began to walk up and down the streets from morning till night, with his Bible in his hand, stopping everyone, asking after his spiritual condition, and exhorting him to flee from the wrath to come. He gradually became violent, and was then confined to the house, where, away from the excitement, he gradually recovered his reason, and is now at work again. George Wagner, a farmer in Essex, became insane through excitement occasioned by this religious awakening; and, saying he was "going to heaven across lots," hanged himself. His almost lifeless body was cut down and resuscitated, and he is now under surveillance.

Communications.

An Examination of Church History.

BEING LETTERS TO A CATHOLIC.—VI.

FRIEND D. C.: Years ago there was a certain establishment in Rome, called the "Agency of the Catholic Apostolate." It was the channel through which the Chancery transacted business with the clergy of foreign countries. Let me giv you a copy of it, as directed to the clergy of England:

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: I hav the honor to transmit to you the table of the principal petitions which the agency undertakes to obtain at Rome. Your zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of souls inspires me with the confident assurance that you will select such articles as are best fitted for obtaining that end.

Then follows a long list of crimes, each with a pecuniary indemnity attached. Your writers at first said that no such document existed. In answer, dozens were exhibited. They then claimed them to be forgeries. It was proven they had been forwarded from Rome. Pushed to the extreme, they claimed they were the work of some rascal, and the holy father knew nothing of the transaction. Let us examin this by the light of probability. Here was Rome, a papal city, the headquarters of your spiritual leader. So purely Catholic was it that at times an unbeliever was not secure there without a safe pass, and not always then. None but Catholics had any rights, and an outsider could not even bury his child in its consecrated earth (see Young's "Night Thoughts"). The clerics, in and out of orders, outnumbered the laity, the police under pay of the chancery; a small army within the city, and even as late as 1845 the pope was in such supreme control over the actions of his subjects that he ordered all the physicians throughout the papal states to cease attending any sick person who, after a third visit, could not giv positiv evidence of having been to confession. And yet, under these circumstances, you desire a reasonable man to believe that an institution of this kind and magnitude could flourish without the knowledge of the authorities. It must hav required a clerical force of a dozen, as the circulars were issued by the thousand, and sent to every pastor in Christendom. I do not wish to attempt to fasten any crime on your church which cannot be abundantly proven, and unless you can produce more than a simple denial, the weight of evidence will be against you.

Your martyrs, whose blood is the seed of the church, were, in the main, turbulent politicians. Stephen met his death by stoning, a popular method with the rabble of those days, just as our boys treat a rabid dog or a stray cat. He had simply made himself obnoxious, and suffered for it. Look at the account of Procopius, styled the first martyr of Palestine. When asked to make libations to the four emperors, which was a political test and had no religious significance whatever, what was his answer? Did he giv any high Christian authority for his refusal? Did he confess "Christ and him crucified?" No; he simply answered in the words of Ulysses in the Iliad: "A plurality of sovereigns is not good; let there be but one prince and one sovereign lord." For this political act he suffered death; in after years, in order to insure antiquity, he was read into the list of martyrs, and volumes hav been written attesting to the miracles performed by his relics.

Take the entire list of the early martyrs, divest the accounts of everything supernatural, and examin them, not with the eye of faith, but as a cool-headed, clever lawyer, and you will find all your heroes dwindling down to turbulent politicians, and their so-called heroism more than duplicated by the Russian Nihilist of our day.

View them, if you please, with the eye of faith; admit that your records are true; then they certainly were heroic. They suffered for their faith in him who died for them; did it unflinchingly, and gloried in their pangs; while he—though he had come here unsolicited, on a special errand of his own creation; had the advantage of a divine nature; was supported by hosts of angels; and, above all, with the consciousness that if he did his duty well, he would save the entire world, with its countless unborn generations, close up the hell "paved with infants' bones, not a span long," and bring back to man that innocence and purity which he had lost through no fault of his own—he, when the supreme moment arrived, whined like a sick child. Your sacred records tell us this, and though your theologians try to gloss it over, the fact remains. In this view, why do you sneer at the Infidel for considering the human equal to the divine when it has proven itself superior? My friend, glorify your martyrs less, for their every claim is established at the expense of your God.

In the matter of saints your church is very prolific. Take the history of St. Ursula and her eleven thousand virgins. There is a special devotion attached to these ladies, and I select them on that account.

About A.D. 1165 there was a nun called Elizabeth, in a convent at Schönau, who claimed to hav visions. Every time a church wanted relics a grave was opened, she was applied to, and gave the name, history, etc., of the occupant. In a field near Cologne there were thousands of graves, and Elizabeth declared they belonged to Ursula and her companions. She was said to hav been a daughter of a king of Britain, and prior to her marriage had started with her companions, in ten vessels, on a three years' cruise. Stress of weather drove them into Cologne, where the retreating Huns massacred them. The story went forth, was believed, and Cologne became a market for relics.

But on digging further, bones of men were found, and, as it would not do to hav men among these virgins, Elizabeth was appealed to, and declared that when Ursula had been in Rome the holy father, Pope Cyriacus, had been warned in a vision to follow her, which he did with a goodly number of cardinals, priests, etc., and that they had all been killed by the Huns, except a bishop called James; that immediately after the massacre a great number of angels came, routed the Huns, and Bishop James had each martyr buried in a separate grave, with a tombstone at the head bearing the name. To account for Cyriacus not appearing among the list of popes, Elizabeth stated: "The Roman clergy were so indignant at the abdication of Cyriacus that they struck his name out of the list of the popes." Then an inscription was discovered bearing this legend:

Ursula et undecimilla virgines.

Unfortunately, on digging further, a burying-place for children was found. This compromised the virgins and the pope, not to speak of the cardinals and clergy, and Elizabeth then declared that it was an invention of the devil to throw discredit on the story, entangle the holy father, and shame the church.

Now, let me ask you, do you believe this story? Go to Cologne, and they will show you piles of skulls and bones heaped in the wall and covered with glass and assure you they are the remains of these virgins. In Neuhausen the bones of the pope are exhibited in the church of St. Cyriac, and your "Lives of the Saints" attests to the truth of the story, even if the numerous miracles counted for nothing.

I will tell you why I do not believe it.

1st. There were no ten vessels of that day, nor one hundred either, capable of carrying eleven thousand people for a three years' cruise.

2d. There was never such a pope as Cyriacus, and your historians admit it.

3d. The sixteenth centenary of the massacre was celebrated in 1837, and as it was claimed it took place when the Huns were returning from their defeat at Chalons, history informs us that the Huns were defeated in 451.

4th. If the chronicles of the times be true, there were not that many virgins in the whole of Christendom.

5th. The very inscription, Ursula et undecimilla virgines, shows its true character and the ignorance of the fabricators of the story, who translated the diminutiv of undecima to mean eleven thousand.

But the Spaniards say that Ursula and her companions came from Baoza, a town of twelve thousand inhabitants. You may take your choice of either. Ask some of your priests how Sakya-Mouni, the founder of Buddhism, and his chief apostle came to be enrolled among your saints under the names of Barlaam and Josaphat, and November 27th dedicated to them. Possibly it may cause you to investigate why there is such a similarity in the priestly vestments of both religions.

Your church, my friend, is most too grasping in her demand for saints—among the newest candidates being Joan of Arc, Louis XVI., and Christopher Columbus. Their claims are now being investigated, and any day may place them in a position where you, as a good Catholic, must cross yourself at the bare mention of their names.

Your Acta Sanctorum will most certainly remain as a monument of the stupidity and credulity of your Italian masters—eighty-five huge volumes recording the doings of your saints, and the compilers hav only reached October. Let me giv you one taken at random. The history of Paul, the simple: A plain farmer, aged sixty, finding his wife unfaithful, seeks Anthony in the desert. But the saint refused him admission, and closed the door of his cell. Four days afterward, when he opened the door, Anthony found Paul still kneeling outside, fasting, and praying. So he was invited to enter, and set to work making baskets, but no food given him. This continued a week longer, and early one morning Anthony set the table, covered it with all the delicacies of the season in the shape of two small crusts of bread and a half cup of water, and Paul was invited to draw up to the festiv board. But grace had to be said, and Anthony beat the record by prolonging it till sundown, and then, on the plea that a heavy repast just before retiring would promote indigestion, postponed the feast till next day. So the pair retired and rose at midnight, when Anthony commenced the grace where he had left off, and after thanking Jesus Christ for ten hours more, gave Paul just two ounces of bread and a sip of water. Then they fell to praying again, and after two weeks and innumerable graces, managed to finish the crusts and drink the water. This is Peter's introduction to the reader. Of course he became a great miracle worker, and his strong hold lay in casting out devils. One day a young man possessed of a demon of high rank came to Anthony, but the demon was too much for that saint, and Paul was called. Then the war commenced. They had it hot and heavy, and although Paul worked in the name of Jesus as often as possible, still the demon would stick. Then Paul really got mad, and ascending a high rock in the blazing sun, assured Jesus that he would neither descend nor eat nor drink till the demon was exorcised. Then the devil spoke: "I go! I go! I yield to tyrannic force. I will return no more. The simplicity and lowliness of Paul hav compelled me to giv in;" and he went.

Now, my friend, you will find this story in the Lausiac History of Palladius, and it is copied in your Acta Sanctorum, published in Rome, and sealed with the seal of the Vatican. Does it not remind you of a fetich priest? He takes his little wooden idol, presents it with numerous gifts, and then asks some favor. No response; he adds more gifts, then more, till all are exhausted. Now he becomes angry, and taking some nails, drives them into the body and assures his god they will remain there till his request has been complied with. Of the two, I should prefer the fetich man, for he is punishing a piece of wood, while St. Peter the simple was punishing himself.

I hav frequently noticed your co-religionists bless themselvs as they saw a priest walking up and down, reading his breviary, for the poor, dear creatures thought he was really saying his prayers. But what does the breviary contain? Beyond a few scraps of scripture, it is taken up in relating the miracles of the saints. It must be very edifying for a bachelor priest to learn that, whilst a suckling infant, St. Anthony of Padua refrained from his breast milk every Friday and fast day; and, when he glances under date of October 21st, to find that St. Hilarion retired to the desert when fifteen years old, died at eighty, and for the sixty-five years wore a single garment of sack-cloth, which he never changed or washed. That St. Vincent Ferreri performed so many miracles his superior ordered him to desist, lest he might cheapen them. One day, while returning from mass, he saw a mason falling from a scaffold. Remembering his superior's injunction, he merely bade the man to remain where he was, suspended in mid-air, and hastened to the monastery—a mile away, to ask permission to perform a miracle. But before he could return, the whole city collected to see a man seated in mid-air with no support, and, procuring ladders, rescued him. That St. Francis de Paula always crossed the sea in his mantle and never got wet. That Gregory Thaumaturgus, whilst superintending the building of a church, found a mountain impeding the workmen, and, ordering it out of the way, it considerately moved two miles. The Irish peasant will assure you that St. Patrick once swam across the Liffey with his head between his teeth, and the French priest is gratified to find in his breviary that, after suffering martyrdom, St. Denis walked two miles with his head in his hands.

Ask any priest to show you his breviary, and see if I make a misstatement. The Italians hav a corner on these books. The bull of Pius V., "Quod a Nobis," ordains that it shall be used by all the clergy, and can be printed only at Rome, except by special permission. Dated A. D. 1568. Seventh of the Ides of July.

The breviary is one of the principal reasons why I am so strongly opposed to allowing your clergy the privilege of instructing even Catholic children. While perfectly willing to allow liberty of conscience, yet there are duties we owe the state which no good citizen will attempt to avoid. Among them is the advancement of educational facilities, and I claim that any set of men who are fed on such pabulum as is contained in the breviary must of necessity be superstitious, and will communicate more or less of it to those under their charge.

Before closing this letter, I desire to say a word about your relics. The Cathedral of Cologne exhibits the skulls of the three Magi who came to worship the child in the manger; the milk of the Virgin Mary is preserved in bottles in over 150 churches in the late papal states; the church of Santa Maria del Popolo, in Rome, has on exhibition the prepuce of Jesus; the head of St. John the Baptist is to be found in three different churches—Florence, Capua, and Reggio. Now, all these are abundantly vouched for both as to genuinness and miracles performed, and hav received the sanction of numerous popes; and my question is: Do you as a sane man, a clever lawyer, one who sits in referee cases, and at one time an aspirant to a judgeship—do you believe what is told of these relics, or that they are what they are claimed to be? If you say you do not, then you are no longer a Catholic, for Pope Benedict XIV. says: "To conclude the discussion, we declare that whoever shall dare to assert that a pope has erred in this or that canonization, is, if not heretical, rash; disparages the saints, and countenances heretics who deny the authority of the church in the canonization of saints; savors of heresy, as opening the way to Infidels for ridiculing the faithful; is a maintainer of an erroneous proposition, and deserving of the severest punishment. Yours truly, McArthur.

Miss Gardener to the St. Louis "Post-Dispatch."

Why would not the Post-Dispatch print it?

Thus I queried upon reading several false statements in the Post-Dispatch of Monday, and I wrote them this conviction, which they decline to print. Why?

Since I am only a visitor in your hospitable city I would not presume to expect space in your paper were it not for the fact that I am assured by one of your leading citizens that the Post-Dispatch, although not claiming to be a Sunday-school paper, has arrived at that state of generosity and fairness where it yearns to do justice to all, and wrong to none. Now when a paper or a person has arrived at a state so exalted as this, Sunday-school teachers can find no material to work upon in such an organization, and the "robe and harp" are already in full view. However, let us hope that the ones already labeled Post-Dispatch will long remain empty, for this world stands in much greater need of ideal newspapers than does the other world of inhabitants. Now if the Post-Dispatch really has reached the ethical exaltation where it is willing to print a reply to and correction of errors in one of its own editorials, it is truly the "one in ten thousand altogether lovely." I shall try it. The editorial to which I refer is in last night's (Monday) paper, and is headed "Cornell's New Professorship." To show you that I am fairly entitled to a hearing on what I claim to be the (no doubt unintentional) errors contained therein, I will here state that I am one of the vice-presidents of one of the three organizations which you criticise, and am personally well acquainted with the personnel and workings of both of the others. First, then, you say:

> Mr. H. W. Sage has given an endowment for the establishment of a chair of ethics and philosophy in Cornell University, and specified that the instruction should be from a definitly Christian standpoint. Now the Society of Ethical Culture, headed by Felix Adler, the Liberal League, to which Bob Ingersoll belongs, and the Nineteenth Century Club of New York city, hav united in one appeal to the New York legislature to prevent the establishment of said professorship. These societies maintain that no religious bent can be given to the methods of instruction without invalidating the charter of the institution. If the spirit and letter of the charter are to be actually violated in the establishment of a new professorship for instruction from a definitly Christian standpoint, there are grounds for opposing it, but in this case the protest may be discredited in the public estimation by the source from which it proceeds.

Now, if a legal request or petition is to be measured by reputation or standing of the people who present it, our whole system of government will hav to be changed. We hav held that even the vilest criminal has legal rights; that the lowliest citizen need only hav law and right on his side to assure him of a respectful hearing and as sure a victory as though he were the highest. But if this were not so, and the three organizations named were forced to prove their respectability and standing before earning the right of protest or a fair hearing, they would still stand a pretty fair show, I think, when once divested of the wholly new and quite inappropriate garments in which you hav erroneously, if not facetiously, dressed them. Let me remove and return to you these garments, and then clothe in their own apparel these three graces, in the hope that they may appear at least entitled to the consideration being accorded to any John Smith or Tom Jones who may see fit to call attention to an illegal attempt to capture property. To begin with, there is no such organization as the "Liberal League." Robert Ingersoll is not its "presiding genius," and it has not sent a petition to the New York legislature. There was once an organization called by that name. Robert Ingersoll belonged to it, but he withdrew from it because he did not approve of some of its proposed measures. He has been heralded all over this country as a man who "defended the sending of obscene literature through the mails." So far from this being the case, he resigned and withdrew from all connection with the above-named society because he disagreed with some of its officers upon this very point. The organization which you say has joined the Ethical society and Nineteenth Century Club in the petition referred to, and of which Colonel Ingersoll is now president, is the American Secular Union, an organization which asks only an entire separation of church and state and the just taxation of church property. Many of the most orthodox indorse the same. It is joined most heartily in this regard by that certainly sufficiently orthodox, able paper, the New York Independent and a number of other "church papers," and by a great many clergymen.

If the fact that Colonel Ingersoll is now president of the Union renders it an outlaw, then the bar association or political organizations to which he belongs are equal outlaws. Many persons belong to this Union whose religious or irreligious views do not agree with those held by him, but in the matter of secularization of state they do harmonize, as in this matter he is in harmony (in large part) with the New York Independent. Associated with him are men and women who will hardly be pronounced below the average American citizen in ability, morality, or standing. Judge Arnold Krekel, of your state, is one of them; James Parton, the ablest biographer of America, is another. Hon. Elizur Wright, whose praise was sung by papers all over this country when he died two months ago, was a vice-president. Hon. Thaddeus B. Wakeman is another. Are these men with their hundreds of associates not entitled to a respectful hearing? Again you say: "Another of the protesting bodies is the Nineteenth Century Club of New York, which has latterly achieved a peculiar notoriety for the discussion of economical questions. The club evinces no especial antagonism to Christianity, but enjoys a damaging reputation for unsound and unreliable views." Again you are in error. The Nineteenth Century Club, as such, holds no views whatever, damaging or otherwise. It is a club composed of leading social and literary men and women of New York city, who meet upon stated occasions to listen to and discuss topics of importance and interest. It is a "full-dress" club. It holds the most divergent views, as you may judge when I say, one night Monsignor Capel spoke for Catholicism, the leading rabbi of New York for Judaism, the most prominent Episcopalian for Protestantism, and Hon. Thaddeus B. Wakeman for Agnosticism; all of which were discussed under the most courteous and friendly rulings. Another evening the "stage" was the topic. Several able playwrights dealt with the topic from behind the scenes, and several well-known and equally thoughtful men handled it from the outlook of the playgoer. Recently Mr. Henry George read a paper before the club which was discussed. It is from this, I suppose, that you get the idea that it is, financially speaking, a rather "flighty" club. Now, there were all sides and phases of financial views and opinions expressed, but from the fact that Andrew Carnegie and Courtlandt Palmer (two very wealthy men) are quoted as taking what is usually called the side of "labor against capital," it has caused much talk on that side. But the other side had its say, and had by far the largest number of friends. This club is the only attempt, so far as I can learn, that is made in this country to conduct an intellectual gathering of refined and able people upon the plan of the French salon of the intellectual men and women of Paris in the last century, where the state of the weather and the physical condition of visitors were not permitted to occupy the mental powers of all present, and what is known as the Encyclopedist Circle grew to be the wonder and light of Paris, and gave to the world much that was valuable then and is invaluable now.

Such is the Nineteenth Century Club of New York in its aim. It has already done much to make wealthy society something beyond a display of clothes and a medium of stupid gossip. As to the other society named, the one conducted by Felix Adler, there is little need for me to speak. It is the brave attempt of a brilliant man to teach sound morality, self-culture, and independence upon the solid basis of eternal, moral principles, which are universal in application, and unsectarian in the broadest and only real sense of that term, where it is large enough to apply to any and all forms of faith, and not simply to different phases of the same faith, known as Christianity, and unknown to nearly four-fifths of all the human race. Felix Adler's work speaks for itself. I do not agree with him in some of his beliefs, but the monuments he has built for himself are as enduring as time and as universal as charity. The hundreds of people of thought and brains, of all beliefs, who aid him are records of his ability and honesty of purpose; and the thousands of children made moral, self-dependent, independent, and honest by the efforts and schools of this one man will be a monument to him greater than any in stone or bronze, which will also be erected to him by an enlightened public when it once grows to understand the real meaning of such work as his.

These three societies represent many thousands of people. In the main they are people far above the highest average of the best communities; their leaders are among the first men and women in America and Canada, mentally and morally. Many of them are lawyers. They claim that an illegal as well as an immoral and dangerous thing is attempted under the shield of a bequest. They—differing in aims, beliefs, and methods—unite in this opinion, and offer a protest they hope to see presented, and its basis argued, before the legislature. Is it too much to ask—even if the petitioners were not, as they are, among the most moral, able, earnest, and thoughtful citizens of the country? And if the "source of the protest" is to decide its worth, is not the victory already won when these three children are thus dressed in their own clothes, and those you lent them for temporary use are once more returned to the shop of accidental misfits? Respectfully, H. H. Gardener,
Vice-president American Secular Union.

Only Barbarism Refined.

I look upon civilization as refined barbarism, in which, instead of being stuck with a spear or battered with a bludgeon, one is stuck by fair promises, and woefully bled in a horse trade. Si Slokum.

A New Feature in a New York Fashion Journal.

The Cloak, Suit, and Ladies' Wear Review admits a rational dress department, giving as reasons therefor "the deep interest in the health-giving chain of increasing numbers of thoughtful people of both sexes.

When editor and manager of the fashion trade which controls an ever-changing, ever-health-injuring and exercise-impeding form of clothing, has manliness to put beside these advertisments and before the public, a hygienic system of clothing with its universal benefits and comforts, it need not be deemed very difficult for encumbered women, feeble or becoming so, to assume a scientific costume. Especially not when inducements for such system are sustained by general conviction and the experiments of half a century by thousands of women, among whom are most candid investigators, philanthropists, and physicians. And further, the ripe decision of scientists, students of nature in all fields as related to human conditions, not only favor but contend for sanitary change in woman's habits, distorting clothing being her greatest violation. The simple plea of honoring, not outraging, the human form is alone sufficient. All personal and universal happiness lies in this balance against avaricious trade that to its monopoly subjects woman, and, through her, man. No valid obection has been or can be made. The natural appearance confronting the oddity of barrel-shaped petticoats during the transition of forms in style is but as a feather on the breeze in view of the evils escaped, the blessings gained.

It must be about fifty years since the gifted Fourier, in his study for measures to ameliorate humanity, perceived woman's costume a basic source of inability, and recommended rejection of petticoats. The idea was adopted, its improvements testified to by communities acting on his plan of equity, and like testimony has followed all later experiments.

M. E. Tillotson.

The Mormons.

I hav not read anything for a long while that so thoroughly coincides with my views on the Mormon question as Mr. Coke Ewing's article in The Truth Seeker of the 13th inst.

He is humane. Humanity, when the Mormon question is up for discussion, seems to be about as far removed from the composition of those Materialists who hav ventilated their opinions in that direction, as it is from the composition of ordinary Christians, although the former somewhat outdo the latter in boasting about its possession.

Friend Ewing has just hit the nail square on the head. The political charlatans are trying hard to raise another issue for bloody, cruel war, in hopes, no doubt, of saving "the dear old party," as he thinks, and also, allow me to add, to distract the attention of the masses from a much more difficult problem of statesmanship which their feeble minds seem incapable of grappling, to wit: The great labor question; or, capital and labor, and how to harmonize them. What do they care for except party? They very well remember that war made their party what it was. And so long as there was a people to plunder it thrived.

Of course another war, also brought about, as the last one was, by lashing the religious prejudices of the people to frenzy, will giv them another section of our country to plunder, and while such war is progressing they will roll up their eyes just as sactimoniously and pray their God just as fervently to aid them to abolish the institution of polygamy as they did when they besought his aid during the last war to abolish the institution of slavery, notwithstanding that same God established both. An unchangeable God to be sure! But I forgot; unchangeable, perhaps, only in respect to cruelty.

In ancient times he did not care much for people who did not believe as his chosen people then did. So he ordered that they be exterminated—men, women, and children. And why should he care for the Mormon people? They don't believe as the great majority of his self-styled chosen people of today do, and so of course they should be despoiled of their property, their homes made desolate, their women outcasts, and their children orphans and bastards. And all the people will say, Amen and amen! And when this is accomplished it will be considered as an evidence of the great civilization of the nineteenth century! Yea, verily! Is man's inhumanity to man never to cease? O Liberty! what crimes are perpetrated in thy name!

Greenpoint, Feb. 15, 1886. R. M. Robinson.

"Suaviter in Modo, Fortiter in Re."

Burnett G. Haskell, editor of the Truth, has gone to Portland, Oregon, to help remove the Chinese. He thus outlines his intended course: "We don't intend to commit any violence or precipitate any strife, but we do intend to hav the Chinese leave Portland. The way we intend to remove the Chinese is to remove their goods and chattels and themselvs to the wharf, put them on board a steamer sailing for San Francisco, and say to them: 'God bless you! You are not wanted here. Depart in peace!'"

The Liberal Club.

It is beginning to look as if the rainbow painted across the sky some years ago as a sign of fair weather was a humbug. The floods continue all around. Last Friday evening it rained—not hard, but just enough to keep the wayfarer undecided whether it was best to put up an umbrella or not. The Manhattan Liberal Club held its 399th regular meeting that night. The audience was there at eight o'clock, but the president came not. Everybody sat patiently and waited until half-past eight; then the man with the badge-pin went out to get a lantern to hunt up a presiding officer with, and Mr. Langerfeld took the chair to open the meeting. Before the latter had time to get in his work Mr. Wakeman came in and peeled off his overcoat, and Mr. Langerfeld slipped down the steps on the other side of the platform. The president explained that he was not fortunate enough to belong to the working-class who hav regular hours of labor, and he was sometimes obliged to do night work.

The secretary said it was too late to read the minutes, so the speaker of the evening was introduced —Mr. Henry Appleton, of Boston, Scientific Anarchist. Mr. Appleton is a pleasant-faced, genial person, rotund and rubicund. He prefaced his speech by saying that he had no dynamite in his pockets. He never carried it. Anarchism was a sociological principle. Anarchists believed in liberty and the absolute sovereignty of the individual. The individual is the actor, the individual is the state, the individual is God, the individual is authority everywhere. The majority had no right to govern the minority. If majority rule is right, then the czar is right, because the majority of his subjects believe in him. So with the pope, and emperor, and sultan. There must be no compulsion; no government without the consent of the governed. Anarchists believe in arbitration, in secession, in sexual freedom, in the rights of individuals to unrestricted wealth. Our present defectiv social system should be abolished. It is antiquated and full of superstitions. Mr. Appleton did not think that it would be safe to remove all restrictions at once. If he knew the restraint of law in New York was to be thrown off that night he should skip the town before morning. Anarchists believed in running when it was necessary. Mr. Appleton also indulged in a few shots at THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Freethinkers, whom he denominated "theological Anarchists." At the close of his address the speaker said he had not exhausted half the mine of wealth which the subject opened up.

The audience were very well pleased with some things that Mr. Appleton had said, and applauded him frequently. He has a habit when speaking of bringing his hands together with a loud pop, and Madam Delescluze, who is a professional elocutionist, noted this, and said that he was certainly an Anarchist in oratory. Mr. Appleton is nevertheless a good and effectiv speaker, and has much truth to tell. Along with doses of that sort of Socialism in which the individual is absorbed and assimilated by society, the protests of Anarchists can be taken with good results.

Mr. Langerfeld has not frequented the club of late as much as he did formerly, but the announcement of an Anarchist brought him out. He wanted to know what the speaker had been discoursing about. Rights, said Mr. Langerfeld, are sociological institutions. As individuals we hav no rights. The speaker of the evening had said a good deal about what he didn't want, but not a word about what he did want. Having said further that "the TRUTH SEEKER fellows" were trying to destroy much that was good and worthy of preservation, Mr. Langerfeld bowed and took his seat.

Mr. Putnam followed. He said that Freethinkers went a long way with Mr. Appleton in rejecting authority, but they held to the necessity of a government, secular in form, and of just sufficient scope to protect, as Blackstone has it, the rights of the individual. Mr. Putnam would ask what Mr. Appleton would do with a man who would not consent to arbitration, or who, having consented to arbitration, refused to abide by the decision. Would it not become necessary, in such case, to assert authority over him? Also if a man had small-pox and refused to leave the community and isolate himself temporarily, would it not be incumbent on society to remove him? These were questions which Mr. Putnam yearned to hear answered. He believed that if the Anarchist invoked authority in the instances cited, he must also admit that authority should be invoked in other cases where it seemed to be necessary.

Mrs. Leonard held that we hav had no people on earth as yet fit to be given freedom. Women are all slaves. We hav too much law, and it is wrested to serve the behests of injustice. If all law were to be abolished, Mrs. Leonard believed there could scarcely be more misery on earth than there is now.

Mr. King made a speech and raised numerous laughs. His remarks were not materially to the point. He has absented himself from the club so much of late that he seems to hav lost the capacity of grasping great thoughts and handling them in a skilful manner. He expressed some antiquated notions about the continuity of the race, and solidarity, and one thing and another, which were embalmed in the archives of the club several years ago, and are among its least interesting fossils.

Mr. Appleton had been making copious notes on some paper, and when Mr. King had receded he laid these upon the desk and proceeded to demolish his critics. He bowled them down pretty successfully until he came to Mr. Putnam's inquiries about the citizen who declined to arbitrate. Then he remarked that you couldn't expect a speaker to meet off-hand all the exigencies that would arise in a great philosophical system like Anarchy. He admitted, however, that the recusant individual might be mildly coerced, but until such individual became obstreperous his liberty should not be invaded. The speaker was grateful to the audience for their kind attention and general good behavior; also for the generous collection they had contributed.

Thus terminated a very interesting meeting. The unsettled condition of the questions raised suggested to this writer the loss which the club has sustained through the illness of Mr. Andrews, whose remarks from its platform hav in days gone by so bridged the chasms between contending advocates. There is need in the organization of some speaker who can at least echo the voice of the Great Universal Preacher.

At the next meeting the Rev. William Lloyd will discuss the problem of "Personal Immortality in the Light of Science." No one has been appointed to meet the reverend gentleman's arguments on this point, and the club has neglected its duty in not delegating its president to attend to that agreeable task, which he might be relied upon to do in a satisfactory manner.

Passing Notes.

My recent sickness rendered it necessary that I should for a period forego much of my platform work. I therefore devoted my time to reading some of the literature which has lately been issued by some of my co-workers. The first production which commanded my attention was Miss Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," with a grand introduction by Colonel Ingersoll. This, without exception, is one of the most valuable and interesting books that I hav read for some time. Miss Gardener has done a noble work, and done it well. Her exposition and defense of the rights and true position of woman are unanswerable arguments against the arrogant assumptions of certain "lords of creation." In this part of the work her demonstration how custom, based upon the errors of theology, has kept woman in a state of physical degradation and mental serfdom, is followed by such a powerful vindication of the capability and the rightful status of the feminin sex as will commend itself to the approval of all lovers of truth and justice.

In her emphatic impeachment of the creeds and doctrins of the churches, Miss Gardener has exhibited a skill and power that but few older in the ranks of theological warfare could equal.

In the latter part of the work an array of historical facts are given in correction of stereotyped theological errors that should appall those who hav hitherto been misled by orthodox pretensions. This grand contribution to Freethought literature cannot be over-estimated as a comprehensiv exposé of long-cherished delusions and a complete vindication of the necessity and duty of the unfettered exercise of reason and mental freedom.

It is needless to say that Miss Gardener's style of writing is of the most finished order—light, without being frivolous; humorous, without being offensiv, and argumentativ, without being wearisome. Throughout the entire work she is graceful in manner, chaste in expression, and brilliant in conception. Her sentences are as charming to the refined taste as they are instructiv to the cultured intellect. Miss Gardener has allied with these very rare features an earnestness and boldness that giv immense force to her work. She says what she means, and undoubtedly means what she says. With her no topic is too sacred to be discussed, and no opinion too hallowed to be respectfully criticised. Women should read this book to inform themselvs of their past history and their present duty. Men should peruse it to learn the wrongs they hav countenanced and the rights now demanded of them. The rising generation should study it for the purpose of knowing the path to avoid and the course to adopt to make them real men and women in the future of the world's greatness.

Having carefully read Mr. Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking," I hav no hesitation in saying that it is unique of its kind. So far as I am aware there is no other work upon this subject either in England or America that contains so much valuable information upon the subject treated as does Mr. Remsburg's pamphlet. The numerous facts are compiled with great care and discrimination, and placed before the reader with a vigor that is peculiarly the writer's own. The popular orthodox notion that the Sabbath is a divine institution, and that Christians hav always regarded it as such is proved beyond a doubt to be erroneous, and the charge that Secularists desire to destroy the Sunday is most ably refuted. Mr. Remsburg is a solid writer, and whatever he undertakes to write he does it well. I congratulate my friend upon his achievement in giving to the world truths in reference to the Sabbath question, which were previously too little known. Every Secularist should obtain a copy of the pamphlet, and thoroughly study its contents.

I am glad to learn that there is a great demand for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for the present year; it is an encyclopedia of information to the Secular party. Apart from the portraits of European Freethinkers, and "numerous other illustrations," the facts and figures given in its pages as to money exacted by the churches, and the article on "The Religion of Crime," are worth more than what is charged for the ANNUAL. The trustworthy account of "How Voltaire Died" should be in possession of every member of the American Secular Union. It is a convincing answer to the oft-repeated falsehoods and slanders of the church, and its blind devotees, as to the last days of Voltaire. Those who wish a calender giving a fund of Secular information; a knowledge of the growth of Freethought in America, Australia, and in other parts of the world; also specially arranged statistics on a variety of subjects, should secure a copy of the well printed TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

The "Agnostic Annual," published in London, England, copies of which I see can be had from THE TRUTH SEEKER office, givs an excellent idea of Agnosticism as expounded in the old country. It contains articles from some of the ablest English advocates of this particular phase of thought.

While writing I wish to intimate to friends that, having entirely recovered from my late indisposition, I am again activ in the lecturing field, speaking nearly every night in the Northwest. In April I go to Canada to fulfil a six weeks' engagement; from thence I take a trip to England. In August I shall return to the States, and, after spending a few weeks in the East, commence a lengthy tour through the West, commencing in Chicago the first week in October. All applications for lectures in the Western states should be addressed to me care of Mr. A. D. O'Neill, 107 Park avenue, Chicago, Ill., who will see that all arrangements are made during my absence.

Chicago, Feb. 18, 1886. CHARLES WATTS.

The Statue to Giordano Bruno at Rome.

MAMMOTH HOT SPRINGS, WYOMING (YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK), Feb. 1, 1886.

Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake in the city of Rome on February 17th, 1600. His heresies are now taught in all our schools as matters of scientific fact. He was therefore the first martyr for science and the new civilization.

It is proposed to erect a statue to his memory on the spot where his body was consumed to ashes. It is hoped that America and the United States of America will make a generous donation toward such a monument. We are the heirs of the truths he promulgated; we reap the benefits of his courage and self-sacrifice in their behalf; we revere his name and would consecrate his memory; we would transmit his revelations to posterity and his virtue and heroism as worthy examples to those who love truth and the human race. To this end we subscribe as follows:

G. L. Henderson and family, Mammoth Hot Springs		$2.00
E. Lamartine	"	1.00
By a Friend	"	1.00
W. C. Douglas	"	1.00
David Rhode	"	1.00
W. A. Donnahoo	"	1.00
Jack Barronett, Barronett, Wy. T		1.00
W. C. Cannon	" "	1.00
Total		$9.00

In addition to the above, which shows well how subscriptions should be obtained, the following hav been received since the last report:

By Professor Thomas Davidson's lecture before the Literary Association of Mr. Chadwick's church, Brooklyn, N. Y.	$14.55
Professor Davidson's further donation	2.00
C. McMenemy, Blair, Neb	1.00
E. E. Cross, Decatur, Ill	2.00
Andrew H. H. Dawson, New York city	1.00
C. H. Butterfield, North Andover, Mass	1.00
Frederic Braden, Boston, Mass	1.00
V Milani, Pittsburgh. Pa. (per Mr. Mendum)	1.00
	32.55
Heretofore acknowledged, including $5 by Miss M. Goddard	451.88
Total	$484.43

This leaves $515.57 still due on the promis of $1,000 from America for this statue. Please to send it forward.

The news from Rome, as found in the newspapers sent to me, is encouraging, The committee, relying upon the promis of $1,000 from America, hav applied to the municipality of the city for a site upon which to erect the statue. They hav no doubt but that this request will be granted. A celebration of the martyrdom of Bruno (February 17, 1600) was arranged for by the committee, and of it we shall doubtless hear good report in due time. Let us show that America will do her part in this great act of historical justice.

T. B. WAKEMAN,
93 Nassau st., New York city.

New York, Feb. 20, E.M. 286.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, WILLIAM ALGIE,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged			$1,971.02
L. C. Geertson			5.00
Louis Woolfe			1.00
E. Peterson			2.00
Wesley Milliken			2.00
Martin Miller			1.00
Kate P. Wolfard			1.00
D. Wolfard			1.00
V. Wolfard			1.00
W. H. Pearce			10.00
B. W. Brockway			2.00
M. C. Cottinger			1.00
Harry S. Beesley			2.50
Miss Rast	per Mrs. Helen Celler	.....	1.00
Mr. Broecker		.....	1.00
Mr. Ramstetter		.....	1.00
Mr. Neef		.....	1.00
Mrs. Wagner		.....	1.00
Total			$2,005.53

PLEDGES PAID.—M. P. Thurston, $5; Judge G. W. Lewis, $25.

News and Notes.

S. P. PUTNAM'S WESTERN TOUR.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at Pittsburgh, March 14th; at Chicago, March 21st; and Omaha, March 28th; and from thence proceed westward by the Union Pacific railroad to Ogden and Salt Lake City. He will remain several weeks in Utah, and it is expected that meetings will be held in every county in the territory, and the Liberal issues of the day will be thoroughly discussed. Mr. Putnam will, if possible, extend his route to California, and it is desirable that the Liberals of the Pacific states communicate with him at once in order to make arrangements for lectures in their vicinity.

It is of great importance that Liberals make use of this lecture trip of the secretary of the Union to awake interest in their own communities and to aid the general movement. The secretary will giv every week "News and Notes" of his experience, and by this means the strength of the movement will be better understood; there will be a more cordial acquaintanceship among the Freethinkers of the country; the organizations, both national and local, will gain more power, harmony of purpose will prevail, and thus our ideas will receive the increased consideration of the public. The following is the list of subjects of the lectures by the secretary, and friends can select the themes which in their judgment will be best adapted to the special wants of their own communities:

"The Demands of Humanity."
"The New Heaven and Earth."
"The American Secular Union: Its Aims and Methods."
"The Philosophy of Freethought."
"The Secular Sunday a Day of Rest."
"The Glory of Infidelity."
"Universal Mental Liberty: What it Is and How to Achieve It."
"Individualism: Its Necessity and Safety."
"The Foundation of Morality."

In making arrangements for lectures, it is best, if possible, to arrange for two or three evenings in succession. In this way more interest will be excited, and there can be a better presentation of those ideas which lie at the basis of our movement. Not only must these ideas be understood fully in themselvs, but also in their many relations to human life and to the social framework.

Our work involves not only reconstruction, but construction itself. It involves profoundly revolutionary processes both of thought and action. It requires the most thorough study to grasp the full meaning of that method of truth and art to which the Freethought movement is committed. To discover truth is a great thing. To know how to discover it is of the first importance. To know how to apply it is of even greater importance. How to liv the best; how to get the most out of this world; how to unfold from science the forms of art, so that life is one with beauty—this is what must keep even the best furnished mind most constantly activ. He who has nothing new to learn has indeed a very poor prospect before him. The spirit of Liberalism impels every individual, no matter how much he has acquired, to continual progress.

The more books we hav, the more lectures, the more contributions from all quarters to our Liberal papers, the more thought and agitation there are, the better will the process of enlightenment go on. It is to behoped, therefore, that the instrumentalities of progress—the book, the platform, and the paper—will receive the generous support of those who, being free from superstitious motiv, are actuated by those which are wholly humanitarian.

The following from Utah indicates the work to be done:

FRIEND PUTNAM: We are looking forward with much hope to your expected visit to Utah, and its results. With the commotion now here, we think it a good time to advance Liberal principles, and organize the Liberal element into working order. Yours, for progress, H. W. HAIGHT.

Luke W. Gallup, of Springville, Utah, writes:

I received your letter of the 9th; was glad to hear from you, and read the resolute spirit that prompts you to act in the cause of human progress. We all need more of the desire to be up and doing, and to make things count in every way we can. A few are now in the field fighting for our rights. I expect to do all that my circumstances here will allow of, and will visit those whom I think will respond to the call. Labor and money are both needed. I hav something of the former at my disposal—of the latter not so much. It is scarce with me as well as with others. I shall be glad to meet you and hear you. I am in for our cause and its advancement all the time.

Liberal friends will thus see the earnestness of our allies in Utah, and that they are willing to do their best for the cause. It will be seen, however, that they need the coöperation of the whole body of Liberals in order that the work in the frontier fields may be most effectually sustained. So far as labor is concerned, our friends in Utah will do their full share in aid of the secretary of the Union. But they cannot furnish all the sinews of war to enable the secretary to make the best of his fighting chance. It is hoped that those who can will giv substantial aid to this enterprise, the results of which may be so fruitful in the hereafter.

A veteran Liberal has gone. Several years ago, while laboring in the West, I met this friend Lewis Grant, Sr., and admired his courageous radicalism. He was for many years a resident of Vincennes, Ind. The News of that city says:

"Hundreds of friends and admirers assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of a man of whom it can be said he died without an enemy. If ever a man lived who was honest in his views, that man was Lewis Grant, Sr. Whenever he saw a fellow-being in distress he did all in his power to relieve him. Every act in his life was filled with charity, which he dispensed with a lavish hand. Men, women, and children of every creed paid him homage, and the chief mourners, aside from his own family, were people who differed from him in politics and religion."

Hon. O. F. Baker, himself a Liberal, whose friendship we hav enjoyed in past days, delivered an eloquent and affecting oration at the grave. The city officials, members of the council, fire department, police, every employé of the O. and M. shops, where Mr. Grant had been foreman, and other citizens composed the concourse that was present. Mr. Baker said:

In the old, old way, sorrow, standing voiceless beside the cleft earth soon to enfold the loved one, listens for the faintest token, if but an echo from beyond. As the dead giv us back no whisper from the eternal dream, neither studied oration, ancient legend, nor sacred script can bestow upon us more than the faint spray of hope.

He was a man, and the spirit of such a one goeth upward. It may not be through parted clouds and broken skies, but just as he hath cooled the face of toil, lit with gladness the brow of sorrow, and sweetened the bitter cup of adversity, all that remains of him ascends to the hights of man's conception of good. His intellect was strong, clear, and brave. The universe of thought contained no caverns he dared not explore, it reared no peaks he was not brave enough to desire to scale. In the pursuit of truth he was not awed by the burning bush, or ceased to investigate when upon holy ground.

Without subscribing to a belief in the existence of an offended deity to be appeased by works of charity, he gave abundantly to the needy, and administered comforts to the unfortunate. Without fear of the frowns of a supreme being he shunned all intemperance and hardness of heart, and lived unstained by vice. Without proof, he could not believe, but without such belief he was honest, pure, diligent, faithful, loving, and helpful.

Let me speak of the dead husband and the loving wife as but one, for surely these twain were but one flesh. Loving and trusting and sustaining, like a sublime monody, the music of their lives ran on and on to this open grave—this dark spot upon the green sward. Surely in the philosophy of our dead brother the universe deserved no grander destiny than to produce such a love.

Over the dark line at our feet our friend has preceded us, but he has left us lessons of the highest import for our good. In obedience to an oft-expressed wish I pronounce his last good words of peace, love, and knowledge to you all who stand sorrowing here. To the chambers of memory, the palace of echoes, where the perfume of good deeds never fades, I commit his past, and into thy bosom, O provident earth, I now commit his dust.

Thus pass the brave and true to their eternal rest. We know not and we fear not. There are the tears of grief, but not the look of terror. If hope shines not, neither does despair curse, and the garden of memory hath its deathless flowers. On account of other engagements I was obliged to defer my lecture at Albany on Sunday, the 21st. I shall lecture at Newark, Feb. 28th, and Albany, March 7th, and then for the "setting sun," where we hope to rejoice in the rising beams of liberty. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THERE was a parlor meeting of the members and patrons of the Institute of Heredity in and about New York at Dr. Foote's residence, 120 Lexington avenue, corner East Twenty-eighth street, on Thursday evening, February 25th. Rev. Jesse H. Jones, of Massachusetts, secretary of the Institute of Heredity, gave the opening address upon "Marriage and Parentage," in continuation of the consideration of the subject presented at the January meeting.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. H. S. LAKE and husband, Prof. W. F. Peck, who hav been speaking for the Spiritual Society of Cincinnati during the month of February, hav been reëngaged for March.

ON Sunday evening, February 14th, J. E. Remsburg lectured in the Opera House at Geneseo, Ill., to an audience of seven hundred. It was estimated that the aggregate attendance of the thirteen churches of the town on the same evening was less than three hundred.

W. F. JAMIESON has received a lecture call to Wentworth, Dakota, which will be his third visit there. The Dakota Liberals are requested to address him at Wentworth, as he will deliver lectures in the territory until the first of April. Mr. Jamieson should be addressed at Lake City, Minn. Elder Hill is afraid to meet Jamieson in debate. Mr. Jamieson has challenged all the clergy of that region to meet him. He will soon be on his way northward, at present is lecturing at Elmo, Mo., Silver City, Iowa, and Omaha, Neb. The Omaha Liberals want to hire him for a year.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has been having a good time of it in Pittsburgh, Chicago, and surrounding districts. He has been speaking nearly every night, and his audiences hav been large and enthusiastic. The following are his engagements previous to his leaving in May for a trip to England: March 2d and 3d, Salem, Ohio; 4th and 5th, Scio, Ohio; Sunday, 7th, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Sunday, 14th, to 21st, Philadelphia and districts; March 28th and every Sunday in April, Toronto, Ont. Friends in Canada who hav not already arranged with Mr. Watts for week night lectures during April should at once communicate with him at 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

IT is not often the citizens of Newton hav the privilege of listening to so instructiv, learned, and logical a dissertation as was given them last night at Music Hall by Mr. Remsburg. His subject was the "Sabbath." He demonstrated by indubitable evidence that Christ and his apostles did not observe the Jewish Sabbath as a sacred day; that they did not enjoin its observance upon others, or institute any other sacred day in its place; and that for a long period afterwards the early Christians observed no uniform sacred day. It was shown that the Emperor Constantine, whose hands reeked with the blood of his own relativs, including his wife and son, established the Christian Sabbath by edict, his reason for selecting the first day of the week being because he could enforce its observance better than any other day, since many of his semi-barbarous subjects already worshiped the sun on that day. From this comes the Christian Sunday. Coming from such a source, of course it is a holy day! Mr. Remsburg closed by dealing some telling blows against our statutory enactments, which make it a criminal offense for others than the clergy to labor on this day.—Newton Daily Republican.

S. R. WETHERILL, secretary of the Jobstown, N. J., Secular Union, writes: "On Sunday, the 14th inst., the Jobstown Secular Union had two lectures delivered by Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, which were well attended. In the afternoon Mrs. F. C. Reynolds delivered her able lecture, entitled: 'Reasons for the Religion of Humanity,' which was pronounced by our best-read members to be a splendid lecture and very original. There has not been any outside criticism, all agreeing that she was a good talker, but did not like her doctrin. All the orthodox folks that were there think that she told the truth, but still they could not agree with her. How could they and still be faithful? I think all Secular Unions would do well to hav Mrs. Reynolds to deliver lectures for them, judging by the impression she left here. In the evening the lion from the tribe of Judah, C. B. Reynolds, gave us his lecture, entitled, 'Salvation,' and when he finished all present felt as if they could be saved without the blood of Jesus, as it is disputed that he shed any, or if he did it was pretty well watered. After his lecture a collection was taken to establish the Jobstown Secular Union Library, at which twenty-five dollars was raised, and we propose to keep the ball a rolling. We only wish we could hav Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds to talk for us every Sunday."

MRS. F. C. REYNOLDS spoke on Friday evening, Feb. 19th, at Industrial Hall, Philadelphia. Prof. Wm. Seymour, Mr. Harker, and others, who, despite all opposition and discouragements, made especial efforts, determined to afford the friends an opportunity to hear Mrs. Reynolds, and their endeavors were crowned with grand success. The hall was filled. This was only the second time of Mrs. Reynolds's appearance as a public speaker. She delighted her audience, winning words of eulogy and praise, and $23 financial testimony of appreciation. From Philadelphia, in company with Mr. Reynolds, she went to Boonton, N. J., where Mr. Reynolds was engaged to speak on the evening of Saturday, Feb. 20th, also on Sunday afternoon following, Mrs. Reynolds Sunday evening. Mrs. Reynolds's lecture was well attended, and the people were not only anxious to hear but also to see what a woman looked like who dared speak in public against religion. And some a shade of sadness wore because she said nothing to shock the most delicate. These are the first Liberal lectures delivered in Boonton. Mr. Reynolds writes: "We find earnest, whole-souled Liberals here, who love the cause, and who show their faith by their works. The whole family of A. M. Booth, whose hospitality we are enjoying, is of this kind, a family of ability and culture. At their home Tuesday evening, the friends of the cause meet for the organization of a Boonton Secular Union, for which purpose we stay over until the following Wednesday, when we cross the mountains by private conveyance, and Mrs. Reynolds and myself speak to the people of Bloomingdale. Mr. George Cramer, from that place, walked across the mountains, a distance of nine miles, to be present at our lectures, and, at his solicitation, we speak there." Applications for lectures should be addressed care of THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

Communications.

Pessimism by an Optimist.

The one great overwhelming tragedy of universal existence in all space and during all time, towering far above all minor catastrophes as the Sierras soar in magnitude far above the Indian huts planted at their base, consists in the lamentable fact of the abstract existence of individual life, sensation, and consciousness in general. When the physical conditions of a planet first are favorable to the evolution of animal life, then the age of serene peace is supplemented by an age consisting in large proportion of the pangs of individual struggle, misery, and woe, culminating often in the anguish and affliction only experienced by the highest type of men and women.

The great imaginary boon, now and ever sought and hoped for by existing humanity, of life, long life—which morbid desire has even resulted in the unreasonable hope and almost universal faith in an endless, miraculous kind of an existence—is in fact a condition and an experience most lamentable and, to say the least, very undesirable, and which to the philosopher is only endurable on account of his absolute knowledge that death, to him, ends all. Fortunately puny man's most unreasonable longings, prompted by his ignorance and egotism, can never be realized. Unconscious but arbitrary laws of nature usher him into existence precisely as the lower order of animals are ushered into existence—as the rose is created in its fragrant beauty, the oak in its giant strength, or the ripple on the water—without motiv or volition, without choice or consultation concerning when, where, how, whence, or whither; permit him to stay a very short time comparativly, often force him—also sadly against his wishes—to witness the evidences of his decay in his wrinkled brow, gray hairs, and other deformities; gently beckon him to make room for his offspring, then kindly usher him back into that eternal and blessed condition of unconsciousness wherein he was previous to his début among the living upon this or other planets.

Between the vast periods of beginningless time preceding man's existence and the equally endless period of time sure to follow his existence, man exists but for a moment. As no reasonable claim has ever been made by the millions of votaries who now so fondly cling to a hope in an eternal life that they hav existed during the eternity preceding their birth as the identical individuals they now represent, so they should not claim a purely miraculous existence—entirely beyond scientific research and human understanding—during all the eternity to come, after the body which gave them origin and individuality has been swept away and is no more. And as no claim has ever been made that the eternal condition of non-existence preceding the origin of man is a calamity or an evil to the man who is yet to be—who as yet does not exist—so no reasonable claim can be advanced insisting that non-existence after death or absolute annihilation of the individual can possibly be a tragedy or a calamity to him who at the very moment he dies entirely ceases to exist, and consequently then can no more realize good or evil conditions than those who will liv a thousand years hence can realize them now.

Conditions previous to and after man's existence are identical. At the moment of death to him the universe is virtually extinguished. All relationships cease, all sources of joy and misery end. Nothing can be good or evil to him who has returned to unconscious dust.

Then why weep for the dead? As well weep for the non-existence of the unborn as mourn over the non-existence of the dead. Weep for the treasure you hav lost, mourn over your own affliction, pity your own loneliness, but envy the dear one whose struggle is over, and rejoice that your darling has entered conditions of eternal peace!

Death is sleep. Do you dread sleep? Supposing you should go to sleep to-night and, perchance, never awaken, could any condition possibly be a calamity to you of which you could never be conscious?

No, I never pity the dead. On the contrary, a silent feeling of envy comes over me in their presence. But when I behold the infant in its cradle I involuntarily pity its sad fate and think of Schiller's ominous verse:

> Ihm ruhen noch im Zeitenschoose
> Die schwartzen und die heiteren Loose.

Indeed, I would not liv always. The desire is madness, the demand absurd. Do you know, my friend, what eternal existence implies? It means life, unconditional life, during all the ages of endless time to come, and no recourse. "Liv, liv, liv for ever!" is the terrible decree. "Never die!" There will be no choice, no alternativ. If immortality is a fact, death is impossible. If nature decrees no death, your wishes or longings cannot expunge this law or you cannot violate this order of nature. You cannot die if you want to. No, not even take your own life by violence, for remember you are immortal. An immutable fate will say to you: "Thou shalt liv forever—must liv forever and ever. Thou canst not die though thou may desire it. Liv, liv, liv! No rest, no death for thee!" Yes, my friend, no matter what conditions may surround you during the cycles of ages to come, no matter how tired you may be of existence, if immortality is true, you are doomed to liv—damned to liv, and cannot die!

Poor wretch! Your greed has made you mad, and you would scorn a fate of eternal peace, which is an infinit blessing in comparison to the impossible and fictitious happiness you seek in eternity.

These views will be pronounced decidedly pessimistic, yet I claim to be an optimist in every sense of the word. I concede to no one greater appreciation of life and the beauties of the world we liv in, greater proportion of happiness, and a more benign degree of contentment than I enjoy myself. I love the beauties of nature and the grand achievements of art, poetry, and continually study to utilize every minute, hour, and day of my life conduciv to my happiness. And I enjoy my "religion." If I did not, and for a moment could entertain the idea that others found a greater degree of contentment in theirs, I should never again raise my voice or pen in proclaiming my views to the world. But I think the degree of happiness I find in this true gospel of nature and science is so infinitly more comforting than all beliefs in myths and miracles that I seek happiness in proclaiming it "from the house-tops" upon every occasion. I believe the happiness the Christian as well the Spiritualist derives from his belief is fictitious and deceiving. I hav been there, and judge from experience. If I believed such strange and mystic doctrins now, I should, indeed, feel a terrible restraint from taking the fatal leap!

I believe the average lot of man not worth living, and once dead I would prefer not again to take my chances in the battle. As I said before, I consider life a calamity, but once being placed in the ranks of warriors, I consider it a duty we owe to our family, to our country, and to humanity, to fight the battle to the best of our ability, and thus contribute our mite toward the happiness of the race.

And, lastly, I insist upon it that any condition of heavenly or spiritual continual bliss is absolutely unthinkable, especially when deprived of the many pleasures incident to the gratification of the physical man. And of these—our bodies being denied us—we, of course, will be deprived. No happy relationship of husband and wife, parent and child, will be possible. No lovely children growing up to cheer us on our lengthy journey. We will be profoundly impressed with the recollection of all our earthly joys, but alas! of necessity, shall be deprived of all of them in the sweet by and by. What our occupation will be to make life endurable and a satisfactory source of happiness during countless millions of years when not struggling for the necessities of life, for wife, children, and the comforts of home, I, for, one, could never learn. Nude spirits sweeping through the tempests and storms of our mundane sphere to act as guarding angels perhaps to those who hav forgotten them, or are now clasping substitute wives or husbands in their arms, or hovering around loved ones they cannot reach except through strange mediums and strange conditions, are not greatly to be envied; and otherwise astronomy or Spiritualism has so far sadly failed to reveal to us the mythical spirit-land. In fact, the conflicting reports from these sources concerning vital points upon which there could not possibly be any dispute, if based upon fact, largely tends to establish the whole thing as a sad delusion founded upon hopes and desires, and a remnant of old Bible theology.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Rochelle, Ill., Feb. 1, 1886.

Materialism.

The Materialistic conceptions of recent thinkers are radically different from those usually attributed to them by orthodox and Spiritualistic opponents. The Materialistic generalities of the present are not cold, icy, and barren, as so many suppose, but a warm vital principle pervades the Materialism of our times. The universe is all there is, and there is nothing outside it. It is composed of space and the matter that occupies it. Matter has certain inherent properties that shape it into visible and invisible forms. Among the properties of matter are form, density, and inertia. Matter is organized by a something called force, and we know of its existence only in its association with matter. They are mutually coexistent, coequal, and interdependent, hence we conclude that force is also but a property of matter. Matter must exist in some form, and those forms are assumed through the action of its inherent properties. So far as we know, all matter is composed of four primary constituent elements, and the combination and association of those elements produce all the forms in nature. A "constant course of procedure" in those formations we designate by the term "law." Law does not create, nor is it a cause, but it is an effect. Matter is not inert and lifeless, but it possesses the power of self-organization when the conditions of its environment are propitious. Matter, by its attraction and gravity, assumes certain forms, and if the influence exerted by other organized bodies of matter is sufficient, these forms organize into life. As surrounding conditions modify, life changes. It must adapt itself to environment, which is but the influence of external organized bodies of matter. As environment modifies, only the modified survives, while the unchanged must become obsolete. Matter is indestructible and non-creatable—has always existed in some form and always will exist. Its forms are constantly changing, and the same particles of matter are incorporated into different organisms. All organisms were the result of modifications of the primal organization and hav attained their differentiation by the survival of those most nearly adapted to environment. Force, being a property of matter, is also indestructible. It is easily transposed into different manifestations, but it is never destroyed.

All the operations of nature are characterized by a readjustment and equalization. Nothing is lost but individual organization. Nature's operations are one continuous change of individualities into universalities, and vice versa. Matter livs, but specific organization is lost, and the motion of molecules that sustain organization is dissipated and reasserts itself in other forms.

Mind is potential energy in the brain, and cannot be conceived except in association with matter. Mind is force, and, again, force is a property of matter and cannot exist apart from it.

Life is nothing but organized and animated matter, which is but another name for force, which is but a property of matter; hence we conclude that life is force and a property of matter. Life then must exist as long as matter, but, being force, it differentiates as force.

Matter thus goes on with destruction and reproduction, and always with the certainty of equalization. This I conceive to be the opinion of modern Materialism. It will thus be seen that matter is not viewed as lifeless and inert, but that it "possesses the promis and potency of every form and quality of life"—that it is the universal mother that brings all things forth as the products of her own womb. In such Materialism I conceive nothing degrading or demoralizing. But in my humble judgment such conceptions would harmonize ideas that are now in antagonism, and be altogether the most rational conception of all things in aggregate and detail.

G. F. RINEHART.

Christianity and Savagery.

What has the world gained by Christianity and civilization? Immensely in chicanery of every sort. Immensely in hypocrisy in every shape. Immensely in crime of every variety. Immensely in everything that is off color morally.

Crimes that never were heard of or dreamed of in paganism and savagery flaunt themselvs in the face and eyes of Christianity. They thrive and grow apace and multiply malgre Christian civilization.

Christianized beings practice criminality knowingly, and with malice aforethought; practice it as they practice law and medicin, for a living, and because naturally inclined in that direction. Yet are they Christianized and civilized.

The crimes of savagery are few comparativly. In its lexicon of morals crime has scarce a foothold, compared with its solid standing in that of civilized Christianity.

Christianity can "see" the crimes of savagery and "go better" to an unlimited extent. With Christianity crime is a classic in many of its phases; in a large measure a "fine art." Christianity commits murder in the most unique, savagery in the simplest and most primitiv way.

The Christian kills his foe premeditatedly and escapes justice on the plea of emotional insanity, knowing, however, that he is a murderer. The savage kills his foe in rage, or kills from impulse, settling with the family of the defunct by giving up a few heads of cattle, according to said defunct's valuation in the community. This squares matters, and he does not for a moment think he is a murderer. Therein lies the difference between the Christian and the savage.

Christian civilization has produced kings like Bomba, popes like Borgia, presidents like Hayes, generals like Butler, statesmen like Tabor, financiers like Ward, cormorants like Gould, toadies like Sir Cyrus, bankers like Fish, divines like Nero, clowns like Talmage, moral reformers like Comstock, brutes like Sullivan, liars like Sharp, come-by-chances like Squire, and so on ad finem. Savagery never produced anything of the sort. From the Silurian ages down to the present day it has not evolved a specimen that would approach within a thousand miles of any of the above-named lights of Christianity. How to be envied is savagery!

Christianity imprisons the poor debtor even for life. Christianity imprisons the unfortunate witness of a crime, and for a money consideration—it is ever money, money, money with Christianity—allows liberty to the criminal. Savagery does not thus strangely move its wonders to perform.

Savagery has produced the king of Dahomey, an honest man as far as heard about, but from custom given to phlebotomy. But there Christianity has let out more blood than ever did savagery—and for Christianity's sake?

It is said that on a certain day of every year Dahomey's monarch slaughters—by proxy, of course—seven hundred young virgins of the realm, without a pang or qualm of conscience.

But this is not from love of butchery and blood, albeit he takes the blood for cement to be used in the building of a sacred temple and for blood-puddings for his own immediate family and friends, but from custom sanctioned by a long line of predecessors, and to which a superstition is attached, as to many Christian observances; a religious observance, in fact, and never for a moment thought by him to be a crime, and consequently not a crime in his own eyes or the eyes of his people.

The sovereign aforesaid might, in a piqué, or for a purpose, cut a Christian throat with the keen edge of a scimeter, but never, I am convinced, would he cut a Dahomian throat with the feather edge of a financial blade, as did Ward the throats of those of his own persuasion.

Savagery in certain districts has been given to anthropophagy. But this, to the savage mind, is not criminal or horrible. He was brought up to the eating of "long pig," and, liking it, ate of it whenever it was to be had, a fat missionary being to him as a canvas-back to a Christian, the duck par excellence. He knows nothing of crime in the matter, and consequently is not criminal.

Christianity sends missionaries to the antipodes to proselytize with the Bible and civilize with New England rum. If not with the Bible, it succeeds with the rum, civilizing the savage to drunkenness.

Savagery does nothing of the sort. It has no desire to proselytize, and, not seeking for Christianity and civilization, stays at home and minds its own business, never becoming an intermeddler in the affairs of others. Hurrah for savagery!

Christianity evolves the prize-fight, the dog-fight, etc., etc. It fosters the fox-hunt for the delectation of its fashionables, who run a trapped fox over hedges and ditches until it drops, society belles not infrequently being "in at the death."

It sanctions deer hunts (?) in royal forests, where the animals are driven up to be slaughtered by royal imbecils seated at ease and supplied with weapons by sycophants dancing attendance.

These and many more are styled "sports" by civilized Christianity.

Savagery knows nothing of these things, and is to be congratulated.

Christianity, as it progresses, becomes more and more the master of finesse. To-day it is finessing almost wholly in the direction of pelf. Pelf is the main dish of its menu, with crimes of various sorts, and "sports," such as we hav mentioned, let in as side dishes, and for illusion's sake.

With Christianity, such things are possible and frequent as the Credit Mobilier and Pan Electric scandals. Are they with savagery? No. Happy savagery!

The "untutored savage!" We often read about him, and the sentimental weep that he is untutored. Weep not. Let him remain as he is. Tutor him up to the point and practices of Christianity, and ten to one he becomes a hypocrit and villain.

Better he should remain an "untutored savage" than, becoming tutored, evolve to a Jay Gould, Jake Sharp, or anything of the kind—much better.

What has Christianity done for the world? Ask of the legions everywhere masquerading in the stolen garb of rectitude, who serve the god of greed devoutly, and the God of their imaginations professedly, that their own base ends may be accomplished.

SI SLOKUM.

"Nuts for Skeptics to Crack."

